Mr. Dalyell: It has everything to do with it. There were discrepancies between the Secretary of State and the Solicitor-General, at column 852, about the role of the Lord Advocate and possible contacts with the Secretary of State for Scotland.

What I was told in Scotland on Tuesday 3 February, confirming information that had come to me earlier from other sources, was that the Crown Office, alarmed by the enormity of what it was being asked to do in authorising a police descent on Queen Margaret drive, made a direct approach to Downing street.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I repeat that the hon. Gentleman must relate his remarks to the Bill.

Mr. Dalyell: They relate to article 10 of the convention.

The Lord Advocate and the Crown Office were told what was expected of them: bluntly, to allow special branch to take anything and everything from BBC Scotland. Lord Cameron of Lochbroom, a good lawyer known for his good works in relation to the heritage of Edinburgh and other worthwhile causes, and brought into the Government for his personal virtues and legal reputation, was confronted with an appalling dilemma—whether to defy his Prime Minister's wishes——

Mr. Forth: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A moment ago, the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) referred, in defending the relevance of his comments, to article 10 of the convention. Will he explain to you and to the House what relevance that article has to the personal accusations that he is making and the detailed discussion of matters that do not remotely relate to the Bill?

Mr. Dalyell: It concerns freedom of expression.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I remind the hon. Gentleman and the House that many hon. Members wish to speak. Those who are fortunate to be called must relate their remarks to the Bill.

On Wednesday 4 February, the Lord Advocate made a statement denying ministerial involvement. We could all rest assured, he said, that he knew what his duty was.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Will you rule whether freedom of expression means that any hon. Member may speak on any subject at any time irrespective of what we are debating?

Mr. Dalyell: We need this Human Rights Bill so that we are protected from Sir Robert Armstrong's definition of the truth. On this, the Lord Advocate may be on terra firma. One of my major complaints is that Ministers were bypassed. This is where the Bill comes in. "Guidance" came from Mr. Bernard Sheldon and Downing street. For the Prime Minister to claim that massive entry to BBC Glasgow was purely a police matter is equivalent to a claim——

Mr. Holt: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for an hon. Member to read his speech? I refer to chapter 19, page 417, of "Erskine May". Is not the hon. Gentleman merely reading what he has written down rather than making a speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. Members are allowed to refer to copious notes, but I remind the hon. Member for Linlithgow to take note of what I said. I have not heard him refer to the Bill for some time.

Mr. Dalyell: This matter concerns freedom of expression. It is equivalent to a claim by Henry II that the murder of Saint Thomas a Becket on his own altar at Canterbury was "purely a matter for the Four Knights."

Just as the source of the decision to do away with Becket was royal tantrum, so the source of the rummaging of the BBC is prime ministerial tantrum. This Bill would defend us from prime ministerial tantrum. "Who will rid me of Duncan Campbell and all his programmes?" Surrounded as she is by thugs of her choice in Downing street, it is scarcely surprising that the wretched Lord Advocate and his officials were left in no doubt about what, to their distaste, they were told was their duty. Prime ministerial vengeance is no basis for a prosecution policy.

Of course, Conservative Members can feign pain. They may genuinely have no inkling of contact between Downing street and the Crown Office. But they can hardly be surprised. This is a rerun of the Solicitor-General's letter on Westland a year ago. I am glad that the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan), to whom I am deeply sympathetic, is in his place. In January 1986 the Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General threatened resignation on a matter of principle and were dissuaded only when it was put to them that such an action by Law Officers—who are far more important than the Secretaries of State for Defence and for Trade and Industry in this context—might topple the Government. On that occasion, they were abused and bypassed by their Prime Minister. They were given not the slightest indication of the use to which Mr. Bernard Ingham, via Miss Collette Bowe, who has locked away her version of events in a bank vault—a strange thing to do if they coincide with the Government's version of events — would put the Solicitor-General's letter. Again the Law Officers were bypassed by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman must explain to me and to the House how he relates his remarks to the Bill that we are discussing.

Mr. Dalyell: If this Bill had been passed, the whole question of the BBC in Glasgow and what happened previously, given the Prime Minister's style of operation, would have been different.

Was the raid by the police postponed from Friday 30 January because Special Branch knew that the Secretary of State for Scotland was due to go to Queen Margaret drive for a radio interview?

The whole BBC case is about politics and not about national security, and that is where the Bill comes into it. The raid was directed from London and by Superintendent Hilton Cole. One might ask what Mr. Ingham had to do with legal decisions in Scotland. A justified answer would be: about as much as the Prime Minister's press officer had to do with the private letter from the Solicitor-General with regard to Westland and the then Defence Secretary within minutes of it being received in Downing street. We know that it was before 6 January 1986 that the Prime Minister instigated the Solicitor-General's letter and left everything thereafer to her henchman, Bernard Ingham. I hope that this is an anti-Ingham Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the hon. Gentleman to consider whether he is being fair to the House. He has an Adjournment debate today relating to the Official Secrets Act. I hope that he will bear that in mind.

Mr. Nicholas Baker (Dorset, North): Further to your remarks, Mr. Deputy Speaker, we are hearing a discussion about how the Government take their decisions. That has nothing to do with the right to free expression under the Bill or with the Second Reading of the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have appealed to the sense of fairness of the hon. Member for Linlithgow. He almost always responds to the Chair on that ground and I ask him again to remember that he has an Adjournment debate today.

Mr. Dalyell: We are dealing with protection from the Prime Minister, the most powerful "man" in British politics. When pressed, she blamed misunderstandings between civil servants. When pressed by the Attorney-General with the threat of resignation, she reluctantly set up an inquiry into that which she knew full well she herself had instigated: wasting police time, as the Liberal Leader put it. It was wasting time.

In 24 years as an MP, I have seen many letters of resignation — some curt, some acrimonious, others sad and affectionate, as between old political friends. Never has there been anything like the negotiated correspondence between this Prime Minister and her erstwhile Trade and Industry Secretary. I quote from the Daily Telegraph:

> "You have been a steadfast exponent of Government policy and I have admired the dedication and loyalty with which you have carried out your duties. I hope that it will not be long before your return to high office to continue your Ministerial career."

How could she say that, if the whole story was of the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks having deceived his senior Civil Servants, his Cabinet colleagues and his Prime Minister for 14 whole days.

How could the Prime Minister say that if the whole story—

Mr. Marlow: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Gentleman maintains that he is relating his remarks to freedom of expression. It seems to us on the Government side that what he is seeking is freedom of innuendo. Is there any way in which you can protect the House from that? Can I also ask whether you would allow any other hon. Member to abuse the rules of procedure in the same way as the hon. Gentleman?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the impression that the hon. Gentleman is coming to the end of his speech.

Mr. Dalyell: The Bill is about freedom from scapegoat politics. I have had no previous discussion with the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks, but, speaking bluntly, I think he has been treated extremely badly. If the story about having deceived his civil servants and his Cabinet colleagues and his Prime Minister for 14 days is true, the Prime Minister could hardly have written him such a letter. We are dealing with the breakdown of trust in the public life of Britain. Many times bitten, twice shy of believing this Prime Minister. After the Ponting trial and what emerged there and after the untruths——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have already explained on many occasions to the hon. Gentleman that he must relate his remarks to the Bill. I can see no relevance to the Bill in what he is saying. I ask the hon. Gentleman yet again to respect the ruling that I have given. If he does not I shall have to ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. Dalyell: The protection of truth and the protection of the position of the Law Officers will be greatly helped by this Bill. Over Peter Wright's prosecution, as over Westland, the Prime Minister has treated her Law Officers, the holders of great offices of state, as the most inconsequential of junior ministers. She bypassed them on matters of central concern and relied instead on shadowy and sinister figures like Mr. Bernard Sheldon. In the case to which my hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) spoke, the Scottish Law Officers were treated no better. The Crown Office in Edinburgh is no ivory tower. The civil servants there are of a high quality and are politically sensitive. The Solicitor-General is a parliamentary colleague of whom I and many of my hon. Friends think well in spite of our political differences. The Lord Advocate is a man of many qualities. Just as she treated the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks over Westland, the right hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Pym) over the Falklands, the right hon. Member for Guildford (Mr. Howell) over the miners in 1981, she has left her Law Officers carrying the can. This is a Teflon Prime Minister, a Prime Minister who above all makes sure that nothing will stick to her. The BBC raises the Prime Minister's Teflon characteristics.

The Bill will be a great help. The Prime Minister operates through the instigation of improper acts. She makes sure that they are done through Mr. Ingham and others. To suggest that she had no inkling of the police visit to the BBC in Glasgow is make-believe. One needs a long spoon when dealing with Downing street. The Crown Office should realise the need for a long spoon. The Prime Minister and her office behaved with extreme economy towards the truth. They take refuge in philologically clever language. What is meant by "to consult" and "to inform"? The issue is about our protection from the highest officers of government and their misbehaviour. In these cases we see a bypass operation of Parliament, a parliamentary bypass operation. Together with many hon. Members I passionately want to see responsibility and decisions come back to this House. Decisions should not be taken by unelected people operating under Prime Ministerial insinuation and over whom we have no control. That is why the Bill should have a Second Reading.

Mr. Fred Silvester (Manchester, Withington): The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) is a sufficiently experienced Member of the House to know that he has stayed just within the bounds of order. He knows that he has seriously abused the way in which this debate was set up. He has sought to put on the record things which no doubt will get a good press. However, they have little to do with this Bill.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) deserves congratulations on getting this matter to the Floor of the House with sufficient time for a good debate and a vote. It would be nice for him if, in his last year in the House, he got his Bill through. However, I hope that he does not. I am sure that it will get a Second Reading, given the extensive lobbying and advertising that has gone on. If he does not get 200 votes to four on the final vote, he should be disappointed.

The European convention seems to be the basis on which a number of hon. Members have argued in favour of the Bill. The Bill incorporates the European convention as the Bill of Rights that would apply in the United Kingdom. The justification for that is slim. The convention has never been debated in the House or voted on. In 1950, it was debated on a take-note motion before it was completed, and no vote was taken. The House then went on to discuss the meat content of sausages. Since then, the matter has not come before the House at all.

The Royal prerogative and the Ponsonby rules, which apply to treaties, ensure that there is no need for the matter to be raised in the House. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Rippon) said that we were the first to ratify the convention. Of course we were. In every other country, the parliament had to discuss the matter and vote on it. Here we simply do it on the nod.

We are asked to support the Bill because we are bound by a convention which Parliament has never discussed or accepted. It seems that the options which my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde presented to us were that we could accept the Bill, which would enable us not to go to Strasbourg, or to renege on the convention. There is another way, which I hope in due course a Government will have the courage to pursue. It is to cease to adhere to articles 25 and 46.

Article 25 permits individual petition to Strasbourg and article 46 makes compulsory the jurisdiction of the court. They were added by the then Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, in 1966. Before then, British Governments of all complexions felt that the convention served a useful purpose but that there was no requirement for it to be adopted internally as part of our domestic law or to give citizens a right to appeal to Strasbourg. That seems right. A wrong decision was made in 1966. That decision also has not been referred to the House. Due to the assiduity of my right hon. Friend the Member for Worthing (Mr. Higgins), it was raised on the Floor of the House during Question Time, but, since then, at two, three or five-yearly intervals, the matter has been dealt with by written answer.

This massive change in the British constitution—it is the largest since the war—has been done entirely by Executive order. I feel no moral or legal obligation to support the Bill on the grounds that it stops the journey to Strasbourg. There are other and more soundly based means of doing that.

The 1966 decision submitted Parliament to the jurisdiction of a panel of overseas judges. The Bill proposes that we should submit Parliament to a panel of English judges. That is somewhat more satisfactory, but it is not a sufficient argument. We must judge this matter entirely on the merits of the Bill and put the Strasbourg argument to one side. We have to face the fact that we have permitted the situation to develop without any debate or vote. I still cannot understand how the Commons, which huffs and puffs at the slightest prospect of constitutional change, has allowed this to go through with no voice and no vote. That has done Parliament no honour.

I hope that the Bill's sponsors will retain at least one tradition of the House—that matters of constitutional moment are taken in a Committee of the whole House and not sent upstairs.

As my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Southport (Sir I. Percival) said, the Bill will not release us from the trap. I do not believe that any of the sponsors have recommended that the articles which require us to submit to the Strasbourg court should be repealed. There will, therefore, always lie an appeal against whatever decision is made by English judges to international judges. That does not seem to be in any doubt. We have to be certain about how the appeal will operate.

Much play has been made about The Sunday Times case. That case attracted a lot of attention because of the emotional overtones because it dealt with children deformed by the Thalidomide drug. If we take away those overtones, what we were faced with was a decision of this kind. The judges, to whom my hon. and learned Friend's Bill would transfer these rights—in our case, the House of Lords—unanimously made a decision in respect of contempt of court. They did not make that decision in an attempt to put down the citizen. They had to balance two freedoms. There is the right to free expression, but there is also the right of a fair trial and not to have that trial influenced by outside events. Those are two very important principles which can be honourably argued by judges.

The House of Lords argued the Thalidomide case through and made their decision. My right hon. Friend the Member for Hexham said that if we had the Bill the judges in Strasbourg would know what the English judges felt, and therefore we would not be overruled. In the Thalidomide case they knew perfectly well what the English judges felt, but nevertheless they overruled us.

That decision in Strasbourg was eventually decided by 11 votes to nine votes. It was a very narrow vote, and it should be pointed out that two of those 11 judges in the majority were appointees of countries which did not accept the right of individual petition to the European court. We have there, not a great trial of freedom of expression, but a narrow balance of argument taken by judges of standing and legitimately argued. The case is further complicated by the fact that Lord Diplock has changed the law further since we passed the Contempt of Court Act.

The Strasbourg court overruled a unanimous decision of the court to which my hon. and learned Friend's Bill would refer; not on the grounds that it exceeded its powers, not on the grounds that it was unreasonable, not on the grounds that it was not made in good faith, not on the grounds that it was uncertain or arbitrary. But on the grounds that it was "unnecessary".

Lord McCluskey, who has been quoted several times, is right when he said:

> "The case is a telling example of how the interpretation of vaguely worded rights can lead different judges to arrive at novel and different conclusions as to the character and effect of public interest argument."

Mr. Rippon: Would my hon. Friend agree that judges often disagree, and in many cases a decision is taken by the House of Lords on a fair majority of one?

Mr. Silvester: I do not dispute that. The point at issue is whether — if my hon. and learned Friend's Bill is carried through and we have a decision, unanimous or otherwise in the House of Lords — the right of appeal will still lie to Strasbourg. This case clearly demonstrates that the right of appeal does so lie.

My hon. and learned Friend's Bill, unlike the convention, has been before the House. It has been mentioned a number of times that it has been before another place, but it has been before this House. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan), almost exactly nine years ago to the day, was proposing a Bill of Rights in these terms, which was to be introduced into Scotland. It is of minor amusement that five of the sponsors of the present Bill voted against it on that occasion. I will not make any point of that. It was presumably because it applied to Scotland only. However, the fact is that they felt it was unsatisfactory. On that occasion it was defeated by 255 votes to 215 votes.

More importantly, the House of Lords Select Committee, which considered this matter in detail, was almost equally divided on whether we should have such a Bill. I doubt, therefore, whether we shall gain any further benefit by having a Select Committee or any other committee, — which I understand is proposed in some quarters — to consider the matter. At issue are not the finer points of whether this or that right should be included but the essential principle of whether we should go down this road at all. That principle should be decided on Second Reading.

I do not want to consider at length the question of rights in general, but the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) spoke at great length on the importance of supporting rights. The trouble with such phrases is that everyone has to agree with them. They are like motherhood and apple pie — one cannot possibly go wrong. To stand up and say that one is against human rights is like saying that one is against the whole principle for which Western democracy stands. If one says that one is not for the Bill, people conclude that one is against human rights and, therefore, on the side of the devil.

Mr. Austin Mitchell rose——

Mr. Silvester: I am not accusing the hon. Gentleman of that, but it is a danger.

The hon. Member for Great Grimsby showed another danger. He said that, if he were drafting the Bill, he would have done it differently. That is interesting. He cited the example of New Zealand. Exactly the same problem was raised in the Council of Europe when the convention was first set up. Where is the limit on rights? Do they include economic and housing rights and the right to work—all those rights that are necessarily matters of argument and debate? It is not easy to determine what we mean by "rights". We may say, "We mean civil rights." But we then say, "That is a difficult concept. We mean the civil right that Maxwell Fyfe and his friends put in the convention in 1949 and 1950." But even that is not as simple as it seems.

I refer hon. Members to the Lithgow case. My right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Hexham has always taken a particular interest in that case. In the early days, it was set out as a case in which the individuals' rights of property were being subverted by the state. Various shareholders claimed that they had received inadequate compensation following nationalisation. They went to Strasbourg, and Strasbourg turned them down. For the court it became a matter of balancing economic and social conditions and economic and social rights with the civil right which was claimed by Lithgow and his friends. I understand that Sir Willaim Lithgow was quoted as saying,"It is now bye-bye to all that privatisation." He may have been right. That is not a legal or civil right matter. It is a policy matter. Even when one considers a limited civil right, one quickly moves into matters of economic and political concern.

Mr. Rippon: Does my hon. Friend agree that, whether it was right or wrong on the merits of the case, it would have been much better if a British citizen had had the right of immediate recourse to a British court so that we, too, had had the benefit of the views of a British court? Perhaps the case would have been disposed of there.

Mr. Silvester: That follows, of course, from my right hon. and learned Friend's position. But I think—this is purely my view—that the people involved in that case would have done better to pressurise Members of Parliament to raise the subject. Once the shareholders went to Strasbourg, they more or less forced the Government to defend their position at a time when many of us felt in our hearts that it would have been better to have given greater compensation.

We are continually faced with the problem of whether rights are better defended by adopting a Bill of Rights, whether in a convention or in this legislation.

I shall not go on much longer, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but I should like to make two or three points. Why are we so motivated towards this legislation? I remember that in 1976 the then Lord Chancellor produced a booklet on elective dictatorship. In my view, that phrase did us great harm, because this country is not an elective dictatorship, and will not become one while Parliament is elected. In that pamphlet, the Lord Chancellor encapsulated the fear of several of my hon. Friends. He stated that Parliament had not abused its powers but that it might. However, he could produce no evidence that things were falling down about our ears and that our freedoms were being removed.

The Lord Chancellor was fixed on the question of parliamentary sovereignty and was concerned about the way in which this House works. God knows, we all know how ineffective it is in many ways. However, he was fixed on that issue and felt that he should do something about it. I remind the House that his solution was a written constitution, of which a Bill of Rights was only a part.

It is a curious argument to say that we should adopt a radical change in our constitution on the hypothesis that evil may come, but without any evidence that it has. The elective dictatorship could only come about if all the existing institutions that preserve our freedoms suddenly collapsed about us. However, I see no evidence of that. Where is the evidence that the press is to be silenced, that business is to be supine, that Parliament is to become subservient, or that the electorate will be permanently fooled? Why are we suddenly plunged into the position of feeling that in panic we must change our constitution because of an evil that is not yet with us?

I refer back to the case that I raised with my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde, because I wish to consider whether we are exaggerating, when we say that we are faced with a situation in which we are giving judges the power to overrule Parliament. With respect to my hon. and learned Friend, he sidestepped the issue.

In advertising, we use the term "weasel". That refers to something that appears on the face of it to be absolutely 100 per cent. accurate, of which one knows the meaning and which one can justify. However, we all know that its intent and effect are quite different. In this case, the "weasel" is the belief that what Parliament does, it can undo. Therefore, the sovereignty of Parliament remains inviolate, but we know that that is not how constitutions operate. My hon. and learned Friend who introduced the Bill and those hon. Members who support it do so precisely because they believe and intend that the Bill of Rights should because that is the whole purpose of the natural law on which it is based, to be able to override the——

Sir Edward Gardner: I have listened with great respect to my hon. Friend, but he must not mislead himself or the House about the aim of my Bill. I have already said, but shall repeat again now for the third or fourth time, that it seeks to incorporate into British law, the convention on human rights. That is its simple aim and purpose.

Mr. Silvester: Of course, I accept that. However, I am not misleading myself and am certainly not trying to mislead the House. This simple Bill, if that is how my hon. and learned Friend defines it, is nevertheless a Bill that imposes upon the House, as the convention has already imposed on the House, a judicial control over what the House can do.

Sir Edward Gardner indicated dissent.

Mr. Silvester: My hon. and learned Friend shakes his head. Perhaps I was overlong in my intervention on the Tyrer case, but my hon. and learned Friend did not answer it. That was a clear case in which Parliament took one view, the court took another, and the court's view prevailed. There is no doubt about that. If in time we have a Bill of Rights, precedents, habits and constitutional practices will inevitably develop which will ensure that this House is eventually regarded as subsidiary.

The case is further complicated. The House will remember vividly how it was put in an embarrassing and imposssible position on the question of corporal punishment in schools. First, we had the pantomime of having children who could and could not be caned in the same class and then—I make no complaint about this—some of my hon. Friends decided that they had to vote for the change in corporal punishment, not on the merits of the case, but to bring us in line with the European court's ruling. There is no doubt that that is the object of the exercise. It may take time before it is fulfilled, but that is the end of this process.

Finally, judges and those who speak in favour of this measure should consider what is said about the politicisation—a horrid word—of judges. The facts are there for all to see. The experience of the United States is often cited in this regard. On every occasion when the President has had power to intervene he has used that power to change the political complexion of the court. He has done so, not because he is a wicked man, but because he must. It is not possible to allow the Supreme Court not to approve the New Deal or to continue to preside over racial inequalities, as it has done for decades. Therefore, the politicians change the complexion of the court.

Those who argue in favour of the Bill had better beware that in future Governments will not only be tempted to inspect the political and judicial claim of candidates for office but will have a duty to do so.

Mr. Andrew F Bennett (Denton and Reddish): I, too, congratulate the hon. and learned Member for Fylde (Sir E Gardner) on choosing this Bill. He has done a great service to the country and the House in achieving an effective public debate on the issue. However, I would prefer it if, when the House has finished debating the measure—I hope that that will be in Committee—we do not pass it into legislation at this stage, because we have not fully explored the many problems that a Bill of Rights raises.

I have three major objections. The Bill will encourage the House to abdicate its rights and duties further than it has done in recent years. We have not spent long enough exploring the fact that in many areas rights are not absolute—the convention itself sets out boldly most of the rights, but follows them up with qualifications and in many areas one individual's so-called right imposes a restriction on another individual. Finally if we enforce an Act of Rights, as it will become, through the courts, we must have a major reform of our courts.

Although we claim that everybody has equal access to the courts, in practice that is not the case. The courts are easily available to the rich, the articulate and those who can find their way around society, but for many people they are not easily accessible. So long as the courts enforce such an Act and the present system of legal expenses and so on remains, we shall confer rights only on a certain group, not on the whole of society.

To return to the question of the House relinquishing powers, it is ironic that we are discussing a Bill of Rights when recently the House has had many opportunities to enforce particular rights in detail and in practice. It was unfortunate that, in the last Parliament, the Freedom of Information Bill failed to attract 100 supporters to ensure that the debate could continue. I should have thought that it would have been far better for the House to assert itself and pass that legislation. This Parliament has passed data protection legislation that, in my view, is virtually worthless. It does not enforce individual rights of privacy. Of course, we imposed the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1983, which, again, has considerable shortcomings.

If we were all that concerned about rights, would it not have been better for us to assert ourselves and insist, as a House of Commons, that those rights be enshrined in legislation, rather than leave it almost to the very end of the Parliament to say that we must come along with a blanket measure—a Bill of Rights—that may put right some of the omissions and errors? The House will be tempted to say, "We have an Act of Rights, so we do not need to concern ourselves with particular bits of legislation." It will be only too easy for us to pass Bills that give greater powers to the police or to the Executive. We can always say that the Act of Rights will step in. Hon. Members will be less diligent—they have not been all that good up till now—in asserting rights when they deal with individual pieces of legislation. It would be far better for us to act in the spirit of the European convention, but insist that we put it into our own detailed legislation.

If we give up our powers, we shall hand them to judges. I am amazed at the number of people who have such great confidence in judges, particularly in view of the sentences imposed this week in the rape case. The judges certainly demonstrated that they are not particularly attuned to the population at large. The more we hand over to judges the duty to take political decisions—in many cases it is a matter of balancing one right against another—the more we shall insist that judges become politically accountable. My hon. Friend the Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) welcomed such a move because it will educate judges. I do not think that judges will welcome the fact that they will have increasingly to make political judgments. I certainly would not welcome asking them to make political judgments. They are appointees, not people who must face the problem of getting re-elected if they make wrong decisions. I am sure that few people would support an elected judiciary.

Mr. Alex Carlile (Montgomery): Will the hon. Gentleman tell the House what is political about having to decide whether someone is subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment? What is political about having to decide whether a person has liberty or security? What is political about deciding whether a person's right to life is protected by law? Indeed, what is political about asking judges to decide these fundamental individuals freedoms?

Mr. Bennett: I disagree with the hon. and learned Gentleman. One cannot define these matters as fundamental. The hon. and learned Gentleman picked out only one or two.

Mr. Carlile: The hon. Gentleman should read the Bill.

Mr. Bennett: I have looked at it. The hon. and learned Gentleman should read it. The right to life is mentioned, but we qualify it by giving the state the right to take it away in certain circumstances. It is an absolute, it is there, yet we qualify it. All the way through, there is continual qualification. Different opinions have been voiced in the cases that have been argued in the House, particularly the principle of the closed shop. In the end, it is a political judgment. It is not an absolute right that we can define.

The more we draw judges into political matters, the more we shall create problems for them in terms of the general public's attitude to and respect for the judiciary. Most judges do not want to be political arbiters. We should examine the cases that have been made for the use of the convention and the fact that it should have been in our law rather than be removed, particularly the Thalidomide case. That case illustrated the fact that this House had abdicated its responsibilities. If hon. Members had asserted themselves at that time, there would have been a much speedier remedy. Instead, the case went through the courts and took a very long time. The same applies to the telephone-tapping incidents, then and now. There is a remedy if the House asserts itself, but its record has to be called into question.

I am delighted that we have abolished corporal punishment, but that is no great triumph for the convention. It was a political judgment that corporal punishment should be abolished. There is no absolute right that people should not be subjected to corporal punishment. The court did not rule that everybody has a fundamental right not to be subjected to corporal punishment. It said that parents could exercise that choice. I believe that it should have gone further and said that children ought to be able to exercise that choice.

The court did not say that corporal punishment should not be administered. It said only that it should not be administered if the individual concerned objected. In the end, the House decided not to introduce a system under which some could choose corporal punishment while others could choose not to have it. We said that corporal punishment ought to be abolished.

The Bill will not help over closed shops. When the industrial relations legislation was discussed in the House, we argued about whether there should be a right to belong to a trade union and whether there should be a right for those who belong to trade unions not to work with certain people. If lawyers were to accept that there is an absolute right not to belong to a closed shop, I should accept it too, but lawyers insist that there must be a closed shop and that only those with legal qualifications should be able to plead in the courts. I understand the logic of that argument—lawyers want to work with those with certain professional standards and training—but I believe that that principle could be extended.

We were not greatly served by the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights, because it made a political judgment. It is not enshrined for ever that a new Bill cannot be introduced to deal with the closed shop. Such a Bill could be introduced. We could say that, notwithstanding the Bill of Rights, certain principles ought to apply. A weaker provision could also be introduced. We could say that, to avoid doubt, a particular provision should take precedence over the Bill of Rights. The closed shop shows that one person's rights may not necessarily be compatible with the rights of somebody else.

I wanted to participate in the debate and the vote. Also, I want to carry out my responsibilities to my constituents this evening at my advice bureau. Normally on Fridays I can fly to Manchester airport with no difficulty and fulfil those two responsibilities. However, there is a strike by firemen at Manchester airport. I believe that they have an absolute right to be able to strike. I cannot legitimately argue that they should not be able to strike, but their rights conflict with mine. That illustrates the problems that can be caused by absolute rights.

The Murdoch newspaper dispute at Wapping illustrates three rights. Unfortunately, however much wisdom judges may have, they cannot ensure that all three rights will be enjoyed by everybody. There is the right to publish, the right to picket and to protest and the right of the people who live in the area to go peacefully about their business. On many occasions those rights come into conflict. The size of a demonstration makes it difficult for lorries to leave the plant in a way that causes no problems, or the size of a demonstration prevents the lorries from leaving. At the moment, they come out regularly at speeds considerably in excess of 30 miles an hour and put at risk the life and limb of the people in the area.

Although it has been claimed that the Bill gives absolute rights, it does nothing about the right to work, which is an absolute and fundamental right. Some 50 per cent. of those between the ages of 20 and 30 in the Brinnington ward in my constituency are unemployed, and many of the Bill's so-called liberal rights to help them are not as important as the right to a job.

There is a fundamental right to life, but we all know that many people who need kidney dialysis do not receive it. As a result of economic pressures and democratic decisions made by the Government, some people will be denied the hospital treatment they need. I can give other examples of how, after setting out a right, we deny it.

It would be attractive if the legislation conferred the right to nursery education or the right for mature students to get into higher education or the right for a whole series of other educational opportunities. However, the only possible right in educational terms that the Bill confers is the right to buy privilege in education. It does not confer the right to free state education.

There is then the problem of homelessness. It is a fundamental right that people should have a decent home and a decent roof over their heads, but the legislation does nothing to help.

The legislation confers only a selective set of rights and makes choices between rights, and hands over to the judges the duty to make choices. This brings me to access to the courts. It is distressing that substantial numbers of people find it difficult to get access to the courts, but the promoters of the legislation say that its big advantage is that it is cheaper to get to the British courts than to the European Court. However, the cheapest thing for most people is to be able to read the law in statute without the need of a judgment by a judge to tell them what is right or wrong.

The advantage of the House is that we legislate in detail on, for example, freedom of information, police or criminal evidence. The more we leave it to a general declaration, the more it becomes a matter of the judgment of the courts. Instead of the certainty that will avoid enthusiasm for going to the courts, there is doubt. I understand that lawyers love doubt because it keeps them in business, but it is not in the best interests of the general public. They want detailed legislation that gives them certainty. The House would be better employed in making decisions giving them certainty than in giving broad sweeping statements that will depend upon judges making choices of how they interpret the law.

Mr. Alex Carlile: The hon. Gentleman is the distinguished Chairman of the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments. Does he not agree that statutory instruments, produced at least under the jurisdiction of the House, show that we are incapable of producing legislation that people understand? Is he really saying that the statutory instruments that pass through his hands on the subject of, say, social security, have any chance of being understood by the ordinary man in the street? Does he not agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) that the increase in the number of cases going for judicial review is clear evidence of the fact that we need a Bill of Rights?

Mr. Bennett: I do not see that a Bill of Rights gives clarity. We can say, "Let us have no legislation and leave it to the judges to make choices." I agree that in some sectors we are not making the law clear, and that we should be spending more time making that law clear, but it is important that we should be doing it rather than leaving it to people to go to court. Large numbers of people do not have the resources to do that. None of those involved in the judgments on social security in the past two or three years have been able to go to the courts to obtain a remedy. They have had to rely almost entirely on particular campaigning groups to finance the challenges they have made. We should be putting much more emphasis on getting certainty into our own legislation, rather than relying on the courts to enforce it.

Although we can all illustrate the many instances where statutory instruments are obscure and difficult to follow, considering the total volume of legislation produced in this country, the number of cases where there has been a judicial review and where the law is not clear and certain are more limited.

I argue strongly that, if one wants to impose a Bill of Rights, one has to guarantee that anyone who wants to bring a case to court using the powers that they would claim in the Bill, must have free legal aid to help them to bring that case. There must not be the legal aid committees which make choices as to who can bring a case. I accept that that may be an expensive process, but I believe firmly that, if one is going to introduce a Bill of Rights, everyone must have equal access to the courts to enforce it.

I find it annoying when I go to a Minister to make representations on behalf of my constituents, only to be told, "There is nothing that I can do about that, because it is up to the courts or a tribunal to provide a remedy." It is annoying when I have a detailed and difficult case involving my constituents and I want to refer it to the ombudsman and he says, "Your constituent has a theoretical remedy by taking it through the courts or to a tribunal. I cannot investigate." There is a danger that the Bill of Rights may well become an excuse for people to say that certain matters should not be resolved in the House but that the individual involved should take it outside and pursue it through the courts.

I believe that the House should be asserting its rights. It should be much more welcoming than it was this morning to my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) when he wanted to pursue matters here. It is the House's duty to resolve injustice and to see that civil rights are enforced. It would be a poor day for Britain if we abdicated our rights because we say that we are not able or prepared to exercise them, and hand them over to judges who are not in the most favourable position to make the sort of judgments that we ought to be making.

Mr. Leon Brittan (Richmond, Yorks): I should like to join the many hon. Members who have congratulated my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) on his success in the ballot, his choice of subject and the admirable way in which he has presented it. We are not here to decide whether we as a country should enjoy the benefit of a Bill of Rights. We are not deciding whether we should enjoy the protection of the European convention. That was decided when we signed the convention. We are not deciding whether the obligation to comply with that convention should just be an obligation in international law, enforceable only by complaint on the part of one Government against another. That was decided when we conferred the right of individual petition, the right for individuals to take cases to the Commission and, if necessary, to the court at Strasbourg.

In the 20 years since that right was confirmed, we have had many cases that have proved uncomfortable for Governments of different political complexions and which have proved awkward and politically embarrassing in a variety of directions, sometimes attracting some people and sometimes attracting others. The concept of joining like-minded European nations in laying down certain fundamental rights and providing machinery for protecting them, has proved so popular and effective in this country that successive Governments have renewed the rights of individual petition, in spite of all the political and administrative difficulties that it has undoubtedly caused.

For half a generation and more we have been ready, if necessary, to change our law or policy if it has been found by the court at Strasbourg to fall short of the requirements of the convention. The fact is that although some hon. Members—I respect their opinion—regret the existence of the right of individual petition, there is not a substantial body of opinion today that calls for the abolition of that right or for abrogation of the convention in its entirety.

It is true that Parliament has not had occasion to debate those matters, but the reason is not some sleight of hand on the part of the Executive or lack of procedural opportunities to do so; it is the fact that the position with the right of individual petition, for all the difficulties that it has caused, is generally acceptable to the country and to Parliament. Of course, in theory it would be open to this or a future Parliament to take either of the two steps that I have mentioned — the abolition of the right of individual petition or the abrogation of the convention — but because of the general acceptability of the jurisprudence of the Commission and the court over the best part of a generation, in practice we have undergone a major constitutional sea change, although it may not have been widely or fully appreciated as such.

We already have a Bill of Rights and an established means of enforcing it. What the present Bill is about is whether we should take the substantial furthr step relating to the means of enforcing the convention, by formally incorporating it into our domestic law. If that is the issue, much of the wider argument about the value and importance of a Bill of Rights that we have seen, particularly in the media in recent days, is not relevant to the Bill. I deplore some of the more extravagant claims that have been made for such legislation, and in that respect I agree with my right hon. and learned Friend for Southport (Sir I. Percival). It would be utterly misleading to give the country, which may not be as well informed about those matters as the House, the impression that the Bill will convey new rights or give new protections against real or imagined acts of oppression on the part of the state.

In particular, the attempt to drag the Bill into the arguments about current political controversies is unwise and mischievous. It is unwise because it will alienate many Conservative Members who otherwise might be sympathetic to the Bill. It is mischievous because it seeks to make party political capital out of an issue on which progress can be made only on non-partisan basis.

However, in my view it is also not right to complain that the Bill should be opposed because it hands over power from Parliament to the judges. We did that when we conferred the right of individual petition. The only difference is that in the Bill we are enabling British judges to play a part in interpreting the convention. Nobody has answered the simple and fundamental question: if judges are to be involved at all as they have been for 20 years, why should we have only Strasbourg judges and not British judges doing so? There is no answer to that question. To maintain the present position is, frankly, a piece of organised hypocrisy. It is saying, "Let us have the benefit of the convention in theory, but let us not have the full and effective means of giving it effect."

It is true that if one did what the Bill does, there would be a continued right of appeal to Strasbourg. British judges would not have the last word. But I happen to believe that the Strasbourg court would show great respect for the British judges, who would have analysed the facts and applied the convention to British situations in a British context. It is far more likely that the convention would ultimately be interpreted in a way consistent with our own concepts if it first went through the rigorous winnowing process of British judicial interpretation. Those who say that the judges are incapable of deciding the wide social issues at which they would have to look if they were interpreting the convention seem to me to have ignored the history and evolution of judicial review.

I was a junior counsel in the case when we challenged the Labour Government's attempt to impose comprehensive education in the Tameside case. The issues could not have been more fundamental or controversial. Nonetheless, the courts of the land did not hesitate to take on these issues and make a firm view upon them. In that history of judicial review, we have had an increasing involvement of the courts in what are, frankly, matters of controversy. It is absurd to claim that the courts can deal with matters of judicial review in that way, but Strasbourg alone can consider the wider questions although we agree to submit to its jurisdiction if the European Court finds against us.

Mr. Cash: Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that in this extremely important issue, which is pivotal to the whole question, there is a distinct difference between what is regarded in the Bill and the convention as being necessary in the context of a democratic society and what is reasonable? It is upon that question that many questions of interpretation will be decided. That is an important matter to which I would like my right hon. and learned Friend to address himself.

Mr. Brittan: That matter may arise in certain questions. It depends which article is being interpreted. The broad point that I want to make is that the wide issues of policy that the courts in this country have to consider are no more narrowly confined and no more technically legal than the kind of issues that come to Strasbourg in the last analysis.

On the other hand, it is disingenuous to pretend that if we pass this legislation it will make no substantial difference to what happens and will only save us the embarrassment of being at the top of the international league table of the number of cases taken to Strasbourg.

It would similarly be disingenuous to claim that the Bill would not fetter Parliament, because we could subsequently pass statutes which were in conflict with the provisions of the European convention. On that point, the position is unchanged from what has applied over the years with regard to the right of petition. The nominal right to pass legislation that is in conflict with the convention will remain ours. In that sense, parliamentary sovereignity will be unimpaired. Within a very short time, however, there will be a clear and well established self-denying ordinance, as part of our law and practice, that we do not pass legislation of that kind such that it would be almost inconceivable that a Government would say to the House, "Please pass this Bill, never mind that it is inconsistent with the European convention."

Candour and honesty require those of us who support the Bill to accept that that will happen. I believe that we should take that point head on and say that if Parliament is inhibited from taking away fundamental human rights by the existence of the convention, so much the better.

We should not ignore or underestimate the practical difference that the change would make to the Government and the very real problems that the Bill, in its present form, would give any Government in this country. Successive Governments have not simply been motivated by sheer bloody mindedness or obscurantism in being reluctant to bring forth legislation of this kind. Until now, if our practices have been found to be in breach of the convention, the finding occurs a long time afterwards and it is for the Government to enter into consultations and to decide, after considerable discussion, the appropriate way to rectify the breach in terms of the individual case and for the future. From practical experience, I can assure the House that there are many alternative ways, in almost every case, of dealing with that problem. That may involve compesation, a change of policy or legislation. None of that can happen overnight.

If a British court adjudicates, the consequences are very different from an adjudication by the European Court. Such an adjudication leaves time for a considered solution to the problem to be found. Normally, a British court has an immediate impact on the law.

I should mention another matter, if only to discount it. There is no doubt that, for Governments, it will be politically more embarrassing to be found in breach of the convention by a British court than by the Strasbourg court. Not only will the decision be made nearer the time when the act complained of occurred, but judges in Britain are figures of high prestige and the decision of the court cannot be dismissed as one made far away by people who are unfamiliar with our circumstances and our mores and, therefore, out of touch. We cannot say that it is an awful bore to have to accept those decisions. The immediacy of British judicial determination will be a political embarrassment. We should face up to that, but it is no reason for not implementing the convention.

Mr. Forth: Does my right hon. and learned Friend agree that if, as a result of this measure, there is a much greater demand on the English courts to settle such matters, it might lead to long delays in settling those matters here? His immediacy argument might not arise because the delays would be just as long.

Mr. Brittan: It is unlikely. There may be more business for the courts, but it is inconceivable that that business would not be dispatched more quickly than by the long process involved in going to Strasbourg.

Mr. Budgen: My right hon. and learned Friend talks about political embarrassment when the judges rule that legislation does not conform to the convention. But it is worse than that. It means that the House has a choice. Either it accepts that it is no longer a sovereign legislature under the Crown, or it undermines the authority of the judges by saying, "Thank you very much, but on this issue we disagree with you and we do not believe that you are the supreme authority on this."

Mr. Brittan: That is exactly the position of the House when the European court rules. Either we say, "We shall ignore the convention to which we are a party," or we accept that Parliament and the Government are obliged to find means within the law of complying with the convention. We have lived with that for the best part of a generation.

Trying to be candid about the matter and not asking the House to buy a pig in a poke, but to go into it accepting the consequences, I should say that practical and administrative problems will result from a sudden change of policy. We cannot change the administration of the prisons overnight, nor can we introduce overnight legislation on telephone interception that meets the requirements of national security and conforms with the convention. But those problems cannot be dismissed as a pretext for resisting change. The interception legislation which I introduced was necessarily intricate and complex, but it succeeded in achieving the balance of protecting national security while complying with the convention.

Those practical objections cannot be ignored, but they should not be an obstacle to the incorporation of the convention into British law. Perhaps the right course would be not to permit British courts to grant injunctions when the entitlement to an injunction is founded on the convention and, at least in some cases, to require the courts to grant a declaration only in the first instance which would not come into effect until the Government had, within a reasonable and specified time, introduced measures to remedy the breach to the satisfaction of the court. That would overcome the practical difficulties and enable the administrative problems to be resolved.

Those matters will require further consideration, but we should draw them to the attention of the House so that those who do not favour the proposal are not regarded as being mindless of the rights of individuals and are only concerned with good government. All of us should be concerned with good government. Against all of that, the advantages of giving the individual more immediate and effective protection and the logical indefensibility and international embarrassment arising from our present position, leave me in no doubt that the Bill is a major and justified step. I warmly commend it to the House.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Patrick Mayhew): Not for the first time, my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) has rendered the House a signal service. His Bill gives rise to discussion of absorbing interest, one might say it is of perennial interest. He addressed himself to his Bill in a speech which was, if I may cite the words of the right hon. Gentleman the Leader of the Liberal party, lucid, charming and witty. I respectfully join in the grateful congratulations that have been showered upon him on his speech. My hon. and learned Friend and I are old personal and political friends and we are united in our objective of securing as best we may by law the underpinning of liberty. That can equally be described as the securing of fundamental freedoms and we are not divided in any way on that objective.

I am afraid that the House will not be surprised if I begin my argument with a platitude. The judiciary must be seen to be impartial. More especially, as far as practicable it must be kept free from political controversy. We must take great care not to propel judges into the political arena. However, that is what we would do if we asked them to take policy decisions of a nature that we ought properly to take ourselves and which under our present constitution we do take. We would increase that danger if we required or permitted them to alter or even reverse decisions taken by Parliament. For a long time I have felt that herein lies the key to the general issue that we are debating. Above all, it is the factor that shapes the Government's attitude to the Bill and which leads me to be unable, for reasons that I hope to develop, to commend the Bill to the House. I hope to show why that is my view and perhaps I will be forgiven for taking a little time to do that.

My hon. and learned Friend's speech did not deal with that aspect as thoroughly as I had hoped it would. Of course he did not overlook it. At the heart of the argument is that applying the convention calls for some highly political judgments. That point is often missed, but that is perfectly understandable because we focus, as no doubt do 70 per cent. of our fellow citizens, about whom we have heard, upon the general rights that are declared by the convention on human rights to belong to everyone. These are the right to respect for one's family, one's private life, and one's home and correspondence under article 8, the right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion and the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and so on.

These rights are noble declarations. To adopt the words of my hon. and learned Friend, the theme is one of grandeur. I hope that we shall never lose the ardour for enshrining and ensuring across all national frontiers the enjoyment of human rights that arose so soon after the end of the last war following revulsion from totalitarian regimes.

I strongly agree with my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) that the debate is not about whether we are for or against the European convention on human rights, although people may take a stance on it. The issue does not turn on that. Much less notice is taken of the qualifications and restrictions to these generally expressed and noble rights, but they also are to be found in the convention in articles 8 to 11.

I shall take just one example from article 8 which, by way of qualification, speaks of the interests of national security, the interests of public safety, the interests of the economic well-being of the country, the prevention of disorder or crime, the protection of health or morals and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. The Bill would require our judges to make their own assessments of these matters.

Article 8 says that any one of those matters can justify a public authority interfering with the exercise of the right. It provides that there should be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of the right of a home, or a person's private life

> "except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

Mr. Richard Ottaway (Nottingham, North): Those are the very words which are to be found in section 10 of the Contempt of Court Act 1981. Why is it permissible to allow judges to interpret that section but not article 8?

The Solicitor-General: It is very dangerous to invite judges to apply their own assessment on what are essentially political matters. It is not that I do not trust the judges, for I trust them implicitly. It is not that I do not think that judges are able for, as has been said, they are the most able to be found in the world. It is that I fear what would happen to the public reputation for political impartiality of judges if that jurisdiction were extended to them and if that burden were imposed on them on so wide a scale.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness and Sutherland): Will the Solicitor-General please address himself to the question asked by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Ottaway)? Is he not asserting that the Contempt of Court Act 1981 gives judges just the type of political power that we are talking about? If it was acceptable to the Government to do that then, why is the hon. and learned Gentleman baulking now?

The Solicitor-General: As I have said, I think it is very dangerous. To have done it once does not diminish the danger of doing it on a wide scale. That is quite a simple question, which I thought I had answered.

Mr. Robert Jackson (Wantage): What reason do we have to believe that a Turkish or Icelandic judge sitting in Strasbourg is better qualified to make the type of judgment which the convention requires in a case arising out of the United Kingdom?

The Solicitor-General: He is no better qualified: I entirely agree with that extremely interesting remark. The consequences of the court at Strasbourg exercising jurisdiction are very different under present arrangements from the consequences which would follow if the convention were incorporated in our domestic law.

Mr. Budgen: Article 2 of the first protocol seems to support the view which was put forward by Sir Harry Fisher before the last general election — that any legislation which abolished the right to private education would be in breach of that article. If the House of Lords held, after a general election, that legislation passed by this House abolishing private education was in breach of article 2, is it possible that that would enable the judiciary to be seen to be outside the political process and to retain its independence?

The Solicitor-General: My hon. Friend draws attention to the difficulties of importing into our domestic law a convention whose purpose, when it was first ratified, was to act as a marker, and is expressed, correspondingly, in general terms. A stronger point can be made from article 1 of that protocol, which I will come to in a moment.

I ask the House to consider the nature of that catalogue of concepts and objectives, of which I reminded the House a moment ago. Each and every one of those concepts—national security, the protection of morals and the protection of health—is politically controversial.

Sir Edward Gardner: I know that my right hon. and learned Friend has had many interventions, but this is a particular, precise and important point—the danger that my right hon. and learned Friend foresees if judges are given the opportunity of interpreting the convention. Would he not agree that, when judges construe Acts of Parliament, they look at the intention of Parliament in passing the legislation, but they also—this is important — have a duty to interpret the principle of the legislation, not the policy. That is all that they would be asked to do.

The Solicitor-General: That is a good principle of the construction of legislation by our courts, but what is the court to determine as to the policy of Parliament when it has, through my hon. and learned Friend's Bill, incorporated into domestic law articles that are so widely drawn as these? In the case of article 8, for example—but it is not alone in this respect — the right which it confers is subject to widely drawn and unspecified exceptions.

For example, we do not need reminding that what is necessary in the interests of national security is sometimes rather controversial. There are fierce, frequent and genuine disagreements as to national security and what the interests of national security need. What guidance, I ask my hon. and learned Friend—rhetorically, I hope at this stage — would the courts derive as to how they should answer that question from his Bill, were it enacted? The same point can be made with regard to the requirements of public safety and what is necessary in the economic well-being of the country. I doubt whether any of us would enjoy, as a judge, deciding that. Perhaps we would, but I doubt whether any of us would necessarily, with our judicial training, think ourselves particularly well qualified; certainly not as well qualified as those elected to the House might consider themselves to be.

The same point can be made on every one of those concepts, which serve as qualifications of or restrictions to the rights conferred, not only by article 8, but right the way through the general articles. Every one of them is politically highly charged. The idea that if this Bill were enforced the validity of any action said to be justified in the interest of national security could be instantly determined bears no serious examination at all.

Mr. Marlow: My right hon. and learned Friend has clearly said that one of the dangers of having this legislation enacted is that our judges will be seen to be performing a political role. As the system stands at the moment, European judges are performing that same political role. Is that any better or any worse? If it is worse, why do we still permit the right of individual petition?

The Solicitor-General: I have already acknowledged that it is no better for a European judge than for an English judge to have this jurisdiction conferred on him. I am strongly in favour—this is a personal opinion—of retaining our adherence to this treaty. But I draw the attention of the House to the difference between our arrangements — whereby if the court finds that our law does not comply with our treaty obligations, we have ample time to consider how to put it right — and the position under the Bill, when there would be, subject to the interesting point raised by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan), an instant vacuum. I think that there would still be one.

The Solicitor-General: If my hon. Friend will allow me, I should like to develop my argument a little more. I know that other right hon. and hon. Members wish to speak, so I must not take too long.

The point of the issue is made best by article 1 of the first protocol:

I do not think that the House would be satisfied if it were dealing with an ordinary Bill with provisions that gave, on a matter of such importance to liberty, as little guidance to a judge as that. My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde said that the language was the language of "celestial clarity". I yield to no one in my admiration for the Bill's draftsmen. Celestial clarity there may be, but celestial certainty in its outcome there most certainly is not.

Of course I recognise that, under clause 6,

> "judicial notice shall be taken . . . of all published judgements of the European Court of Human Rights".

Without doubt, in some of these areas, detailed interpretations have already been made. But judgments in that court tend to be closely applied to the facts of an individual case, and in many areas there has been no detailed interpretation at all. But, in any event, I understood it to be an argument for the Bill that there is an advantage in having British rather than Strasbourg decisions. I do not think that we can possibly escape the conclusion that, if we pass the Bill, we shall be thrusting the judges far into the arena of political controversy. Until now, it is generally Parliament that has addressed itself to these issues. That is what we have been elected to do. We may not get it right — or perhaps we do get it right — with the benefit of hindsight, but the law that we make on these very issues is law that has seemed to the majority of us at the time to have been a good idea.

Our constitutional history rather strongly shows that over the centuries the British people have preferred that these matters should be decided by people whom they can elect and sack rather than people immune from either process—wiser, less opportunist or even less venal than such people might well be considered to be. So it is that Parliament has passed Acts such as those of which we have been reminded today — the Interception of Communications Act 1985, the Public Order Act 1986, the Abortion Act 1967 and the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. Each has represented the balance between conflicting interests that has seemed right to the majority of us in Parliament at the time. We have gone through the process of lobbying by special interest groups and the laboriously contested Standing Committee stages. But at the end of it, with Royal assent, we have said to our fellow citizens, "There you are. You must conform to that." We have said to the judges, "There you are. You have to apply that." The judges have got on with it and applied the legislation judicially. That separation of functions is, I believe, generally thought to be beneficial.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: One of the advantages claimed for the Bill is that access, individually or corporately, to judges in Strasbourg would be unnecessary and limited. Following from article 6, if the convention is incorporated and British courts therefore have to interpret it and in every judgment take judicial notice of the judges in Strasbourg, is it not likely that we would be bound to the judges in Strasbourg in a way that we are not at present? Would not access to and the need to go to Strasbourg be just as great in practice as they are now?

The Solicitor-General: My hon. Friend has made an absolutely valid point. Of course English judges will be influenced by the judgments of the European Court, because that is the intention of the Bill. However, as has already been said, the Bill does not exclude ultimate recourse to the Strasbourg court. Those who complain about the time that will be taken will see that the time taken to reach Strasbourg will, in fact, be made longer and not shorter.

I do not pretend that it is possible to protect judges from all political criticisms. However, they are preserved from making policy decisions at the moment, and it is largely because of that that their reputation for political impartiality deservedly stands so high.

I am sorry that the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) is no longer in the Chamber, because I should have liked to have another go at him. He said that judges have an attitude of grovelling servility to the Executive. That does not stand up for a moment in the light of the fact that it is the judiciary, rather than Parliament, which has developed the jurisdiction of the judicial review of the exercise of discretionary power by any executive body, including the Government. That has been a very welcome development and also an immensely potent contribution to the rule of law. However, one cannot go on from that to the proposition that has been advanced that, somehow or other, the number of applications for judicial review shows how much we need to incorporate the convention on human rights — [Interruption.] That is what I understand to be the case.

It is said that, if judges can be trusted with judicial review, they can be trusted with the application of the convention on human rights. That is quite a separate matter, because judges never review the merits of an administrative decision. They are wise enough to recognise that the merits of such a decision are a matter for a Minister who is responsible to this House. The judges review the method by which that decision has been taken. The criteria that they apply boil down to one word— "fairness". Is the decision unlawful? Has a legitimate expectation been disappointed so that an aggrieved person is deprived of what he reasonably expected would occur, or would be offered, in the way of procedure? Is the procedure improper? Has there been an irrational, whimsical or capricious decision? It all boils down to whether the decision-making process has been fair. That has nothing to do with giving judges jurisdiction over an administrative function, choosing that which is necessary in the interests of national security.

My great fear is that, if we were to pass the Bill, the judges' reputation for political impartiality would seriously decline, with grievously damaging results, not through the fault of the judges, but because of the essentially political tasks with which we would burden them.

Clause 4 lies at the heart of the Bill. It would oblige the judges to apply a presently existing Act of Parliament in such a way that anything that it authorised or required to be done would be authorised or required to be done only in a manner and to the extent that it did not infringe a fundamental right or freedom. A judge might for example, feel obliged either to alter the effect of, or in extreme cases to strike down a provision of, let us say, the Public Order Act 1986, although it had only recently been enacted. His grounds for that might be that the limitation that it placed on the right to freedom of peaceful assembly under article 11 was not justifiable as being necessary for the prevention of disorder.

Equally, the converse case could be put. The judge might reject a complaint made against that Act because he thought that the limitation was necessary. Either way the judge's political views would surely, inevitably, come to be the subject of intense public speculation. Such speculation can be foreseen not only on the occasion of every controversial judgment, but whenever new judges are appointed. It would soon be suspected, however unjustifiably—I believe that it would be unjustifiable— that they were appointed in part for their political philosophies instead of wholly for their judicial qualities.

It is no discourtesy to our American friends and allies to suggest that their system provides a vivid illustration of what I foresee. It was closely examined by Lord McCluskey in his recent lectures. It is no answer to claim, as can be done, that our most senior judges already interpret in the Privy Council the constitutions of some Commonwealth countries. That is a deeply valued privilege and honour. While the advice that the Privy Council tenders to Her Majesty is highly important, for example, in Jamaica, it will hardly make the judges' political views of controversial interest here.

Judges must have the respect of people of all political parties if they are to carry out their tasks, and they must be protected from conflict with Parliament, even if it is transient conflict. Let us not forget that at the head and forefront of the judges' task lies the protection of our freedoms. The point is not that judges could not do the job, but what the job would do to the judges. I entirely see that it may be argued that we cannot have everything and that that admitted disadvantage is outweighed by the advantage of having British judges doing the job.

Shorn of the elegance with which the point has been put, the argument comes to this: we are stuck with the convention, so let us at least have it applied by our judges because then at least some cases will not reach Strasbourg, where they will be considered by Members of the Commission or the court who are unversed in the traditions of our law and unacquainted with the circumstances of our society. I ask the House to examine whether it is as simple as that. We are not being asked to compare like with like.

Consider the difference between the present practice and what the Bill proposes: Strasbourg, seized of a complaint, tests our law against the convention and pronounces whether our law complies with our treaty obligations. If it finds that we are in breach, it does not disapply our law. Indeed, it cannot do so. It says, "Go away and get it right." It can only pronounce on whether we are in breach. If we are, it is for Parliament, as it should be, to put the law right or, in other cases, for the Government to alter their administrative practices. If that is the case, that is done as soon as possible. Under successive Governments, this country has never failed to do so within a reasonable period. Meanwhile, the existing law remains in force and there is continuity; for the time being, as things have been, they remain. No vacuum is created by a provision being struck down.

I listened with great interest to the point made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks. It had attraction, but in practice there is a difficulty: the court will in effect have found that the law is bad, there will be time to put the matter right and for a declaration, but what will happen meantime? How will we deal with practical cases of would-be immigrants at Heathrow? The law will have been held to be in breach, as defective, and a moratorium will have been declared to allow the Government to introduce new legislation, so what will happen in practice in cases which involve the relationships between individuals? I do not believe that the suggestion is practical, although it is interesting.

Mr. Brittan: Is not that exactly the same position as arises now, after the Strasbourg court has found against us and before we produce a remedy? In those circumstances individuals who are faced with the same sort of situation as has caused the case to arise know that the court, which must ultimately be adhered to, has pronounced on their rights. The Government must frequently deal with that, and have been able to do so. My suggestion is that the position that applies now in relation to Strasbourg can be interposed into the position affecting our courts.

The Solicitor-General: It may look as though the position is the same, but it is not. Whereas at present there is a declaration limited solely to the fact that our treaty obligations have been broken, in the case that would obtain if the Bill were part of the law and my hon. and learned Friend's suggestion were enacted, our domestic law would be struck down. That is a different matter. Real difficulties are based upon the provision being brought into effect. To say, "If one is content that foreign judges should have this jurisdiction, therefore, there is advantage in British judges having it," is not to compare like with like.

There is weight in the point that it can take a long time to get to Strasbourg. In part, that is due to the necessary filtering of applications carried out by the Commission. A tiny proportion out of thousands of applications are held to be admitted, and a small proportion of those actually reach the court. That point was properly made by my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth). There is no filter in the present Bill, except for frivolous or vexatious proceedings, and that issue would have to be tried by the courts.

None of these issues is all black, all white or clear cut; heaven knows, we would not have discussed them over all these years if they were. There is much greater weight in the need to avoid uncertainty and the need for sufficient time to be available for the most practicable changes in our law out of many options to be identified by the Government, put before Parliament, and enacted.

I recognise—I apologise for taking so long, but in part it is because I have given way—that there are those who are critical of the quality of the Commission and the court at Strasbourg. I hope that they will recall that the Bill still keeps the right of personal access to Strasbourg. A complainant is not prevented from going there and, in the end, after he has exhausted all his possibilities for appeal in a British court—which itself may take four to five years—he will still have his access to Strasbourg. That will prolong prodigiously the period of uncertainty as to what our domestic law on any subject would be.

I have had the pleasure of appearing as an advocate for the British Government before both the commission and the court at Strasbourg. I greatly look forward to doing so again, preferably in office.

Under successive Governments, this country has renewed the right of individual petition to the Commission at Strasbourg and has accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the court. We are not in breach of the convention for not incorporating its provisions into our domestic law. Recent decisions of the court establish that fact. Whether or not the convention is incorporated into our domestic law is no true measure of the degree to which the citizen's freedoms are protected in any European country. Here in the United Kingdom, as my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde said in his most eloquent speech, we have looked to these rights, with or without the convention, over the centuries. We have secured them not by the importation of any constitutional document into our domestic law but by a free Parliament and by the right of access to an independent and impartial judiciary. We in this country are not strangers, as those who live in eastern Europe are, to the notion or to the reality of individual liberty. I do not believe that, when we consider the free world and make comparisons, we have any reason to feel ashamed.

The independent judiciary, not Parliament, has developed the jurisdiction of judicial review to which I have already referred. It has become a most potent force. No judge had more responsibility for the development of judicial review than the late Lord Diplock. He, least of all, could be charged with a lack of sincere concern for the rule of law. A few years before he died, he described the development of judicial review as the greatest achievement of the English courts in his judicial lifetime.

However, in a debate in the other place on a predecessor to this Bill, Lord Diplock said:

> "The administration of justice in our country depends upon the respect which all people of all political views feel for the judges, and in my opinion that respect depends very much upon keeping judges out of politics. To pass this Bill of Rights cannot but have the tendency to bring more and more judges into politics. That seems to me to be a sufficient disadvantage, and so far as I am concerned, when it is put into the balance, it tips it down upon the side of not passing a Bill in the form of that which is proposed."—[Official Report, House of Lords, 29 November 1978; Vol. 396, c. 1347.]

In that context, there is no significant difference between that Bill and the present Bill. The House ought to heed Lord Diplock's words.

I have read the view of Lord Scarman, whom I deeply respect. In the other place he expressed the view that the argument against this Bill, based upon too much power to the courts, can be immediately dismissed as one based not on reason but on a certain superficial distrust of the rule of law. We can trust the judges, but we cannot trust what would happen to judges' reputations. In view of Lord Diplock's remarks, I repudiate that charge not only with vigour but with confidence.

Many authorities of very great distinction and eminence, of whom my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde is but one, favour the incorporation into law of the convention. Naturally, their eminence has caused me over the years to look again and again at my own opinion. I, like Omar Khayyam when young,

> "did eagerly frequent
> Doctor and Saint, and heard great argument
> About it and about: but evermore
> Came out by the same door wherein I went."

The paradox for those who want the convention to be applied by our judges is that it will grievously damage the standing of the judges, and in the process will encourage conflict, however transient, with the legislature.

In 1978, a Select Committee of the House of Lords was at odds about the advantages and disadvantages of the Bill of Rights. However, it agreed on this. At paragraph 30 of its report it said:

> "in any country, whatever its constitution, the existence or absence of legislation in the nature of a Bill of Rights can in practice play only a relatively minor part in the protection of human rights. What is important, above all, is a country's political climate and traditions."

Because the Government believe that the underpinning of liberty by law is best achieved by a free Parliament and an independent judiciary in the political climate and tradition of this country, I cannot commend the Bill to the House.

Mr. Nicholas Brown (Newcastle upon Tyne, East): Like the Solicitor-General, I am sure that the whole House is grateful to the hon. and learned Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) for introducing this measure. On behalf of the Opposition, I associate myself with the kind remarks that have been made about him. I am sure that, once he got over his surprise at having done so well in the ballot, he decided to introduce a measure to which the House ought to give its undivided attention.

The House does not have many opportunities to debate the administration of justice. Therefore, today's debate is to be welcomed. It provides us with an opportunity to discuss the matters of substance in the Bill. In a debate of this nature it is easy for important but separate matters of principle to be intertwined and confused. In an effort to avoid that danger, I say at the outset that the European convention on human rights has my support as an important and valuable international statement of principles which, as the hon. and learned Member pointed out, are thoroughly British. My doubts arise not from the contents of the convention but from matters that would accompany its incorporation into the main body of United Kingdom law.

The main value of the convention lies in its present standing as an international statement of principle to which nation states, each with its own different legal codes and structures, can adhere. It is its international status that gives to the convention its perspective and authority. I fear that to try to incorporate such broad statements of principle directly into United Kingdom law is in practice almost unworkable and in any event unnecessary. It is for Parliament to legislate and for the courts to interpret that legislation.

Mr. Lawrence: Our courts.

Mr. Brown: It is for the courts to interpret legislation. To allow the courts to question legislation would be to undermine the separation of powers and place the formulation of legislation in the hands of unelected and politically unaccountable persons. If the judges were to determine the legality of legislation, it would transform the role of judges and bring them further into the political arena.

A recent survey has revealed that British judges, as one would expect, have strong political views. One in 14 has been actively involved in party politics at the parliamentary level. There have been three who have been Conservative Members of Parliament and one Labour Member. A further four have stood as Conservative candidates, six as Liberal and four as Labour candidates for Parliament. I do not say that against them—it is very much to their credit. Alongside that there is a much more telling statistic. Of the 10 Law Lords, nine went to public school and eight went to either Oxford or Cambridge. Of the Court of Appeal judges, 86 per cent. went either to Cambridge or Oxford. In short, our present judiciary is not politically indifferent, and is predominantly drawn from a narrow section of British society.

Dr. Godman: My hon. Friend is talking about the English judiciary. The Scots judiciary is slightly more heterogeneous in social and economic background.

Mr. Brown: I am willing to accept that that is true, but I am sure that it does not affect the main thrust of my argument, which is that the judiciary is drawn from an atypical cross-section of the British population.

Such judges could find themselves striking down existing legislation and creating law themselves. This is not the best way of making law. It is bound to lead to political controversy and to contentious things being said and perhaps being done. It would undermine support for the judiciary in its independent and impartial role. Rights should not be evolved in the haphazard course of litigation which is, by its nature, a random process.

The present method whereby, if it becomes apparent that there is a serious gap in the law, a body is set up to investigate, comments are invited upon its deliberations and recommendations made, and finally Parliament, with a House of politically accountable representatives considers and decides after debate whether, as a matter of policy, the law should be developed or changed, is better. Judges do not have the training, the experience or the accountability to decide broad issues of policy. Furthermore, in our system they are not used to dealing with broad concepts.

Mr. Alex Carlile: How can the hon. Gentleman say that judges are not used to making judgments on broad concepts? Has he never heard of the concept of the man in the Clapham omnibus, which judges have to apply day after day? Has he never heard of the concept of reasonableness, which has to be applied day after day in the Queens Bench division of the High Court? What is he talking about in that childish and absurd proposition?

Mr. Brown: The hon and learned Gentleman makes his point in a characteristically unpleasant and pompous way, and I hope that he will not mind if I respond in kind. My arguments are arguments of degree, not absolutes.

Mr. Carlile: It did not sound like it.

Mr. Brown: Those were my arguments.

The British judiciary has interpretive functions. The question is how far those functions should be extended and whether they should be given as wide a discretion as incorporating the European convention on human rights would allow.

I shall explore the Thalidomide case in a little detail because it is an example that is held up regularly by advocates of the Bill of Rights of what such a Bill could achieve for Britain. In that case, Distillers was sued by the parents of a number of children who were born deformed because of their mothers' use of the drug Thalidomide during pregnancy. An offer of settlement was made by Distillers and rejected by some parents.

While the litigation was dragging on, The Sunday Times, in a more campaigning mode than is now the case, wrote an article criticising Distillers for what it said was the poor offer of compensation Distillers had made. The then Attorney-General took proceedings against The Sunday Times for contempt of court. The article was, so he said, an interference with the litigation between Distillers and the parents by bringing pressure on Distillers pending the court case.

The House of Lords agreed with the Attorney-General. The matter went to the European Court which upheld The Sunday Times on the basis that the House of Lords' decision was contrary to article 10 of the European convention on human rights. Article 10 refers to freedom of expression and the right to impart ideas. For that reason, the case is cited often in support of a bill of rights. In my contention, the citation is unmerited, to be justified, supporters of the Bill of Rights must show that somehow if the convention were made English law, the decision of the House of Lords would have been different. I am convinced that that is not so. The House of Lords' reasoning differs from that of the European court in one respect only. Whereas the House of Lords thought that the interests of the administration of justice triumphed over freedom of the press, the European court thought that the press should triumph. It was treated in both courts as a classic case of competing interests. The principles of domestic and European law were the same. Lord Reid said in the other place that freedom of speech should not be limited to any greater extent than is necessary but that it could be allowed where there would be real prejudice to the administration of justice.

Article 10 allows freedom of expression and the right to impart ideas and information. However, article 10(2) permits restrictions of those freedoms

"for the protection of the reputation or rights of others."

The European court could have used article 10(2) to uphold the House of Lords. It did not do so because, subjectively, it thought that in that case, the freedom of the press was more important. Equally, the House of Lords need never have decided the case against The Sunday Times. It chose to do so and it would be free to do so whether or not a Bill of Rights was incorporated into British law.

Mr. Ottaway: Is that not a classic example where it would have been far more appropriate for the matter to stop with the House of Lords?

Mr. Brown: The hon. Gentleman is saying something that would undermine our entire involvement in the convention, If the hon. Gentleman's view is that we should not be a party to the convention at all, it is one that I repudiate for the reasons that I have already set out. If the hon. Gentleman is saying that people should not be able to exercise their rights to appeal against a decision of the House of Lords, that is wholly wrong.

Mr. Ottaway: I intervene merely to clarify. If the House of Lords had the right to look at the articles in the convention, there would be no need to go to Europe and it would be able to stop with the House of Lords. It could make its decision based on is principles but with the benefit of the articles.

Mr. Brown: The hon. Gentleman, for whom I have considerable regard, is being uncharacteristically obtuse. My point is that the House of Lords and, indeed, any British court of human rights, however it was established, would have been perfectly free under the covention to decide either way. The enactment of the convention into English law does not necessarily mean that the decision on the Thalidomide case would go in the direction decided by the European court, rather than vice versa. My point is that the decisions are subjective and rely, to some extent at least, on political judgment rather than the letter of anything contained in the European convention on human rights to the exclusion of anything else that is contained in the convention.

My hon. Friends, the Members for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) and for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) said that the special branch raid on the BBC would have been prevented if the Bill had been passed in an earlier Parliament. That is not so. It is a red herring, which has been thrown into the debate — I am sure that it is well-intentioned. Nevertheless, it is a red herring—[Interruption.] Perhaps it is a pink herring—a Grimsby herring, to boot.

I am taken by the case that arose from recent events at GCHQ. The two issues that were in contention were the Government's right to take measures to protect the security of the state and the individual's right to join a trade union, both of which rights are clearly set out in the convention. Those who had to decide on the convention had to decide which right was paramount. In fact, the case did not even get beyond the Commissioners. They decided that the interests of state security were paramount. I cannot see that a different decision would have been made in that or the BBC case had the convention been enshrined in domestic legislation.

The thrust of my objection and, as I understand it, of the Solicitor-General's objection, is the political effect on our courts. It is also this. To allow the courts to question legislation would throw the whole of the law into a state of uncertainty. Any point of law could be challenged. Such opportunities would be exploited, largely at public expense. Legal aid would be invariably granted on disputes relating to such important constitutional issues. While I can see that that would be of enormous benefit to the legal profession, I am not convinced that anybody else would gain from it. The tradition in the United Kingdom has been to have firm remedies rather than vague and resounding general rights. There would be grave difficulties for judges in interpreting the non-specific articles, a point that was made tellingly by my hon. Friend the Member for Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett).

Our human rights are well protected in this country in any event. I am grateful to Lord Elwyn-Jones for his analysis of the convention's articles and the corresponding provisions of English law, in the debate in the other place in December 1985. The history of England is geared to human rights—the Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights in 1688, habeas corpus, trial by jury. Those are all rights that are enshrined in British law.

Dr. Godman: And the history of Scotland.

Mr. Brown: I referred to British law. I concede that the Scots also have rights, and so they should.

Dr. Godman: Not enough.

Mr. Brown: Anyway, a Bill of Rights is no guarantee of liberty. The convention contains few absolute rights that are set out without restrictions.

Let me divert to a smaller point. The right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan) referred to the right of individual petition and our support for it. I was taken by most of the right hon. and learned Gentleman's speech, and I agreed with that aspect of his argument. In that context, I should like to alert the House to what is happening in the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands where, as I understand it, rights are to be removed or may have been removed. In the light of what has been said in the House today, may I prevail on the Solicitor-General to review what is happening in those two territories? It is a byway to the main argument, but an important byway and I take this opportunity to raise it with the Solicitor-General.

Supporters of the Bill have argued that there would be immediate access to a court in the United Kingdom for an individual who claimed that a public authority had violated a right guaranteed to him by the European convention. The point has been made that referrals to Strasbourg are expensive and take time. However, the right to go to Strasbourg would still be there. It would not be suppressed by incorporating the convention into English law. Thus, not only could we be extending the time in which a definite decision was reached but we would be extending the cost of the decision-making process because the aggrieved party, regardless of which side was the loser in the British court, would, in all likelihood, want to exercise the right of final appeal.

My speech has been, I hope, gently and courteously opposed to the issue of incorporation, but not to the principles that underline the Bill. I want to conclude by making some suggestions which I hope will be considered to be constructive alternatives to the possibility of direct incorporation of the conventions. My right hon. Friend the Member for Bethnal Green and Stepney, (Mr. Shore) who is here beside me on the Front Bench suggested that a review of the issue of incorporation through the House of Commons Select Committee procedure might be an appropriate avenue to pursue. That would update the work carried out in another place about 10 years ago, and that might not be a bad thing. Parallel to that, Parliament could also consider the possibility of making a provision to the effect that on an application for judicial review, it should be deemed unreasonable for a body to exercise its powers in such a way as to contravene the terms of the convention. It would also be possible for Parliament to decide that the Parliamentary Commissioner could be specifically empowered to investigate any alleged breach of the convention and to lay a report of his investigation before Parliament for consideration.

I put those ideas forward as constructive alternatives to what I believe is the too far-reaching proposal that we should incorporate the convention wholesale into English law. I have to oppose the Bill. However, I do that only on practical grounds. I hope that the Bill's sponsors will acknowledge that among those of us who have reservations about this proposal are hon. Members whose commitment to human rights are every bit as strong as theirs.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I appeal for brief speeches in what is obviously the closing phase of the debate.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness and Sutherland): I begin my remarks by congratulating the hon. and learned Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) on his good fortune and on the eloquence with which he introduced the Bill. He referred a little to the legislative history and to its appearance in a previous Session of Parliament under the sponsorship of Lord Broxbourne. With all humility, I want to draw attention to the fact that the proposal made an even earlier appearance in this House when in December 1983 I introduced a Bill in almost exactly the same terms, and the hon. and learned Member for Fylde was kind enough to sponsor my Bill on that occasion. I am glad, therefore, to be able to support the hon. and learned Gentleman's Bill, which I believe is particularly timely.

Although the Solicitor-General in the course of his remarks spoke about this proposal as the subject of perennial debate, it is fair to say that the debate has not taken place on the Floor of this House perennially. This has been a subject for academic debate and comment perhaps by judges and politicians but not, alas, for this Chamber. There is a great opportunity today for the House to consider and pronounce upon these issues.

There are very few advantages in being called so late in a debate. However, one advantage is that I have had the good fortune to hear the comments of the Solicitor-General. He was united with the Government Front Bench and the Labour party in a degree of insularity which I found distressing from one whom I admire so much. In his insularity and conservatism—and his conservatism was mirrored by that of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) — he seemed almost to be referring to a byegone age, an age on which Parliament was able, perhaps because of the limited responsibilities of the Executive, to rectify quickly perceived grievances flowing from the oppressiveness of the limited apparatus of the state.

One of the most thoughtful speeches in opposition to the Bill was made by the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Silvester), who referred to the remedy for grievances being in the hands of Parliament.

I have served in Parliament for 20 years, and I wish that I could say that Parliament can remedy grievances in the way in which the hon. Gentleman so idealistically described. Alas, the position is different. We must recognise — this bears upon the insularity of the Solicitor-General's approach—that our experience in the delivery of remedies for grievances is almost unique in that we do not have a Bill of Rights to which our citizens can turn for redress.

[Mr. Robert Maclennan]

New Zealand and Israel are the only other countries to have held out against the introduction of a Bill of Rights. Many years ago, the House legislated to ensure that Canada should enjoy the benefits of a Bill of Rights, and there have been several cases since then. When giving independence to our former colonies, we almost invariably tried to give them the benefit of such a Bill. The only country to which we have denied the privilege is Britain. What is so unique about Britain that it stands apart from the tide of history in this matter and is so complacently content that its citizens are protected by the procedures which grew up in the 19th century, in an age when Governments had relatively limited responsibility?

The Solicitor-General invoked only one argument—the impact of such a Bill on the judiciary and the public perception of it. But I welcome his assertion, on behalf of the Government, that the rights guaranteed by the convention are rights which the Government wish to be retained, and that they accept that the right of individual petition to Strasbourg should be renewed. Other hon. Members pitch their opposition against the convention itself, but that was not the argument deployed by the Solicitor-General. He made it plain that our citizens should enjoy the rights guaranteed by the convention, but he also made it plain that, to obtain those rights, they must go through the tortuous, circuitous and expensive route of the Commission and court in Strasbourg.

The Solicitor-General was careful to say, I think rightly, that British judges are competent to consider issues that involve applying general constitutional provisions and general principles of law such as those enshrined in the European convention. He could scarcely have denied it, as the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has adjudicated on precisely such matters. Indeed, I appeared before the Judicial Committee in a case where the definition of "cruel and unusual punishment" had to be considered. Such matters have been in the jurisdiction of our judges for many years, and it is not difficult for them to apply those principles.

Had there been any doubt about judges' competence in that area—one can insulate their experience of acting as a court of appeal from foreign jurisdictions—that doubt has been removed by the development of the jurisprudence of British courts since we joined the European Community. European Community legislation is frequently cast in the civilian tradition that incorporates broad principles into the law and requires judges to make the sort of judgments that they are making at present without difficulty, greatly assisted by the jurisprudence of the European court. The jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights will be of assistance when, as they should, these matters come before our courts.

It is imperative that we give our citizens the greater benefit of enjoying judgments on these broad issues by our own judiciary rather than entrust them to a foreign court when that is not necessary.

It has been argued that there is still a right of appeal to Strasbourg. That is true, but I think that the Solicitor-General would agree that, if a matter is settled in a higher court in Britain on an intepretation of the European convention, it is extremely unlikely that the judgment will be taken from our courts and placed in the European sphere, save in the most exceptional circumstances. The cost of doing that is great and involves much time and uncertainty. Most citizens who avail themselves of the right to go to British courts will be satisfied by the domestic jurisdiction.

The Solicitor-General spoke about a threat that judges would be politicised. What is that threat? Surely he is not suggesting that our judges are not involved in politics. They take decisions of great political sensitivity and many cases, such as the Ponting and Tisdall cases, have great political resonance. In considering the wide range of issues which come before them for judicial review, it is impossible for judges to avoid taking a stance that may be of great political importance and politically highly controversial. As the Solicitor-General rightly said, judges have been developing this jurisdiction and have not feared to develop their roles in this way. They have not felt that they were becoming politicised. Why should we fear that they would be politicised when they do not fear it?

The Solicitor-General quoted Lord Diplock. He might also have quoted a number of equally senior judges who take a very different view from that taken by Lord Diplock. The movement of judicial opinion is towards recognising that it is the judicial role of judges to interpret the will of Parliament expressed in statute, and to do it against the background of the broad principles that Parliament has espoused for generations.

The Bill is long overdue and has had powerful support in the debate. It was supported in principle by the Lord Chancellor in a debate in another place when the noble Lord Wade introduced his Bill. The principle of this Bill has the support of many hon. Members. One of its most notable supporters is the right hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Mason). As a result of his experience in Northern Ireland, he recognises that the entrenchment of the protection of human rights by a Bill of rights in that troubled province of the United Kingdom could make a powerful contribution to restoring harmony and trust to that part of our realm. I happily commend the Bill to the House.

1.59 pm

Mr. Charles Irving (Cheltenham): I have listened to the whole of the debate. Some of the comments have greatly disturbed me, but, before drawing attention to some of them, like other hon. Members I should like to pay a great tribute to my distinguished hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) for seeking to place his measure on the statute book. In this endeavour, he worthily sets himself beside the great reformers who have graced this House over many years. I note with special pleasure that many Ministers—I am a bit worried about the Solicitor-General — the judiciary and members of both Houses support this worthy initiative.

Like many right hon. and hon. Members present, I believe that British citizens should not need to go to Strasbourg to protect their human rights. It may be expedient for them to continue to do so. Some may feel that to transfer these matters to British judges in British courts would be a bit of a nuisance. It would be nearer. Strasbourg is a long way away. It is expensive. It takes a long time to get there. Perhaps the number of people who feel that they have a grievance will be boosted if they can pursue their case before British judges in British courts with people who understand British justice.

We are blessed in many ways in Britain. In recent centuries, we have not experienced invasion, dictatorship or great social division. By the standards of other countries, we enjoy a remarkable level of tolerance, but tolerance is a fragile thing. This great and unique gift of ours has no protection in our legal and judicial system.

Many changes in society are beyond the scope of the individual to comprehend, let alone control. In a world of instant communication, increased centralisation and bureaucracy and extra-territorial regulation, the individual, without the protection of positive, legally defined human rights, is placed at a serious disadvantage vis-a-vis the institutions of state and other large corporate organisations.

Information gathering seems to be the obsession of modern society. It imposes a great threat in that it casts suspicion on what are sometimes the most innocent of activities. It frightens and deters people from the full enjoyment of their tolerances and freedoms. For far too long we have paid lip service to various charters on human rights, but, in the reality of everyday life, they have absolutely no meaning. They have no force in law.

Nobody will disagree that, on issues of human rights and administrative law, our courts are slow, cumbersome and expensive. That is even truer of Strasbourg. They overwhelm the individual. The long road to Strasbourg could take many years. We are almost alone among the signatories of the European convention in not having incorporated it into our internal law.

If the Bill becomes law, the interpretation and adjudication of the contents of the Bill will become a matter for British judges sitting in British courts. I fail to understand the anxiety about the difference between a Strasbourg judge and a British judge. If it is expedient for justice to be available to all people, surely we ought to be satisfied that we can obtain it in our own country. If we are not, I have grave doubts about many of the issues that concern many right hon. and hon. Members on both sides of the House.

Individual petitions to the European Commission of Human Rights will become a thing of the past. Justice for the individual will come more speedily and less expensively, and it will be British. Far from taking away the sovereignty of Parliament, the Bill will strengthen its role in our society. However, it will do more. It will give the ordinary people confidence to face coming changes knowing that our great gift of tolerance is protected by law.

I should like to see these rights protected. At present, there is doubt about many of them. We should have the right to be protected from torture and inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment; the right to a fair and public trial; the right to respect for private and family life, with no interference by a public authority; the right to freedom of expression, thought, conscience and religion; the right to freedom of peaceful assembly and freedom of association with others; the right to form and join a trade union; the right to peaceful enjoyment of possessions; the right to education and teaching to conform with parents' own religious and philosophical convictions; the right not to be expelled from the territory of the state of which the individual is a national.

Subject to the restraints in paragraph 2 of article 11 of the convention, the state is protected; state security is protected. I entirely support and commend the Bill to the House.

2.7 pm

Mr. Steve Norris (Oxford, East): I shall confine myself to two observations. First, I congratulate my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner), who moved the Bill, on his good fortune and the excellent way in which he introduced the motion. He used some words which gave the lie to the whole of the debate. He talked about a grand theme, and he used a phrase that other hon. Members have used since — "the celestial clarity of the convention". I shall concentrate on those words.

I confess that when I first came into the House I supported the Bill. I thought that it was a jolly good idea. Arguing against a convention on human rights is like arguing against Mum and apple pie — not the sort of thing that any of us want to do. My mind was changed only when I did something which is not a common exercise for me — which I must avoid in the future, because it confuses me terribly. I read the Bill. When I read the convention I became convinced that we were fortunate that we had merely restricted ourselves, at this stage, to the recognition of the right of the individual to petition and that we had not permitted the incorporation of th convention into British law.

My hon. Friend for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) made an interesting intervention earlier on. My hon. Friend challenged the assertion made by the mover of the Bill that 70 per cent. of the general public, when asked whether they wanted the Bill, said that they did and that they felt surer and more secure. My hon. Friend asked how many of that 70 per cent. had read the Bill, to which my hon. and learned Friend for Fylde in a brilliant debating point, said that if more people had read the Bill more would have been in favour of it. That is wonderful stuff, but the point that my hon. Friend was making—which I entirely take—is that if the Bill had been read word for word, would those who claim the great advantages for the convention still be of that mind?

I shall make one topical point, which relates to the police in Scotland and the premises of the BBC. Much nonsense has been talked by some hon. Gentlemen who support the Bill — with friends like that, who needs enemies? — who endeavoured to suggest that if the convention was in force none of the action taken by the police against the BBC would have happened, or had it happened, the BBC would have been able to invoke some miraculous right that would have set aside all the police action. Those hon. Members obviously cannot have read articles 8 and 10 which govern these affairs. Article 10 says:

> "Everyone has the right to freedom of expression."

Of course, that would be the right under which the BBC presumably would have gone to the High Court and said "Set aside this action by the police." The High Court would have said, "But subparagraph (2) of the article states:

> "The exercise of these freedoms, since it carries with it duties and responsibilities, may be subject to such formalities, conditions, restrictions or penalties as are prescribed by law and are necessary in a democratic society."

The subparagraph continues with these wonderful words well remembered by those of us who considered the Data Protection Bill with my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Home Office, and the Interception of Communications Bill and who, incidentally, helped to introduce the Access to Personal Files Bill, which will be considered on 20 February and which I am sure all hon. Members will be here to support. It states:

> "in the interests of national security, territorial integrity or public safety, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, for the protection of the reputation or rights of others" and so on. In other words, there is nothing in the convention that would not find itself the subject of the most intense debate, speculation and disagreement as to precisely what these wonderful nebulous and of themselves utterly meaningless concepts would mean in relation to that activity.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Norris: The truth is that the existence of this legislation incorporated into British law as the Human Rights Act 1987 would not have made a blind bit of difference to the activities of the police at the BBC over the Zircon affair last week—indeed, it would have confused it.

Mr. Marlow rose——

Mr. Norris: I shall not give way to any hon. Member. This will enable at least one other hon. Member to speak. I am reminded that any examination of constitutions throughout the world will conclude that one of the most seamless documents and one of the most perfect examples of a constitution drafted with every conceivable human right catered for, explained, annotated and developed, is the Soviet Union's constitution. Anyone who believes that freedom is based on the existence of pieces of paper cannot have kept his eyes open throughout his examination of politics in any country. Freedom is maintained where there is a will to maintain it. If I may use a solecism of sorts, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General did, the common law exists to protect the principle of the common man and has done so before and after the Bill of Rights of 1688. That is the real answer. I believe in the process of the common law being developed by judges in our courts. I do not believe in the value of these pieces of paper, however high-minded and high-flown and however much they seek to better the lot of mankind. I believe that we would be in considerable difficulty if we were to draw every tighter the convention into British law. I oppose the Bill and invite hon. Members to join me.

2.13 pm

Dr. Norman A. Godman (Greenock and Port Glasgow): I compliment the hon. and learned Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) on the Bill and his presentation of it. My brief intervention will be somewhat briefer than some of the speeches to which we have had to listen.

There is a serious need to protect liberties and rights in Britain. One critical issue is the conflict between the judgments of unelected judges and those made by elected legislators. Some people claim that there is a need for greater protection of the individual. Neal Ascherson, writing last Sunday in The Observer, said:

> "There ought not to be any doubt now that liberties in Britain need protection. This particular Government has practised an odious combination of laissez-faire in the economy and society with a rapid increase in state and police power over the individual."

That is one view of the diminution in the rights of the individual in Great Britain today.

The Bill, which I welcome with some reservations, will provide an extra tier of defence for the citizen whose interests have been harmed by an uncaring or intolerant Government. There is a case for the incorporation of the European convention on human rights into our domestic law. That can be illustrated by The Sunday Times Thalidomide case, in which the Strasbourg judges gave a conflicting view about the conflict with public interests. In other words, the Strasbourg judges argued that there was an interference that was unnecessary in a democratic society. That is an example of a case in which different judges arrive at different conclusions, which is a serious matter for a domestic Parliament. The decision in Strasbourg on GCHQ was, of course, an entirely different matter.

There are those who put their trust in Parliament and in elected legislators to protect the interests of injured citizens. One such person is Lord McCluskey, who is an eminent Scottish judge, and a man I respect enormously. He had this to say about a Bill of Rights:

> "Why should it be supposed that elderly lawyers with cautious and backward-looking habits of thought are qualified to overrule the judgments of democratically-elected legislators . . . I do not profess to understand."

I have a great deal of sympathy with Lord McCluskey's realistic view of judges. Alongside his scepticism about his own profession, he displays an astonishing trust in elected legislators and I part company with him on that.

In my view, human rights need a greater, or an added protection to that which is offered by Parliament and numerous decisions in Strasbourg have clearly shown the need for that added protection.

I agree with the comments made by my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) that the raid on the BBC offices in Glasgow had much more to do with the political concerns of the Prime Minister than with national security. The Lord Advocate's role in this unseemly affair has aroused consideration unease in Scotland. However, against that, in granting an interdict on behalf of the BBC against the police raid on its offices in Glasgow, Lord Clyde behaved in a reassuringly impartial manner. Nevertheless, the role of the Lord Advocate needs to be subject to rigorous scrutiny, because he caused deep alarm in Scotland by the wording of the initial warrant.

That squalid affair clearly shows the need for a Bill of Rights. The public, or large sectors of it, no longer trust the Prime Minister and her Ministers. Therefore, I support the Bill in principle, but, at the same time, I am seriously concerned about the potential conflict arising from judgments made by and those made by democratically elected legislators. Therefore, on balance, I support the Bill.

> "elderly lawyers with cautious and backward-looking habits of thought",

2.19 pm

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): I firmly oppose the Bill. We are in a different position in relation to these issues. The traditions of the House, which have developed over many centuries, are based on ministerial accountability to the House. To intrude into our constitution the notion that judges should be given a greater degree of political involvement in matters that should be dealt with by the House is to take a major and dangerous step.

I have grave doubts whether our Standing Orders and, indeed, the whole of the procedures of the House could withstand the provisions of the Bill if it were enacted. I ask the House to consider the Osmotherly rules and their practical application for Select Committees, whether people should be cross-examined before Select Committees, and all matters which are at present within the framework of the House, such as orders, procedures and Standing Orders. Our Standing Orders are subject to statutes, so we could find that the ultimate decisions about the proper way to conduct our proceedings were subject to judicial review. Clause 9 of the Bill and, indeed, the Bill itself would be subsumed into these provisions.

If the Bill is passed there will be much greater confusion and ambiguity between what is legislated in the House and what is decided in the courts. Moreover, if one considers the way in which the 21 countries that have incorporated these provisions into their domestic law have operated, one finds a great deal of uncertainty and confusion between the methods of dealing with these provisions in their courts and those in their legislatures.

Recently we legislated on public order. I hope that the articles will be referred to the Floor of the House so that we can consider properly the question that arise. If we were to apply the articles in the convention to the Public Order Act 1986, the questions that have arisen in relation to Wapping and the miners' strike would be completely overridden by what the judge in that case thought was necessary, rather than dealt with on the basis on which we proceed at present.

At the heart of this matter is the judges' method of interpretation of the laws which are brought before them for scrutiny. We have our canons of interpretation, known as stare decisis, which are not shared in the European courts. This is a matter of profound importance. I ask the House to consider a conflict between our legislation, which provides for that which is reasonable, and what is regarded as being necessary. Article 9 states that freedom of thought shall be subject to limitations as

"are necessary in a democratic society."

How would that be interpreted by judges? The short answer is that they would decide what was necessary and the normal rule about what is or is not reasonable would go out of the window. The Bill is much more fundamental than it has appeared from some speeches we have heard.

The question of the right to life raises grave doubts and, indeed, there must be a presumption of grave doubt. Article 2 states: except where a person is convicted of a criminal offence. If one looks at European cultures that have incorporated these provisions, considers abortion and related matters, articles 2 and 8, and the principle that I have stated at the end of the day, one will have grave doubt about what this piece of paper amounts to.

I pay tribute to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde (Sir E. Gardner) for drawing attention to these important matters. It is not practicable to introduce provisions of this kind and to politicise not only judges' judgments but, in effect, eventually their appointment. At the end of the day, we must consider whether we wish to follow a system of interpretation of law that is relevant in Europe or whether we are prepared to go along with the traditions of the House that go back to 1688 and before. We must ensure that we stand four-square by the principles and traditions that have led to the redress of grievance in this House, and not have such matters dealt with by courts that would become entirely politicised. That would be a dangerous step. I hope that the matter can effectively be dealt with in detail on the Floor of the House.

2.26 pm

Mr. Nicholas Baker (Dorset, North): I am tempted to support the Bill so that we have the opportunity to express our views. But with great regret, and not because I am opposed to the sentiments expressed by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Fylde, (Sir E. Gardner), I oppose the Bill for three reasons. First, there is a small but distinct shift in political power to the judiciary, and that is undesirable. Secondly, there will be an increase in litigation, not necessarily in the libertarian cause. Thirdly, there will be uncertainty about the law which, ultimately, will not achieve greater protection for the individual citizen.

The European convention on human rights is not a body of law but a treaty. When judges in Strasbourg decide an issue about immigration or anything else, they do not give a judgment on the matter so much as say that the treaty has been broken, and it is up to the British Government to decide what they will do about the matter. As we know, British Governments have always taken action, in the opinion of the Parliament, to put matters right. I stress that it is in the opinion of the Parliament.

My concern is how we decide what the law is. How does the oil of the convention mix with the water of the common law of England? The Bill, if enacted, will leave that matter to judges. In effect, they will be asked to decide matters which presently fall to be decided by Parliament, however pressured we are by being a signatory to the treaty.

Most hon. Members will accept that the greatest protection of the human rights of our citizens is to be derived through the elected Members of this place. Judges are not trained to make such decisions and would find the political waters in which they are invited to dabble their feet unfriendly and unnatural.

The speech made by the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) was particularly significant. He expressed the greatest hostility to judges and to the type of decisions that they are asked to take today. How much greater would be his hostility, and, no doubt, that of some of his hon. Friends and others, to judges if they were asked to widen the area of their decisions, as they are being asked to do so under the Bill? I take seriously the risk that, if this convention were put into our law, it could lead to the political appointment——

2.41 pm

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) spent 22 minutes of the previous debate on human rights deploying the same arguments as I anticipate he is likely to deploy in the Adjournment debate. Is it possible, in those circumstances, that those of us who were not able to make a speech on the Human Rights Bill because of the hon. Member for Linlithgow's actions should be able to take part in the Adjournment debate and deploy some of the important arguments that we were seeking to deploy on the Human Rights Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): The hon. and learned Gentleman knows that I cannot rule or make a judgment on a hypothesis.

2.42 pm

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): The hon. and learned Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) will be disappointed, because there is another, different aspect to the issue.

Charmingly, the Solicitor-General began his speech this morning with what he said was a platitude. I should like to start with a non-platitude. While not being his easiest parliamentary colleague, and, trying though he may find me from time to time, being over-inquisitive, I have had every courtesy from an approachable and forthcoming Attorney-General. It is no platitude to wish him a speedy return to full health.

I heard the Solicitor-General this morning and I thank him for attending the Adjournment debate. In my opinion, in the 1950s he was the most eloquent Oxford president ever to come to the Cambridge Union. He was extremely eloquent this morning.

May I say at the outset that I gave the Attorney-General a copy of my speech in relation to the possible prosecution of Lord Rothschild and Mr. Bernard Sheldon on Monday, since it raises issues of byzantine difficulty and daunting delicacy, which should not be sprung out of the blue on any Minister. Knowing the Solicitor-General, I am sure that he will respond to this in the same spirit of considered seriousness.

The purpose of the first part of my speech is to give the Law Officers an opportunity to tell Parliament—these issues are ultra-party—what on earth they propose to do to clear up the Augean stables of inconsistency in prosecutions under the Official Secrets Act. The Law Officers will understand that my deep interest in these matters was born during the 11 days that I spent in the Old Bailey, in Mr. Justice Sir Anthony McCowan's court, during the trial of Clive Ponting.

Why prosecute Clive Ponting and dither, understandably—I do not use that word in a pejorative sense—over prosecuting Victor Rothschild? Why send Sarah Tisdall to prison for months and do nothing about Bernard Sheldon, albeit he is approaching retirement, in relation to Rupert Allason, alias Nigel West? Why fail to prosecute Bernard Ingham for the selective leaking of the Solicitor-General's letter? It looks as if there is one prosecution policy for the influential, the famous and the distinguished and another prosecution policy for the more junior, hitherto less famous, civil servants.

Compared with what Victor Rothschild set in train, with Peter Wright and Harry Chapman Pincher, anything that Clive Ponting put in my way melts into insignificance, in terms of national security, if not political embarrassment. There is an apparent inconsistency of policy, and it would be helpful to the House to know on what principles those discriminating practices are justified and on what basis discrimination is authorised by Ministers.

It is to the position of Lord Rothschild that I wish to refer. If, for the first time, I shelter under the cloak of parliamentary privilege, it is because Lord Rothschild can be a litigious man and, secondly, I do not think that what I am saying is to his discredit. I refer to 26 November—[Interruption.] Hon. Members had better wait and hear what I shall say. I refer to 26 November, when I asked the Attorney-General

> "what consideration he has given to proceeding against . . . Mr. Arthur Franks, formerly head of MI6, and . . . Lord Rothschild for breach of confidence in relation to information on matters of state security given to authors."

The Attorney-General replied:

> "I am considering with the Director of Public Prosecutions the allegations made in respect of the two named individuals."—[Official Report, 26 November 1986; Vol 106, c. 268.]

I returned to the subject on 1 December 1986, and the Attorney-General said:

> "The matter remains under consideration."—[Official Report, 1 December 1986; Vol. 106, c. 415.]

On 18 December 1986, I asked the Prime Minister

> "whether she will now release Lord Rothschild from his obligations of confidentiality as a former member of the security services; and if she will make a statement."

The Prime Minister replied:

> "All present and former members of the security services owe a lifelong duty of confidentiality to the Crown. They may not make unauthorised disclosures of information acquired in their work. Any requests for authorised disclosure would be considered in the normal way."—[Official Report, 18 December 1986; Vol. 107, c. 613.]

Let me offer necessarily truncated points. First, in the 1930s, international Jewry, of which the Rothschilds were one of the leading families, were aghast at the anti-semitism that was then rampant in Germany. Secondly, Victor Rothschild may, as the author Douglas Sutherland suggests, have recruited Guy Burgess for a minor role in one of the Jewish intelligence services. Thirdly, as an understandably passionate anti-Fascist, Victor Rothschild may have had relations with Comintern agents. Talk of spying is jejune nonsense. Anyhow, a good agent is one who gets from foreign powers more than he gives.

Fourthly, the events of long ago fade into the past. Sleeping dogs from the 1930s and 1940s were rightly, in my view, allowed to lie. De mortuis nil nisi bonum. But in 1979, Britain gets a new species of Prime Minister. On 15 November 1979, the new Prime Minister makes a statement on Blunt, against advice, with the aplomb of a cow in a china shop. Sir Charles Cunningham tells me that Sir Anthony Blunt's activities as an agent of both sides many years previously were fully known to successive permanent secretaries at the Home Office.

Fifthly, I believe that Lord Rothschild was extremely angry about the Prime Minister's reaction on Sir Anthony Blunt. Some of us believe that Sir Anthony Blunt's memoir, given to his brother, and now lodged in an institution in London, will reveal a complex story, part of which is that Sir Anthony Blunt was asked by a former member of the security forces whose name I have given to the Attorney-General, and by Guy Liddell, to help get Burgess and Maclean, by that time embarrassments both, out of the country.

Sixthly, in the summer of 1980, Lord Rothschild had the Prime Minister to his flat in Saint James's. He is subsequently quoted in the press as saying:

"She does not understand intelligence matters."

Seventhly, Lord Rothschild then came to believe that his own reputation was at stake, especially after the Prime Minister's statement on Sir Roger Hollis on 23 March 1981, which appears in the Official Report at column 1079. At his own expense, Lord Rothschild brought Peter Wright from Australia. He discussed with Wright certain material which appeared to constitute a contravention of section 7 of the Official Secrets Act 1920. Section 7 states:

> "Any person who attempts to commit any offence under the principal Act or this Act, or solicits or incites or endeavours to persuade another person to commit an offence, or aids or abets and does any act preparatory to the commission of an offence under the principal Act or this Act, shall be guilty of a felony or a misdemeanour or a summary offence according as the offence in question is a felony, a misdemeanour or a summary offence, and on conviction shall be liable to the same punishment, and to be proceeded against in the same manner, as if he had committed the offence."

If the Attorney-General would decide to prosecute Lord Rothschild in open court, it would be possible to ask questions which are causing much public concern and which Lord Rothschild would then have to answer on oath. These are some of the questions that might be asked. First, how does Lord Rothschild explain his involvement with Sidgwick and Jackson over the Pincher-Wright book? While it is possible that Sidgwick and Jackson would consult Sir Arthur Franks about possible breaches of the Official Secrets Act 1911, that would not explain Lord Rothschild's involvement.

Secondly, why should Lord Rothschild expose himself by suggesting an unlawful enterprise to Mr. Wright, namely that he should breach the Official Secrets Act and then procure a writer, Mr. Pincher, to act as a channel for royalties?

Thirdly, why should Lord Rothschild fly Wright to London if, as has been suggested, all he needed was a testimonial to protect himself against suggestions that he had been a Soviet agent?

Fourthly, why pay Wright? Why introduce him to Harry Chapman Pincher? Why should Mr. Pincher pay him half the royalties?

Only by proceeding in open court on oath can obscurities be made less obscure. Only by proceedings in open court can there be an end to doubt and to the suspicion of discrimination.

I ask the Law Officers why they will or why they will not prosecute Victor Rothschild. If they decline to prosecute, apologies should be winging their way to Sarah Tisdall and Clive Ponting.

Even more clearly, the Law Officers owe Miss Tisdall and Mr. Ponting an explanation as to why they take no action against Mr. Bernard Sheldon for briefing Mr. Rupert Allason—alias Nigel West—who incidentally, and I do not intend to make much of this, is Conservative candidate for Torquay, for his books. I want to make it clear that I do not wish to enter the argument about Mr. Allason being Conservative candidate for Torquay.

If I am asked in general terms after my comments this morning about sources, part of my reply would be that there is an urgent need for an appeal body to which civil servants, policemen, service men or people in the intelligence services can go without jeopardising their careers if they believe that they have been abused. That is the official policy of the Labour party put down by the Cirencester and Tewkesbury amendment at the party conference at Bournemouth on the Sunday. I was interested to hear on the radio that Nigel West—alias Rupert Allason—said at 8.15 am on 5 February that he supported the idea of such an appeal body.

Finally, yesterday my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition and I raised with the Leader of the House the question of the Interspace articles with regard to Zircon. The question was whether the knowledge of Zircon or Skynet IV was in the public print at least two years ago. The Leader of the House said that he would draw that matter to the attention of the Solicitor-General.

I will leave the matter there, because the hon. Member for Thanet, South (Mr. Aitken), the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) and my hon. Friend the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) have a very serious interest in these matters.

2.54 pm

The Solicitor-General (Sir Patrick Mayhew): I thank the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) for his kind good wishes for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and for his kind remarks about him, which are much appreciated. May I also thank him for his kind reference to me. I am grateful to him for having given the Law Officers advance notice of the contents of his speech, which was a helpful gesture. Even so, he made several allegations to which, as I shall explain, I shall be unable to respond.

The main theme of the hon. Gentleman's speech was whether Lord Rothschild should be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act. On 17 December 1986, the police were requested by the Director of Public Prosecutions to investigate allegations that Lord Rothschild and Mr. Chapman Pincher had committed offences under the Official Secrets Act. The police investigation is continuing and no decision can be taken until the Director of Public Prosecutions is given the police report, which will then be sent to the Attorney-General, or to me if the Attorney-General has not yet returned to his duties.

In those circumstances, and in accordance with the normal practice of the Law Officers, I cannot comment, except to say that I am satisfied that the matters raised by the hon. Gentleman will be considered by the police officers who are carrying out the investigations. As far as I can recollect, most, if not all, of the allegations formed part of the evidence given by Mr. Wright in the proceedings in Sydney and, as allegations, they are common knowledge.

I emphasise once again that my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has no discriminatory policy in considering cases submitted to him under the Official Secrets Act. Each case is considered openly upon exactly the same criteria, and there is no foundation for a claim that importance or seniority in rank provides a person who is under investigation with any advantage.

The hon. Gentleman asked a question today which is already the subject of a question on the Order Paper for priority written answer by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. It relates to the publishers of the Interspace newsletter in respect of an article or articles that might be considered to refer to the Zircon project. I can tell the hon. Gentleman that the matter raised in the written question and which he has raised today will be the subject of consideration.

> "My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General has authorised me to inform the House that, on having considered the report by the head of the Civil Service, and on the material before him, he has decided after consultation with, and with the full agreement of, the Director of Public Prosecutions and senior Treasury counsel, that there is no justification for the institution of proceedings under the Official Secrets Act 1911 in respect of any of the persons concerned in this matter"—[Official Report, 23 January 1986, Vol. 90, c. 451]

—that matter being the one raised by the hon. Gentleman a considerable time ago relating to the Westland affair. I mention that in relation to the name which he mentioned today of Mr. Bernard Ingham. I do not recall that, in the copy of the speech which he furnished to the Attorney-General, he said that he would make allegations against Mr. Bernard Ingham to the extent that he has done today. The words that I have just uttered formed the basis of a statement on 23 January 1986 by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

In the context of remarks about the book, "A Matter of Trust" written by Mr. Rupert Allason, alias Nigel West, the hon. Gentleman mentioned Mr. Bernard Sheldon, who is an official. He asks why the Attorney-General has not prosecuted Mr. Sheldon. The answer is simple and I trust that it is welcome. I am informed that there is no evidence at all to show that Mr. Sheldon has committed any offence under the Official Secrets Act. The hon. Gentleman also mentioned Mr. Sheldon in connection with the recent searches of BBC premises. I am informed that neither that official nor the security service had any involvement at all in any decisions or actions relating to this matter. During the last debate the hon. Gentleman made allegations about my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate and his Department in connection with the search of BBC premises. Having had no notice of the allegations made in that debate, perhaps I may be permitted to say that in his answer in another place on Wednesday 4 February my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate set out the circumstances in which the search warrants were applied for and granted.

I am informed that there is no foundation for the allegation that the Crown Office, alarmed at the enormity of what it was being asked to do, made a direct or indirect approach to the Prime Minister's office and that the Crown Office was told by the Prime Minister's office to allow special branch officers to take everything and anything from BBC Scotland. I am informed that at no time was the Crown Office in communication with the Prime Minister's office. I understand that yesterday the hon. Gentleman told my hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General for Scotland that he would not expect him to be in his place today for this debate. Therefore, I find the allegations made earlier today a little surprising.

Mr. Dalyell: That was simply because as a Scottish Member I know that it is difficult to be here on Friday.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I hear what the hon. Gentleman says about that, and no doubt it is an explanation. When officials enter the public service they know that throughout their service they will be unable to speak in their own defence to answer criticism and that they must rely on their Ministers to do that for them, especially when criticism is unfounded. The hon. Gentleman thinks it justifiable to allege that named officials should be prosecuted for offences under the Official Secrets Act. I have already repeated the Prime Minister's words about Mr. Bernard Ingham and I should now like to say something about Mr. Bernard Sheldon.

The hon. Gentleman earlier made a speech about human rights, but has not provided a scrap of evidence to support his allegation about Mr. Sheldon. Either he has evidence, as The Independent reports him as claiming he has, in which case it is disgraceful that he has not provided it, or he has none, in which case it is disgraceful to allege an offence.

Mr. Dalyell: This is part of the problem and the reason why I said in my speech that it is of great urgency to institute some kind of appeal body to which civil servants, service men, intelligence officers or policemen who think that they are being maltreated can go without jeopardy to their careers. That is important and that is why I raised the subject at my party conference and was one of those who made it helpful to be the policy of the party.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Civil servants must be defended by their Ministers when they have no means, at present at any rate, of speaking in their own defence. However, officials are entitled to rely on more than defence by their Ministers. They are entitled to expect that hon. Members, protected as they take pains to be by privilege, will treat officials fairly. I regret that Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Ingham, both of whom have had careers of great dedication and distinction with successive Governments, have been unfairly treated in the Chamber.

Mr. Dalyell: Before the Solicitor-General sits down, may I remind him that I am talking about men of considerable power. I worked closely with the late Dame Evelyn Sharp and know how civil servants should properly be treated. The difficulty arises when civil servants become so powerful that they are not accountable in the normal sense of the word. That is why I had an Adjournment debate on the role of the Prime Minister's press officer, saying that we were dealing with the most powerful "man" in British politics. Later several of the Solicitor-General's colleagues vouchsafe to me—that I was quite right and that he is the most powerful——

Mr. Deputy Speaker Order. I thought that the hon. Gentleman was making an intervention. He cannot speak for a second time.

3.5 pm

Mr. William Cash (Stafford) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. Member have the consent of the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) and the Solicitor-General to speak?

Mr. Dalyell: Most certainly.

The Solicitor-General: Yes.

Mr. Cash: I am most grateful for an opportunity to speak. We have just had a debate on human rights in which the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) made a speech which stretched the procedures of the House. He has now made a series of apparently groundless allegations against certain people. I was not privy to that speech and I can only form a judgment on the basis of what he said. He said nothing specifically and he substantiated nothing with evidence.

[Mr. Cash]

There are times when we have reason to be worried that the hon. Gentleman is as much interested in grabbing headlines as in getting at the truth. I suspect that that is true of what happened earlier this morning.

Campaigns such as the Campaign for Freedom of Information and the hon. Gentleman's suggestion of an appeal body, which was apparently endorsed at the Labour party conference, raise central questions about the nature of authority and where it resides.

Mr. Cash: The hon. Gentleman says that I am absolutely right, but I suspect that we disagree fundamentally about where the centre of gravity must remain.

Self regulation and the constraints that people impose on themselves to ensure a proper balance of responsibilities and, by contrast, the right to speak, are issues which go to the heart of the matter. We have become increasingly fed up — I am sure that is true for the country as well — with people who believe that their unsubstantiated opinions which appear in the media or here, and which are drawn from a fairly limited range of information, can be used to make assertions and inferences——

Mr. Dalyell rose——

Mr. Cash: I shall, of course, give way to the hon. Gentleman a little later. Such clashes of opinion ought to be resolved in the proper and normal way, which is within the framework of law prescribed by our procedures and Acts of Parliament. We are increasingly fed up with invasions of privilege.

Mr. Dalyell: The hon. Gentleman says that I have made unsubstantiated allegations. That was the type of speech which was made against me for 18 long months before the Old Bailey Clive Ponting trial substantiated everything that I had tried to say.

I named Colette Bow in the House and there was the matter of the Solicitor-General's letter. Who has since been proved right about that? The Solicitor-General will not comment but, with regard to his letter, I was attacked time and again by Conservative Members, but who now thinks that I have been wrong?

Mr. Cash: I have a straight and simple answer. If the hon. Gentleman was proved right in the courts before, he should make the unsubstantiated allegations that he made today outside the House and prove his point in the courts. That is my direct and simple answer to him. Will he reply to that?

Mr. Dalyell: If I go to a court of law and name names, people's careers are in jeopardy — not mine, other people's careers. I have to make a judgment whether what I have been told is the truth or not. From my inquiries in Scotland, I believe that every word that I am saying is true.

Mr. Cash: The record has to stand for itself. The only person's reputation that will be harmed by what has been going on here this morning is the hon. Gentleman's. I have offered the hon. Gentleman an opportunity, which he is not prepared to take up. If he thinks that making statements and allegations within the privilege of the House will enable him to be able to justify what he has to say, when what he is doing—because he knows perfectly well that everything he says will be splashed over the newspapers tomorrow — is not damaging people's reputations when they cannot reply to him, then he is absolutely wrong and we are fed up with it and the way that he carries on.

Mr. Dalyell: If there is going to be anger, I am exceedingly angry about what was done in BBC Scotland, which was a wholly un-British thing to do. What happened in Glasgow was horrific. That was something that has never happened in Britain before. I have been here for nearly a quarter of a century and previous Prime Ministers — the right hon. Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath), Mr. Harold Macmillan and Sir Alec Douglas-Home—know that I have behaved impeccably towards them. This is a different kind of Government and a new species of Prime Minister. As a Member who has been here for a quarter of a century, I do not like it.

Mr. Cash: The hon. Gentleman may not like it, but he is shielding himself behind the privileges of the House.

Adjourned at eleven minutes past Three o'clock.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Insider Dealing

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Attorney-General if the Director of Public Prosecutions is considering prosecution of the junior official at the Office of Fair Trading referred to in the answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 583, by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in connection with insider dealing.

The Attorney-General: No formal report has been submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions; but the Head of Legal Services has made himself available to give advice to those responsible for the conduct of the investigation to which the hon. Member refers.

Northern Ireland (Juries)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor has completed his review on the use of juries in personal injury actions in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: The review announced in November 1985 has been completed. The Lord Chancellor has carefully considered the further views of interested parties in Northern Ireland and has concluded that there is no compelling reason why Northern Ireland should differ from England and Wales in the use of juries in personal injury actions. He intends to bring forward legislation in the near future to effect the change.

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General when he first learned of the existence of (a) the series of programmes on "The Secret Society" and (b) the programme on the Zircon satellite system.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's answer to him of today.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) whether he will prosecute British Aerospace under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act for publishing information as to the location orbits of the Zircon satellite system;

(2) whether he will prosecute Sir Ronald Mason, former defence chief scientific adviser, under the Official Secrets Act, for disclosing information to Duncan Campbell for use in the media on the existence of the Zircon satellite system;

(3) whether he will prosecute Sir Frank Cooper, former permanent secretary at the Ministry of Defence, under the Official Secrets Act for disclosing information on the existence of the Zircon satellite system to Duncan Campbell.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions will consider whether any criminal proceedings are appropriate and, if so, against whom in the light of the result of the investigation currently being conducted by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date he decided to seek an injunction against Duncan Campbell on the question of publishing information in relation to the Zircon satellite system.

The Attorney-General: The Government decided to seek an injunction against Duncan Campbell on 20 January.

TRANSPORT

Private Hire Vehicles

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 is operating as intended so far as licenced private hire vehicles are concerned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I believe that, on the whole, this Act is achieving its intended purpose.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received from individuals and organisations about the workings of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 as it relates to private hire vehicles.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has received a number of representations on these points over the years. Most of them have been requests from district councils for advice on the interpretation of the Act.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to amend the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976 to impose upon persons applying for a licence to operate a private hire vehicle (a) a test of local knowledge, (b) standards of road worthiness and (c) a requirement to display a certificate of current fully comprehensive insurance and the local authority licence number in a prominent position inside the vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Public Transport (Merseyside)

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received regarding the condition of public transport in Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of representations, from the passenger transport authority and others. It is the responsibility of the passenger transport executive to secure public transport services to meet local needs in accordance with the policies formulated by the authority.

A1 (Road Accidents)

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of road accidents on the A1 road in Cambridgeshire in each of the last three years and the number of deaths and serious injuries resulting; what steps he proposes to make this road safer; and if he will make a statement.

| | Fatal | Serious | Slight | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 9 | 42 | 93 | 144 |
| 1985 | 4 | 43 | 101 | 148 |
| 1986 | 12 | 48 | 114 | 174 |

The 1986 figures are provisional. The numbers of deaths and serious injuries are as follows:

| | Deaths | Seriously Injured |
|---|---|---|
| 1985 | 4 | 55 |

The figures for 1986 are not yet available.

|---|---|
| 1982 to 1984 | 0·29 |
| 1983 to 1985 | 0·29 |
| 1984 to 1986 | 0·30 |

The Department has been considering what can be done to improve safety standards. Traffic management and improvements are being undertaken where justified and where resources are available. I shall take the needs of this road into account at the forthcoming programme review.

Transport-Supplementary Grant

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller) at column 137 on 13 January regarding the 1987-88 transport supplementary grant, what proportion of the £55 million grant for minor works has been set aside for schemes arising from accident investigation and prevention work both on trunk roads and on local roads eligible for transport supplementary grant.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are still finalising details of the Department's programme for 1987-88. I expect a substantial proportion of the £35 million for schemes costing less than £1 million on trunk roads in 1986-87 to be spent on low cost-high return safety engineering schemes. The local authorities will be involved as agents in working up detailed proposals. To help them, we have already mounted a seminar in London and plan one in the west midlands. Others will follow.

Benefits to road safety are important considerations in the distribution of transport supplementary grant. The £360 million of expenditure my right hon. Friend announced that we intend to accept for 1987-88 will attract grant at 50 per cent. This will help local authorities improve their more important roads. Not all local authorities have a systematic accident investigation and prevention programme.

I have written to all local highway authority chairmen drawing their attention to the Department's new manual on accident investigation and prevention. I hope that over the coming years all local highway authorities will begin to use this proven method of reducing casualties much more extensively. It is for local authorities to decide their priorities and to take advantage of the increase in accepted expenditure towards their programme of minor works.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels were prosecuted for illegally discharging oil in United Kingdom territorial waters in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86; and what was the average fine levied in each year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The last three years for which figures are available detailing vessels prosecuted for illegally discharging in United Kingdom territorial waters are:

|---|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 19 | 19 | 2,488 |
| 1984 | 13 | 13 | 1,709 |
| 1985 | 11 | 10 | 2,150 |

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport how much was spent in 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, on (a) capital investment in and (b) operating costs of Her Majesty's Government's marine pollution control unit.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The marine pollution control unit was set up in 1979. The costs incurred by the unit since then have been:

| | (a) Capital expenditure | (b) Current expenditure[1] |
|---|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 920 | 319 |
| 1980-81 | 592 | 126 |
| 1981-82 | 922 | 183 |
| 1982-83 | 480 | 1,222 |
| 1983-84 | 271 | 1,284 |
| 1984-85 | 323 | 1,459 |
| 1985-86 | 312 | 1,528 |

[1] Operating costs.

The large increase in current expenditure from 1982-83 reflects the introduction of a dedicated aerial spraying and surveillance capability in 1982.

Midlands Link Relief Route

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the prospects for the completion of the M40, the M42 and the M6 midlands link relief route.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Given favourable weather the southern turn between the M42 and M5 will open to traffic within the next couple of months.

Programmed completion dates for the other new links in the motorway network are M40 — 1990, M42-M5 northern turn — 1990, northern relief route — 1993. Achievement of these dates is dependent upon statutory procedures.

Roads (Study)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has yet received the report of the independent study on his Department's administrative role in road scheme preparation up to the construction stage; and when he expects to be able to announce his conclusions thereon.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have not yet received the report, which I expect shortly. I hope to announce conclusions in the spring.

Drinking and Driving

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to prevent drivers of buses and taxis, driving instructors and drivers of vehicles regularly carrying dangerous goods to consume any alcoholic drink during their working hours and during the six hours before they start work.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. We see no case for any requirements beyond those in the existing legislation on drinking and driving. I believe that professional drivers are, in general, particularly aware of the risks associated with drinking and driving and set high standards of conduct in this respect. Drivers with vocational licences are aware that, should they be convicted of a drinking and driving offence, the vocational licence will not automatically be restored at the end of a period of disqualification ordered by the court.

Bicycles

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information his Department holds on the provisions for requiring the fitting of an obligatory red back reflector on a bicycle in (a) Austria, (b) Belgium, (c) Denmark, *(d)*Finland, (e) France, (f) Germany, (g) Ireland, (h) Italy, (i) Netherlands, (l) Norway, (m) Portugal, (n) Spain, (o) Sweden, (p) Switzerland and (q) the United Kingdom;

(2) if he has any plans to prohibit the sale of bicycles in the United Kingdom that fail to meet minimum technical safety standards;

(3) if he has plans to make it compulsory to fit a standard set of reflecting devices on bicycles including red to the rear, white to the front and yellow on pedals.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Pedal Bicycles (Safety) Regulations 1984 already prohibit the sale of new bicycles which do not comply with the British Standard for cycles, BS 6102. This standard specifies side facing reflectors, a red rear reflector, amber pedal reflectors and, if sold without a front lamp, a white lamp reflector. Any pedal cycle being used on the road at night must have a red rear reflector.

I have no information regarding obligatory requirements for red rear reflectors on bicycles in other countries. There is an International Standard, ISO 4210, covering safety requirements for bicycles which includes a specification for red rear reflectors. The standard is not mandatory but has been approved by, inter alia, Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information his Department holds on the provisions for requiring the fitting of a mandatory audible warning device on bicycles in (i) Austria, (ii) Belgium, (iii) Denmark, (iv) Finland, (v) France, (vi) Germany, (vii) Ireland, (viii) Italy, (ix) Netherlands, (x) Norway, (xi) Portugal, (xii) Spain, (xiii) Sweden, (xiv) Switzerland and (xv) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hold no information for the foreign countries listed. Audible warning devices have never been compulsory for bicycles in this country.

Bicyclists

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department is currently funding any research into the relationship between the safety of cyclists and alcohol consumption by the cyclist.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As part of the regular monitoring of blood alcohol levels in road traffic accident fatalities, the distribution of alcohol levels in adult pedal cyclists killed (that is those aged 16 years or over) is recorded. The latest figures available (for 1984) are:

|---|---|
| 9 | 17 |
| 50 | 12 |
| 80 | 8 |
| 100 | 6 |
| 150 | 4 |
| 200 | 1 |

Total number of adult cyclists killed in 1984 was 220.

No specific study of the relationship between the safety of cyclists and their alcohol consumption is planned.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for Great Britain in 1985 the number of children aged 16 or under who were (i) killed and (ii) injured while riding pedal cycles.

Children aged 16 or less,
Great Britain: 1985

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Injured | 10,980 |

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report for Great Britain in 1985 the total number of cyclists (i) killed and (ii) injured in road accidents.

Great Britain 1985

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Injured | 26,712 |

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Moore: Most types of paper in use in my Department contain varying amounts of British recycled paper, though not letterheads.

Bus Services

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report, the studies that his Department is funding into the deregulation of bus services, including details of which geographical areas are being considered.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are sponsoring an extensive programme of research into the deregulation of bus services. This includes a series of studies of particular areas: Nottingham; the Medway Towns; Blackburn; West Wiltshire; and also (jointly with the Welsh Office) West Glamorgan, and parts of Powys and Clwyd. These studies are all being conducted by consultants on behalf of the Transport and Road Research Laboratory. In addition, the laboratory is conducting studies with the passenger transport executives in Tyne and Wear, Greater Manchester, West Yorkshire, Merseyside, West Midlands and Strathclyde. Similar studies are being financed by the Scottish Office, with a contribution from my Department.

Westminster Bridge

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) under what authority he has instructed the London borough of Lambeth to close the space in the centre island of Westminster Bridge road opposite Belvedere road;

(2) under what authority he has instructed the traffic control systems unit to remove the cycle signals on Westminster Bridge road at is junction with Belvedere road;

(3) under what authority he has called in the pedestrian crossing on Westminster Bridge road opposite Belvedere road for special approval;

(4) under what authority the facility for cyclists to switch on lights at the cycle facility on Westminster Bridge road was disconnected.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has given no such instructions. The Secretary of State's approval for non-standard crossings is a national requirement under the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984. While discussions have been going on about a safe cycle facility at this crossing, we have provided advice about measures to avoid the incomplete facility causing a road safety hazard. The cycle facility has never been connected. I understand that the form of the facility has now been agreed.

Skips (Lighting)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information is held by his Department on fatalities and injuries in which there was contact with unlit or badly lit skips on the highway.

National Bus Company

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the sale of National Bus Company subsidiaries, he has attached any conditions on the sale of property or on the use of property for development, other than for transport use.

Mr. Moore: Properties surplus to operational requirements are being removed from the subsidiaries and sold separately. Where an operational property has a potentially high alternative use value which could be realised in later years by redevelopment, or relocation of the subsidiary's activity, the National Bus Company is imposing a mortgage charge which secures for the taxpayer a substantial share of any future development gain.

Airlines (Passenger Control)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any joint action is proposed with all international airlines to obtain an agreed and firm policy on banning drunks from flying; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In the case of all aircraft in the United Kingdom, whether United Kingdom or foreign registered, it is already an offence under the Air Navigation Order 1985 for any person to act recklessly or negligently in a manner likely to endanger an aircraft or any person therein; to enter any aircraft when drunk; or to be drunk while on board.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance is issued by the Civil Aviation Authority regarding the authority of the captain of an aircraft to make the final decision on the fitness of a passenger to fly without endangering other passengers and the aircraft and on his right to allocate seats in the interests of safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Guidance is unnecessary. The duties and powers of the commander of any United Kingdom-registered aircraft are governed by the Air Navigation Order 1985. The commander may give any lawful command to secure the safety of his aircraft or the passengers and property carried. The order requires that any person in a United Kingdom-registered aircraft must obey all such commands. In addition, section 94 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 gives effect to the Tokyo convention on offences and certain other acts committed on board aircraft. Under the Act the commander of an aircraft in flight may take reasonable measures in respect of a person, including restraint, to protect the safety of the aircraft, persons or property on board, to maintain good order and discipline, and to enable the disembarkation of that person.

Motor Cyclists

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report in rank order (a) the motor cycle casualties per million of the population and (b) the number of motor cycle casualties per 1,000 vehicles for Austria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Finland, Germany, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1987, col. 385]: Because of the differences in definition of road casualties, the only meaningful comparison is of road deaths. The figures are for 1984 and are given separately for motor cycles and mopeds. For clarity, table (b) shows death per 10,000 vehicles licensed.

A419 (Blunsdon—Cricklade)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the dualling of the A419 Blunsdon to Cricklade, to be commenced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work on dualling the A419 between Blunsdon and Cricklade started earlier this month and is expected to take 18 months.

Roads (Appearance)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of his Department's national initiative to improve the appearance of roads in England.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We announced a national initiative to improve the roadside environment on 15 December 1986, at column 402. The Department also wrote to local authorities in England encouraging them to promote suitable projects under this initiative. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the letter. The scheme is intended to improve the appearance of roads by landscaping, tree planting, and litter clearance and provide better amenities for motorists. This will be achieved through the use of the community programme and will be over and above the normal programmes of the Department and local authorities.

Remould Tyres

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will be arranging for departmental publicity aimed at users of remould tyres manufactured by Messrs. Arvoland of Cambridge;

(2) if, pursuant to his answer of 22 January, he is satisfied with the operation of the voluntary code of practice for tyre recalls in its application in the case of Arvoland after that firm went into receivership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am satisfied with the operation of the code of practice in this case. The receivers are co-operating with the Department in prohibiting the further sale of these tyres. The Department will shortly issue a press statement in accordance with the code of practice on tyre recalls.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Moore: There can be no doubt about the legality of an Act of Parliament, nor can an Act be challenged in the courts. I assume that the hon. Member intends to ask about occasions when there has been some doubt about, or there have been challenges in the courts to, ministerial action in pursuance of legislation introduced since June 1979.

One Bill for an amending Act has been introduced in that period by the Secretary of State for Transport, namely, the London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill.

No specific records are kept of the information requested about orders, which category is assumed to include all forms of legislative statutory instruments. Further, the functions relating to merchant shipping and civil aviation have been my responsibility only since June 1983. The following answer is therefore based on immediately available information. It excludes statutory instruments which, while being within the enabling powers, were amended or withdrawn on account of some defect or error in drafting or preparation.

No successful challenges have been made in the courts to legislative statutory instruments made by my Department. There have been five occasions on which instruments have been amended or withdrawn because of some legal doubt concerning them.

General Lighthouse Authorities.

Sir E. du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will instruct the General Lighthouse Authorities to contain their costs in the coming year within the levels which could be financed by an increase in light dues not exceeding the rise in the retail prices index.

Mr. Moore: I am considering this matter carefully, and I will make a statement shortly.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Deaf People (Teachers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the total number of people employed as teachers of the deaf; if he will analyse what proportion of these admitted into training courses for teaching the deaf come from (a) certified teachers with experience in teaching, (b) qualified teachers direct from college or university, (c) non-certified graduates, (d) undergraduates and (e) other; what effect he estimates the implementation of the White Paper, "Better Schools", would have on the numbers of teachers of the deaf being trained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mrs. Rumbold: None at present. I understand that British-made recycled paper suitable for these purposes is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office but that supplies are limited and prices uncompetitive compared with a suitable general purpose woodfree printing and writing quality paper. I understand further that Her Majesty's Stationery Office will continue to encourage the greater use of recycled fibre in the paper it purchases.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science who organised the meeting on city technology colleges attended by Mr. Hedger from his Department in York on 12 December; what was the cost to Government funds of this meeting; what other meetings of a similar type have been attended by his officials; and if he will list the organisers, locations and cost to Her Majesty's Government in each case.

Mrs. Rumbold: The meeting was organised by my hon. Friend the Member for York (Mr. Gregory). It was chaired by a member of the York chamber of trade and commerce and its purpose was to give parents and members of the local business community the opportunity to hear further details of my proposals for city technology colleges. The marginal cost to the Department's Vote was £138·15 for travel and other expenses. Three meetings with a similar purpose have been attended by officials of the Department in Birmingham, Norwich and Coventry. Each of them was organised by a local chamber of commerce. The marginal costs to the Department were £49·65, £49·05 and £41·25 respectively. These figures do not include the cost of official time, since the visits formed part of the normal work of the Department.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions he has had concerning potential locations of the city technology college originally proposed for Moss Side, Manchester; what alternative locations were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has considered a number of issues relating to the proposed city technology college in Manchester, including its location. It would be inappropriate to reveal the details of these discussions; or to make a statement until further progress has been made.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he proposes to discuss the location of the city technology college in the Manchester area with Trafford district council.

Mrs. Rumbold: Neither I nor my right hon. Friend have at present plans to do so, but I am very willing to consider any suggestions which the district council may wish to make.

Young Children

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will republish the figures in Statistical Bulletin 16/86 on international statistical comparison of the participation in education and care of three to six-year-olds, using the definitions normally used in the United Kingdom for pre-school education and care.

Mr. Dunn: The figures in "Statistical Bulletin 16/86", for three to four-year-olds, also given in my answer of 12 January to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Rathbone), at column 30, are on the basis usually used for pre-school education in the United Kingdom except that a very small number of two-year-olds (usually included) have been excluded for consistency with other countries. If included they would add one percentage point to the 43 per cent. quoted in the statistical bulletin.

Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table on the same basis as table 2.10 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 9143-II, with all figures converted to 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The information is set out in the table. The figures are those set out in Cmnd. 9143, revalued using the GDP (market prices) deflator and rounded to the nearest £1 million.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to introduce amending legislation to (a) legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Education (Fees and Awards) Act 1983 was introduced to make provision with respect to the fees to be charged by universities and other institutions to students not having the requisite connection with the United Kingdom and for the exclusion of such students from eligibility for certain discretionary awards, following the decision of the House of Lords in R v. Barnet London Borough Council Ex parte Nilish Shah [1983] 2AC 309 that the phrase "ordinarily resident", in section 1 of the Education Act 1962 had a meaning other than that which it had previously been held to have. Regulations made under sections 1 and 3 of that Act were also changed in consequence of that decision.

The Block Grant (Education Adjustments) (England) Regulations 1985 (S.I. 1985/2030) included a new formula for calculating the contributions of local authorities in relation to expenditure on advanced further education, following the decision of the Divisional Court in R v. Secretary of State for Education and Science, Ex Parte Inner London Education Authority (1985) The Times 20 June.

Primary Schools

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information is available to his Department on the date of construction of each unremodelled primary school constructed before 1903 and still in use;

(2) if he will publish a list showing for each local education authority in England (a) the number of unremodelled primary schools constructed before 1903, (b) the number of places in such schools, (c) the number of such places in schools considered by the authority to serve areas of educational and social disadvantage and (d) the allocation of capital expenditure 1987-88 made in respect of primary school projects other than provision of basic need; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not have reliable up-to-date information on (a), (b) or (c). On (d) LEAs do not receive capital allocations for individual projects: a single block allocation is made to each LEA in respect of all its schools prescribed capital expenditure.

Primary and Secondary Schools (Unit Costs)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Eucation and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the estimated unit cost in 1985-86 for (a) maintained primary schools and (b) maintained secondary schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: On the basis of an apportionment of local education authorities' budgeted expenditure on education and attributing to 1985-86 back pay owed for that year, I estimate that the net recurrent expenditures per pupil in England were £810 in maintained primary schools and £1,200 in secondary schools. I would hope to have firm figures before Easter, but a few local education authorities have not yet reported their actual expenditure in 1985-86.

I take this opportunity to correct an error in table 3.12.6 of the Government's expenditure plans (Cmnd. 56). The percentage increase in real terms expenditure per pupil over the 1979-80 level is 18 per cent. for 1984-85, and is estimated at 22 per cent. for 1985-86, rather than the figures of 20 per cent. for the former year, and 24 per cent. for the latter, given in the table.

PRIME MINISTER

European Community

Mr. Gould asked the Prime Minister whether she will bring up to date the figures given in her written answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) dated 19 July 1985, Official Report, columns 286-87, comparing the increase in European Economic Community spending with other increases; whether she is satisfied with the outcome for 1986 and the forecast for 1987; and if she will make a statement.

(i) Percentage increase in European Community spending between 1980 and 1985: 75·7 per cent.

(ii) Percentage increase in the United Kingdom's gross contribution between 1980 and 1985: 100·3 per cent. (before taking account of the United Kingdom's 1000 mecu abatement in the 1985 budget) or 68·8 per cent. (after taking it into account).

(iii) Percentage increase in United Kingdom general Government expenditure for the financial years 1980-81 to 1985-86: 46·3 per cent.

The rapid increase in Community expenditure in 1986, though regrettable, was due in large part to enlargement and the exceptional circumstance of the rapid and substantial fall in the value of the dollar. In the Government's view, the budget for 1987 must respect budget discipline. No budget has yet been agreed.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister whether the outturn for the EEC budget for 1985 was consistent with the agreements reached at Fontainebleau; whether the same is expected to apply of 1986 and 1987; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Yes. The United Kingdom received an abatement of 1000 mecu (£605 million) from the 1985 budget in respect of 1984 and 1900 mecu (£1,250 million) from the 1986 budget in respect of 1985. The Community has not yet adopted a budget for 1987.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Prime Minister what use her office makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

The Prime Minister: This stationery is obtained from Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The contracts under which Her Majesty's Stationery Office purchases paper encourage the use of recycled paper in manufacture. The items used by my office are all British made, but none is wholly from recycled material.

Ministerial Telephone Numbers

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister how many of the ministerial telephone numbers given in the October 1986 edition of "List of Ministerial Responsibilities" have changed since it was published.

The Prime Minister: The telephone numbers of 18 London-based Ministers have changed, together with the London numbers of Scottish and Welsh Office Ministers. These changes reflect the replacement of the 233 exchange by the new 270 exchange; the new number is given to those who call the old 233 exchange.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Prime Minister when a new edition of the Cabinet Office publication called "List of Ministerial Responsibilities", giving up-to-date ministerial telephone numbers altered since the October 1986 edition, will be available.

The Prime Minister: The "List of Ministerial Responsibilities" is published annually at the end of the summer recess, with further editions during the year if there are substantial changes in ministerial appointments. A new edition is not called for at present. However, further to his reply of 20 January, column 467, my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal has now arranged for sections of the Palace of Westminster directory to be updated, including the new numbers, and these will be available in approximately two weeks' time.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government will provide additional funds for the appointment of experts to advise Ministers in Departments other than the Department of Health and Social Security on AIDS.

The Prime Minister: The current arrangements ensure that all Ministers get any scientific advice which they need on AIDS from their chief medical officer. The Northern Ireland, Scottish and Welsh Offices have their own chief medical officers. All other departments look to the chief medical officer of the Department of Health and Social Security. I am satisfied that these arrangements are fully effective in providing expert advice for Ministers in all Departments.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister if she will publish a table showing forecast spending at 1986 prices on regional selective assistance in England, Scotland and Wales and for each region of England for each year until 1989-90.

The Prime Minister: The provision for regional selective assistance expenditure in England, Scotland and Wales in the current year, and in future years as incorporated in the public expenditure White Paper, adjusted to 1986 prices[1], is as follows:

| | 1986-87 | 1987-88 | 1988-89 | 1989-90 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| England | 88 | 118 | 133 | 113 |
| Scotland | 43 | 50 | 50 | 39 |
| Wales | 34 | 43 | 42 | 42 |
| TOTAL | 165 | 211 | 225 | 194 |

[1] Expenditure on a 1986 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.

It is not possible to provide a breakdown by English region as estimates of regional assistance are produced only for England as a whole.

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister, when she first learned of the existence of (a) the series of British Broadcasting Corporation's programmes "The Secret Society" and (b) the programme on the Zircon satellite system.

The Prime Minister: The Government became aware, in a general sense, of the BBC's plan for one or more programmes in the summer of 1986; and of the intention to include specific material on a secret defence project in October 1986. Discussions then took place between the Government and the BBC, which subsequently decided on grounds of national security not to show the material on the project.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNICEF

Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to provide further assistance to UNICEF for mother and child care projects.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. I have just agreed to give UNICEF an extra £5 million for immediate use in mother and child care programmes. This brings our contribution to UNICEF to £13·07 million since the beginning of 1986.

EC (Food Aid)

Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on measures to reform the European Community food aid programme agreed in Brussels in December.

Mr. Chris Patten: The new regulation governing the policy and management of European Community food aid was adopted by the Council on 22 December after agreement was reached with the European Parliament. I expect it to have the following main effects:

(a) The legal basis for food aid will cease to be article 43 of the Treaty of Rome (which established the common agricultural policy).
(b) Food aid now will need to be justified on the grounds that it meets the needs of recipient countries rather than as a means of surplus disposal.
(c) It is to be better integrated with other forms of Community development assistance.
(d) Procedures will be streamlined, particularly for emergencies.
(e) There will be new arrangements for purchasing food aid from other developing countries.

This is fully in line with the motion agreed by the House on 9 December, column 294.

Scientific Units

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for the Overseas Development Administration's scientific units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have decided to integrate the Tropical Development and Research Institute (TDRI) and the Land Resource Development Centre (LRDC) with effect from 1 September 1987; and to assign to the director professional responsibility for members of the corps of specialists in certain natural resources disciplines. The combined organisation will be known as the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute (ODNRI) and will have the following mandate:

> To promote the sustainable development of the natural resources sector in developing countries through:
> - assessment of land and water resources;
> - pilot-scale development projects;
> - applied research in the fields of pest control andof crop and animal processing, storage and marketing;
> - assessment of the environmental consequences of development projects.

Efficiency savings achieved by rationalising the support services for the new organisation will provide scope for further resources to be allocated to scientific and operational programmes.

The relocation of the ODA's scientific staff to a single site, due to take place in 1988, will bring significant professional benefits. The changes I am announcing today are intended to build on this, and to strengthen the important contribution which the staff make to our aid effort in the natural resources sector.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal (Experiments)

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards animal experimentation in the light of the recommendations and conclusions reached in the pamphlet, "The use of Non-Human Primates as Laboratory Animals in Great Britain", published jointly by the Fund for Replacement of Animals in Medical Experiments and the Committee for the Reform of Animal Experimentation, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The welfare of animals used for experimental or other scientific purposes is safeguarded by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, the main provisions of which came into force on 1 January this year. We shall give full and careful consideration to the proposals in the recent pamphlet on the use of non-human primates in research and in due course notify both the Fund for the Replacement of Animals in Medical Experiments and Committee for the Reform of Animal Experiments of our conclusions.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Hurd: None. The price of the British-made recycled paper available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office, from which the Home Office obtains its supplies of stationery, is uncompetitive when compared with a general purpose woodfree paper of suitable quality.

Automatic Cameras (Traffic Lights)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce automatic cameras to monitor observance of traffic lights by motorists, together with the appropriate procedures for the notification and charging of offenders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The scope for improving the efficiency and effectiveness of road traffic law enforcement through the further use of technology, and any necessary legislative changes, is being considered by the Road Traffic Law Review. The review's report is expected later this year.

Bail (London)

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the annual cost to public funds of court time and other resources wasted by the failure of defendants to answer to their bail in courts in Greater London.

Mr. Mellor: Information on which an estimate could be based is not centrally available and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases occur daily on average within the Metropolitan police area in which recognisances have been estreated for failure to answer to bail; and what is the average penalty thus imposed.

Mr. Stanbrook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many defendants in cases before courts in the Metropolitan police area are reported to the police as having failed to answer to their bail on average every day on which courts are sitting.

Mr. Mellor: The information recorded centrally indicates that in the Metropolitan police area in 1985 about 13,000 persons failed to appear at magistrates' courts having been bailed either by the police or by the court.

Myra Hindley

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constables concerned about (a) the total cost of Myra Hindley's visit to Saddleworth Moor, (b) the breakdown of the number of officers from each force involved in the operation, namely Greater Manchester police, Lancashire constabulary, West Yorkshire police, Kent constabulary, and the Metropolitan police, (c) the cost of the overtime worked, (d) the cost of the helicopter that was used during the operation, (e) the cost of providing security for Myra Hindley and (f) the transport costs for the individual police forces involved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to my previous answers on this matter on 12 January 1987, at column 64, and on 19 January 1987, at column 358. Police forces regularly assist each other in the conduct of criminal investigations and the total cost of such operations cannot readily be distinguished from the costs of other normal police work.

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people seeking admission to the United Kingdom are currently being detained; and if he will list their nationalities and the establishments where they are being held.

Mr. Waddington: On the night of 22-23 January 1987 the numbers were as follows:

| Location and Nationality | Number detained |
|---|---|
| Harmondsworth | |
| Sri Lanka | 22 |
| Iran | 20 |

Hon. Member for Gower (Correspondence)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now reply to the letter sent to him on 17 November 1986 by the hon. Member for Gower regarding a constituent serving a two and a half year prison sentence.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend the Earl of Caithness replied to the hon. Member's letter on 15 January.

Overseas Voters

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what terms and conditions a list of overseas voters is available to political parties; and if any political party has been supplied with such a list.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no centrally maintained list of overseas electors.

The electoral registration officer of each constituency is required to supply, on request and free of charge, four copies of the list of overseas electors for the constituency to a prospective candidate or to a person acting on his behalf, such copies may be requested at any time, but may not be supplied more than once. Information about the number of candidates so supplied is not recorded centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Cherry Groce

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to how much alcohol Inspector Lovelock had been drinking within the time limits proscribed by Metropolitan police regulations before the search operation which led to the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to what hours had been worked by Inspector Lovelock on the day before the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce; and how many hours this constituted over and above a normal working day;

(3) if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to whether a shotgun recovered by police prior to the search operation which led to the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce was (a) known to have been used by and (b) presumed to have belonged to, Michael Groce; and what information was available on these matters to (i) Inspector Lovelock or (ii) other relevant officers before the search of her home which led to the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce;

(4) if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to on what evidence or basis it was assumed that Michael Groce would be in his mother's home at the time of the search operation; and on how many occasions he had been seen or known to use the premises of her home before the search operation which led to the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce;

(5) if he will call for a report from the Metropolitan Police Commissioner as to whether he will publish the Metropolitan police inquiry's report concerning the role and behaviour of Inspector Lovelock in the events which led to the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Groce.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police Complaints Authority has approved the proposal of the chief constable of Hertfordshire that nine Hertfordshire officers who were involved in the investigation of which the raid on Mrs.

Groce's home formed part should be charged with disciplinary offences. Following Inspector Lovelock's trial, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis will shortly submit proposals to the Police Complaints Authority on whether disciplinary charges should be brought against any of his officers. It would be wrong for me to intervene at this stage on matters which could be at issue in disciplinary proceedings.

Drugs

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made towards obtaining a Europewide agreement on the confiscation of the assets of convicted drug traffickers.

Mr. Mellor: Within the Council of Europe Pompidou Group proposals have been drawn up for a range of measures relating to the tracing, freezing and confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking which might be included in a multilateral agreement among European states. Ministers of the group of their meeting on 20-21 January decided that, while the group should continue to examine such problems as the enforcement in one country of court orders made in another, they would press for action within the United Nations towards a worldwide convention which would include provisions in this field.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on progress made towards obtaining a Europewide agreement to stop and search ships suspected of carrying drugs;

(2) if he will make a statement on progress made towards obtaining a Europewide agreement that any one country may stop and search ships suspected of carrying drugs without the consent of the flag state.

Mr. Mellor: Substantial progress has been made within the Council of Europe's Pompidou Group on the preparation of a convention setting out the principles of legal co-operation in this area. Some work has also been done on the technical and operational measures which might be considered by future contracting parties for inclusion in bilateral agreements.

The United Nations Commission on Narcotic Drugs will be examining next month a draft worldwide convention on drug trafficking which contains provisions aimed at the suppression of illicit traffic by sea.

Amphetamines

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on progress made towards controlling the supply of chemical substances, where it is believed amphetamines may be produced from them.

Mr. Mellor: Within the United Kingdom good progress is being made through the collaborative efforts of the enforcement agencies to attack illicit manufacture and supply. At the international level, proposals have been included in the draft of a new United Nations convention on drug trafficking, which will be discussed at next month's session of the UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Mellor: On the basis of the readily available information, I am not aware of any such primary legislation, but in 1985, following a decision of the European court of Human Rights, my right hon. and learned Friend, the then Home Secretary, introduced amending immigration rules to remove provisions which discriminated on grounds of sex. There have been several occasions in the period where primary or subordinate legislation has been amended because it had been found to contain a mistake or to produce an unitended result, but these were not occasions where there were doubts about legality or there had been a successful challenge in the courts.

Chief Constable of Greater Manchester

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his discussions on 22 January with the chief constable of Greater Manchester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Anderton and representatives of the Greater Manchester police authority separately met senior officials of the Department and her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary on the afternoon of 21 January. A joint meeting will take place on 27 January.

Manchester University (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the inquiry by the Avon and Somerset police concerning the complaint against Greater Manchester police following the visit of his predecessor as the Home Secretary, the right hon. and learned Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Brittan), to Manchester university.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the report of the inquiry is under consideration by the Director of Public Prosecutions, who has asked that certain further questions be asked of a small number of witnesses. A supplementary report will be forwarded to the Director shortly.

Criminal Injuries

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to extend the use of computers in the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board particularly for the calculation of loss of earnings and other benefits.

Mr. Mellor: A feasibility study has established the scope for automation of some routine aspects of the board's work. The Home Office is now carrying out a full study to identify the systems required. The calculation of loss of earnings and benefits is complex, and the board is examining whether any simplification of this function is possible before considering whether it can be automated.

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state for the next three financial years, at constant prices for England and Wales (a) the estimated amount to be paid to victims of violence under the criminal injuries compensation scheme, (b) the amount allocated to administration of the scheme and (c) the amount allocated to local victims support schemes giving in each case the estimated increase over 1986-87.

Planned Provision for Criminal Injuries Compensation and Victim Support, 1987-88 to 1989-90

| | 1987-88 | 1988-89 | 1989-90 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Criminal Injuries | | | |
| (a) Compensation provision | 60,700 | 61,800 | 66,600 |
| Increase over 1986-87[1] | 24,900 | 26,000 | 30,800 |
| (b) Administration provision | 5,300 | 6,400 | 6,700 |
| Increase over 1986-87[1] | 1,100 | 2,200 | 2,500 |
| Victims support | | | |
| (c) Local victims support schemes provision | 2,000 | 2,900 | 3,800 |
| Increase over 1986-87[1] | 1,900 | 2,800 | 3,700 |

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to the answer of 18 December, Official Report, column 645, he will specify the operators and the relevant authorities responsible for emergency arrangements in relation to the accident to a military convoy in Wiltshire on 10 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Emergency arrangements in relation to the accident on 10 January were the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

Ethnic Minorities

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the applications he has received for funding of posts under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since he issued draft revised administrative guidelines for section 11 grants on 26 March 1986; and if he will state, against each application, his reasons for not granting section 11 funding.

Mr. Waddington: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Box Junctions

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there have been any recent successful prosecutions (a) in London and (b) elsewhere of drivers obstructing the flow of traffic on yellow cross-hatched box junctions.

Any such offences would not be recorded separately from other offences of neglect of traffic directions.

Greater Manchester (Civil Defence)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the severe financial restrictions the Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority is facing on both revenue and capital accounts; what representations he has received on the matter; if he will now increase the authority's expenditure limit and capital allocation for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 16 December 1986, c. 486]: As the right hon. Member is aware, for 1987-88 it is the Government's intention that the precept maxima for the joint fire and civil defence authorities including Greater Manchester should be determined on the basis of the formula in paragraph 2*(a)* of schedule 2 to the Local Government Finance Bill at present before the House. In the case of the Greater Manchester authority its precept maximum derived from the formula is 9·75p in the pound.The authority was informed of this on 13 January.

The authority was informed of its 1987-88 capital allocation of £2·172 million by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 18 December 1986.

We have received written representations from and have had meetings with the Greater Manchester fire and civil defence authority about these matters; and my hon. Friend the Minister of State, the Earl of Caithness, met a number of hon. Members on 12 January.

Citizens Band Radio

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what European legislation regulates citizens band radio in the United Kingdom; what information he has as to frequencies used in the European Community for this purpose; when Her Majesty's Government intend to comply with such legislation; when he intends to authorise the use of AM single side-band; what representations he has received on this matter from (a) citizens band users in the United Kingdom, and (b) other European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

No European legislation regulates CB in the United Kingdom: the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 and its regulations are the appropriate United Kingdom legislation. There is, however, a European initiative to harmonise CB and the Conference of European Posts and Telecommunications has produced a recommendation T/R 20-02 which provides for a common frequency band at 26·965 — 27·405 MHz. The Government hope to adopt this recommendation later this year.

My Department has had no representations from other European countries, but does meet regularly with representatives of United Kingdom CB radio users and is aware of the desire of a few to use AM. My Department has no intention of authorising AM as it is more likely to cause interference to other users of radio than is the case with FM (frequency modulation) sets. The harmonised CEPT recommendation provides for FM only.

Transport International Routier

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider making representation to the Transport International Routier to change the rules that allow Russian and European lorries to cross the mainland European borders without Her Majesty's Customs and Excise inspection; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have no jurisdiction outside the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of how an Inner London health authority is participating in the community programme; and if he will name the authority concerned.

Mr. Lee: The Tower Hamlets health authority, Wandsworth health authority and Newham district health authority all participate in the community programme.

In Tower Hamlets, the health authority runs a small community programme agency which is based on Bethnal Green hospital. It operates four projects involving the design of posters and leaflets dealing with health topics, crafts for the disabled, and the landscaping of gardens. In Wandsworth, the health authority acts as an independent sponsor of a small gardening project, which is based at the Gardiner Hill unit of Springfield hospital. In Newham, the district health authority does not operate any projects itself but has decided it will refer potential projects to Interface, a voluntary agency which will operate projects on behalf of the health authority.

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General what percentage of the places in the community programme are on schemes managed by local authorities.

Mr. Lee: On 12 December 1986, the latest date for which statistics are available, there were 247,607 community programme filled places on which 40·6 per cent. were managed by local authorities.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Paymaster General what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Lee: Supplies of letterhead stationery and notepads procured by the Department do not contain any British recycled paper. Recycled paper is substantially more expensive than general purpose paper.

Work Leave

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to introduce a statutory minimum number of 24 days annual work leave entitlement per year.

Mr. Lee: No. Conditions of employment including holidays entitlement are a matter for the parties concerned. Moreover, any statutory minimum holiday entitlement would place additional costs and burdens on employers and would be harmful to jobs.

Jobcentres

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General (1) what was the target date for completion of (a) Bolton jobcentre and (b) jobcentres in the north-west region; what stage computerisation has now reached in (i) Bolton and (ii) the north-west region; what are the new target dates for completion; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many jobs are likely to be saved by the introduction of computerisation at (a) Bolton jobcentre and (b) jobcentres in the north-west region; if there will be reduction in staffing levels prior to the coming into full operation of computers; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what are the latest estimated costs of introducing computers in (a) Bolton jobcentres and (b) north-west region jobcentres; whether these costs will be met from within existing cash limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Analysis of the labour force survey for the spring of 1985 suggests that in Great Britain there were of the order of 100,000 women with children aged under one year who were claiming unemployment benefit, or supplementary allowances or national insurance credits as an unemployed person at an unemployment benefit office.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report a table giving for the Norwich, North constituency (a) the population and (b) the number of unemployed as at (i) 1 January and (ii) 1 July for each year from 1974 to date.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the library. The only source of information on the population in parliamentary constituencies is the decennial census of population. The 1981 census of population identified a population of 82,144 present on census night in Norwich, North.

The following table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Norwich, North on count dates closest to 1 January and 1 July. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

|---|---|
| 14 July 1983 | 3,412 |
| 12 January 1984 | 3,565 |
| 12 July 1984 | 3,483 |
| 10 January 1985 | 3,833 |
| 11 July 1985 | 3,810 |
| 9 January 1986 | 4,210 |
| 10 July 1986 | 3,964 |

Mr. Winnick asked the Paymaster General which region in the United Kingdom has lost the highest number of jobs since May 1979; and if he will give the percentage unemployed in that region in 1979 and now.

Mr. Lee: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates. Figures are not available for May 1979. Between June 1979 and June 1986, the largest net decrease in the size of the civilian employed labour force (employees in employment plus the self-employed) occurred in the north-west region.

In June 1979, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the north-west region represented 5·3 per cent. of the working population. The corresponding figure for December 1986 was 13·6 per cent.

Job Training Schemes

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) of 16 January, Official Report, column 334, about new job training schemes, if he will give, for each of the revised arrangements listed, the date on which they will be or have been implemented in the Dundee pilot scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The revised arrangements apply to anyone beginning training on or after 26 January 1987.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General (1) pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) of 16 January, Official Report, column 334, in the case of those receiving supplementary benefit, what will be the rate of the training allowance paid; what will be the amount of top up supplement when those new schemes will take effect; and if he will make a statement on the way in which the new scheme will be a simplification of the old scheme;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 16 January, Official Report, column 334, what will be the level of the various training allowances paid after 1 April, and if under 25-year-old trainees on the job training scheme will receive more than they would otherwise on the new reduced rate of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The rate of training allowance will normally be the same as the amount of unemployment benefit last paid or be at a fixed amount below the non-householder scale rate in the case of those whose last payment was supplementary benefit. Where a trainee was getting more when unemployed supplementary benefit paid as a training supplement will make up the difference.

The basic unemployment benefit rates and hence training allowances rates are £30·80 (adult) and £49·80 (adult plus adult dependant). From April these rates will go up to £31·45 and £50·85 respectively. The rates of supplementary benefit and hence training supplement depend on the circumstances of individuals and will vary accordingly. Training supplement will be uprated in line with supplementary benefit.

Normally the combined rate of training allowance and training supplement will be the same as the rate of unemployment/supplementary benefit which would have been paid if the trainee had remained unemployed. There are no changes associated with the April uprating which will decrease the amount paid to trainees under 25.

The reason for continuing payment of supplementary benefit by way of training supplement is to ensure that entitlement to certificated housing benefit and other passported benefits such as milk tokens and free school meals continues during training. The original pilot scheme did not provide for any part of the allowance to be paid as supplementary benefit with the result that entitlement to certificated housing benefit stopped when training started. Trainees in the pilot scheme were still entitled to help but had to make a claim for standard housing benefit from their local authority. The switch from one to another and similar changes in claiming other passported benefits was a disincentive. The new arrangements will avoid the potential for disruption by normally allowing arrangements made before [illegible]g to continue unchanged.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has not introduced any amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 for either of the reasons specified in the question.

1. The Employment Agencies Act 1973 (Exemption) Regulations 1984 (S.I. 1984/490) were revoked and replaced by the Employment Agencies Act 1973 (Exemption) (No. 2) Regulations 1984 (S.I. 1984/978).
2. The Notification of New Substances Regulations 1982 (S.I. 1982/1496) were amended by the Notification of New Substances (Amendment) Regulations 1986 (S.I. 1986/890).
3. The Petroleum (Regulation) Acts 1928 and 1936 (Fees) Regulations 1981 (S.I. 1981/1333) were amended by the Petroleum (Regulation) Acts 1928 and 1936 (Fees) (Amendment) Regulations 1981 (S.I. 1981/1652).

Disciplinary Procedures (Code of Practice)

Mr. Bowen Wells asked the Paymaster General if a decision has been reached on the draft ACAS code of practice on disciplinary procedures.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My right hon. and noble Friend has decided, after careful consideration, that he cannot approve the draft. He has written to the chairman of the ACAS in the following terms:

Sir Pat Lowry CBE
Chairman
Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service
11/12 St James's Square
London SW1Y 4LA

26 January 1987

On 30 July 1986 you sent me a draft Code of Practice on Disciplinary and Related Procedures which would, if approved, take the place of the 1977 Code of Practice on Disciplinary Practice and Procedures in Employment. Under the Employment Protection Act 1975, section 6, I am required either to approve the draft and lay it before Parliament or, if I do not approve of it, to publish details of my reasons for that.

I appreciate the work which ACAS has put into preparing the draft and I welcome the proposals to revise the 1977 Code. I cannot, however, approve the draft you sent me for the following reasons:

(1) The purpose of the Code is to improve industrial relations. I agree that good disciplinary practices and procedures can help greatly to avoid unnecessary disputes and promote a productive working environment. For that reason it is vital for the Code to be directed at those employers and employees who stand most to benefit from it.

The length of the draft, its complexity and the language it uses are not designed to attract employers and employees to read and adhere to it. I believe that the code should be a reasonably short sensible document of a kind likely to be referred to by shop-floor mananagment and workers. The present draft seems to be aimed primarily at lawyers and personnel managers in larger firms.

(2) Good industrial relations depend on acceptance by employer and employee alike of their responsibilities. The draft gives insufficient weight to the role of employees;

(3) It is the essence of any code to provide a statement of accepted good practice which it is reasonable to expect of those to whom it applies. A large proportion of the employers to whom the new Code would apply are small firms who could not reasonably be expected (as the draft acknowledges) to adopt all the provisions of the Code, yet the draft does not contain a clear statement of which elements of the Code are to be taken to apply even to the smallest firms;

(4) The draft contains a mixture of descriptions of statute law, guidance based on case law and advice with no such legal origin but the reader cannot tell from the text which kind of guidance is which. It is important that there be clarity about legal obligations;

(5) I have borne in mind in considering the draft, a number of points made in the Lords debate on Codes earlier this year and these are reflected in the reasons I have given for rejecting it. There is a wider issue here. Once there is a Code, Tribunals must take account of it. Case law then develops on the back of the code. There is then pressure to revise the Code to keep up with the guidance in the caselaw but that process will inevitably lead to ever increasing detail in the Code. I do not think the draft Code submitted is consistent with all our efforts to prevent excessive legalism from developing in this area of industrial disputes.

I have discussed this matter with my colleague the Paymaster General who is closely involved with our industrial relations policy and consulted him before reaching my decision. We recognise that this will be a disappointment. We should like to invite ACAS to consider the matter again in the light of this response and to make a further proposals for a revised Code. We will, of course, be very happy to discuss with you any of the issues this raises. We hope we shall be able to make common cause in producing to Parliament a revision which better meets our common objective — to promote better industrial relations.

This letter will be published in a Press Release, in response to a Parliamentary Question this afternoon, and a copy of it will be sent to the Chairman of the Select Committee on Employment.

Benefits

Mr. Weetch asked the Paymaster General how many people living [illegible] Ipswich have been refused benefit after being interviewed by his officials under the availability for work test.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information is not available in the form asked for. The improved procedures, which are designed to ensure that benefits are paid only to claimants who satisfy the long-standing legal requirement of being available for work, were introduced into the Ipswich unemployment benefit offices, which include the part-time offices at Felixstowe, Woodbridge and Leistone, on 19 November 1986. By 26 December 1986, the latest date for which information is available, 12 claimants have been disallowed benefit by the independent adjudicating authorities because they were not available for work.

Employment Measures

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report the percentage of those long-term unemployed leaving the unemployment register after being contacted through the restart scheme, who have (a) been added to the sickness register or (b) added to the disablement register; and if he will further break down the latter figure, according to sex and age groups (i) under 24 years, (ii), 25 years to 44 years, (iii) 45 years to 59 years and (iv) over 60 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1987, c. 481.]: There is no such thing as a sickness register. We do not know how many people who register as disabled have previously had an interview under the restart programme but I see no casual connection between the two. I have received many groundless allegations about our restart programme but no one has so far suggested that an interviewee has been disabled as a result of it.

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report for each job club (a) its location, (b) the length of time it has been operatonal, (c) the numbers of males and females who have been members, (d) the percentage success rate in each case and (e) the average number of weeks as a member (i) for those unemployed finding employment through the job club system and (ii) for those unemployed leaving the job club scheme not having found employment.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1987, c. 481]: The location of each job club open on 16 January 1987 is shown in the table. The length of time each had been operational at the same date is given in weeks.

Information about the number of males and females who have been members, the percentage success rate in each case and the average number of weeks as a member is not available in the form requested. However, an evaluation study produced in March 1986 showed that 67 per cent. of job club members were male and 32 per cent. female. The same evaluation also showed the average duration of membership was four to five weeks. A copy of this report is in the House of Commons Library. In the period 7 April 1986 to 5 December 1986, 7,397 (61 per cent.) of job club members found employment; 1,581 (13 per cent.) went on training, community programmes or the enterprise allowance scheme; the remaining 3,145 (26 per cent.) left for reasons which are not recorded.

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will number and identify (a) those groups who have been successful in finding employment through the job club system, and (b) those groups who have left the job club system not having found employment, in terms of standard age groups, sex and standard duration of prior unemployment groups.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1987, c. 481]: The information is not available in the form requested. Records of job club members do not include age or sex. However, 61 per cent. of members leave to enter employment, and a further 13 per cent. go on to training, community programmes or the enterprise allowance scheme. Records of success by duration of prior unemployment are available for the period 8 September to 5 December and show:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Tom King: To provide all the information requested would involve disproportionate cost, but I shall write to the hon. Member with what is available.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vietnamese Boat People

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will initiate negotiations with the Vietnamese Government with a view to making arrangements to repatriate boat people, arriving in Hong Kong, who do not meet the United Nations definition of refugees.

Mr. Renton: Repatriation clearly raises very difficult political and humanitarian questions. We recognise, however, the burden placed on Hong Kong by the continuing flow of boat people into the territory. We are actively examining all practical ways of achieving a durable solution to the problem.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made on the resettlement of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: 3,816 Vietnamese refugees were resettled from the camps in Hong Kong during 1986. As a result, and despite an increase in new arrivals in 1986, the population of the camps fell from 9,443 to 8,039 during the year. We are now considering, in consultation with the UNHCR, what more might be done to help Hong Kong.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he is satisfied that boat people arriving in Hong Kong meet the United Nations definition of refugees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We do not examine individual newly arriving boat people in Hong Kong in order to determine whether or not they are refugees under the terms of the 1951 convention. Since 1979 we and Hong Kong have continued to base our treatment of the boat people on the international understanding, reached at the 1979 Geneva conference on Indo China; that all who left Indo China illegally were to be treated as refugees. None has been turned away by the Hong Kong authorities.

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have taken place with the Vietnamese Government on the subject of the repatriation of boat people arriving in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No discussions have taken place between the Government and the Vietnamese authorities on the subject of repatriation. Repatriation clearly raises difficult political and humanitarian questions. We recognise, however, the burden placed [illegible] Hong Kong by the continuing flow of boat people into the territory. We are actively examining all practical ways of achieving a durable solution to the problem and are discussing these with the major resettlement countries.

Pakistan (Afghan Refugees)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with the Government of Pakistan about the continued presence in that country of Afghan refugees.

Mr. Eggar: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 3 December 1986 at column 652. This continues to be a problem of very considerable concern; Pakistan continues to provide a refuge for over 3 million Afghans and the flow across the border has continued.

Departmental Staff (Languages)

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 3 December, Official Report, column 652, how many of those included in these figures were British nationals who learnt the appropriate foreign language prior to their appointment to the overseas staff.

Mr. Eggar: All of them.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Eggar: First-grade letterhead stationery, used for correspondence of record, is British but at present contains no recycled material. Other letterheadings are printed on British paper containing up to 20 per cent. recycled material. Notepads are purchased from HMSO and may contain a proportion of recycled waste according to the conditions and specifications of HMSO contracts.

Soviet Jews

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the numbers of Soviet Jews who were allowed to emigrate during December 1986, and the total figure for that year.

Mr. Renton: A total of 77 Jews were allowed to emigrate from the Soviet Union in December 1986. The figure for the whole year is 914.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on the further tightening of regulations and on restrictions introduced this year which are designed to slow down the number of Soviet Jews who wish to emigrate.

Mr. Renton: In my recent discussions in Moscow I was told that the new rules on departure from the Soviet Union should substantially increase the numbers of those who can go abroad temporarily or permanently for family reasons. We shall watch developments closely, and continue to press for improvement.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the discussions he held with Mr. Yuri Kashlev, Head of Moscow's Department of Humanitarian and Cultural Relations, on the question of human rights and especially the plight of Soviet Jews and whether there are any prospects of a more humanitarian attitude on these matters likely to be forthcoming this year.

Mr. Renton: I expressed serious concern both to Deputy Minister Kovalev and to Ambassador Kashlev at the Soviet Government's human rights record and the low level of Jewish emigration. Ambassador Kashlev said he expected an increase in departures from the country. We shall have to see.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of the refusal of the United States Government to waive diplomatic immunity in the case of the spouse of one of its London embassy staff accused of sexual offences, he will now take steps to discuss diplomatic immunity with his fellow European Economic Community Foreign Ministers with a view to seeking a review of the Vienna convention; whether he will also discuss the possible formation of a blacklist amongst European Economic Community countries of persons on whose behalf diplomatic immunity is claimed who are alleged to have committed criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions and exchanges of information with our European Community partners on questions related to diplomatic immunity. We have paid particular attention to drawing our partners' attention to the conclusions of the White Paper on diplomatic immunities and privileges (Cmnd. 9497) of April 1985.

As part of the Twelve's efforts to combat terrorism there is already an arrangement for the mutual exchange of information about those entitled to diplomatic immunity excluded from the territory of one member state so that others can have advance warning of possible risk.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each occasion during the last five years on which Her Majesty's Government have agreed to waive diplomatic immunity in respect of legal proceedings against one of its officials serving abroad for alleged serious offences; if he will specify, in each case, the rank of the official involved, the alleged offence or offences involved, the date or dates on which they were alleged to have taken place and the date on which the diplomats concerned were prosecuted; if Her Majesty's Government has ever refused to waive diplomatic immunity in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: During the last five years the waiver of diplomatic immunity for officials or dependants serving overseas has been agreed on 28 occasions, 25 of which involved the appearance of an officer or dependant in court as a witness. The remaining three involved minor traffic offences committed by an officer or a dependant.

During the same period, the FCO did not waive immunity on four occasions because it was considered inappropriate for an officer to appear in an official capacity as a witness in a civil case. On two occasions, both involving officers in alleged motoring offences, it was decided that waiver of immunity would be inappropriate and the officers were withdrawn from post.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list each occasion during the last five years on which a foreign Government have agreed to waive diplomatic immunity in respect of legal proceedings against one of its officials for alleged serious offences; if he will specify, in each case, the rank of the official involved and the Government he represented, the alleged offence or offences involved, the date or dates on which they were alleged to have taken place and the date on which the diplomats concerned were prosecuted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There has been one instance where a foreign Government agreed to waive immunity in connection with a drugs charge. The diplomat concerned was tried and acquitted.

According to our records, waivers have been granted in an additional 24 cases to allow members of missions to appear in court as a witness.

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many television sets there are at his official residence in London; and who is responsible for paying for the licence fee.

Mr. Eggar: One television set is provided at the official residence of the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. There is Crown exemption from the need to pay for a television licence fee for this property.

Tripartite Commission

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to write to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr about the expenses of the Tripartite Commission for the restitution of monetary gold as promised in his answer of 3 November 1986, Official Report, column 309.

Mr. Renton: We are still in discussion with the other Governments in the tripartite gold commission about provision of the information requested. I hope to be able to write to the hon. Member shortly.

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he first learned of the existence of (a) the series of programmes on "The Secret Society" and (b) the programme on the Zircon satellite system.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier today.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will dismiss Sir Peter Marychurch, as a result of the communication of the position of the Zircon satellite to British Aerospace.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the instruction was given to carry out an investigation to try to identify the source or sources of information on the Zircon satellite system given to Duncan Campbell and others for use in the media.

Mr. Renton: Investigations were initiated as soon as it was learnt what the BBC programme relating to this project might contain and were intensified when full information about it actually became known. At the request of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General the Metropolitan police are carrying out an investigation into the matter.

ENVIRONMENT

Radioactive Waste

48. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive a report on the review of costs of radioactive waste disposal currently being undertaken by UK Nirex Limited.

Mr. Waldegrave: UK Nirex Limited keeps estimates of disposal costs under constant review. A full review will be made following receipt of work on repository designs being undertaken by consultants, which Nirex expect to receive in April. Revised cost figures will be given to the Department and published as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a compensation scheme for those householders in the South Killingholme area who cannot now sell their houses at normal valuation prices in cases where the decline in value can now be directly attributed to the presence of contractor test drilling for the suitability of a nuclear waste dump and where surveyors' reports on such properties indicate that the test drilling has contributed to a fall in market value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Compensation policy, both in the areas of the four potential disposal sites and at any site which might eventually be selected, is primarily a matter for UK Nirex Limited. The company has already announced measures which are intended to maintain the level of house prices locally. Nirex is also considering the possibility of further measures, which it is discussing with my right hon. Friend.

Departmental Staff

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each year from 1979 to 1986, the numbers of women employed within each grade in his Department and the percentage this represents of the total number of employees within each grade.

Mr. Ridley: The statistics requested by the hon. Member are not immediately available. They are being collated. I will write to the hon. Member in due course.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are employed in his Department dealing with (a) public libraries, (b) heritage arts, and (c) historic buildings.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: The Department of the Environment (central) has no staff employed dealing with public libraries. The staff employed on heritage arts is two. On historic buildings, including the Royal palaces open to the public, the staff employed (not including staff employed by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England) is 261½.

Heveningham Hall, Suffolk

Mr. Andrew Faulds asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to ensure that Heveningham Hall, Suffolk, is opened to the public in 1987, in accordance with the covenant agreed when it was sold by his Department in November 1981 to the effect that the principal rooms, including the hall, would be open for at least 30 days a year from 1982.

Mr. Waldegrave: For various reasons, including a fire which occurred in 1984, the owner of Heveningham Hall, Mr. A. Al-Ghazzi, has not been able to comply with the covenant relating to public access and work on repairing the wing damaged by fire has been held up. Responsibility for ensuring that the owner complies with the covenants now lies, in the first instance, with the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission who, together with the local planning authority, have been monitoring the condition of the building and are in touch with the owner and his agents. I have asked the chairman of the commission for his assessment of the position with a view to considering whether intervention by my right hon. Friend would be desirable.

Housing Development

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to prevent local planning authorities which have granted outline planning consent for residential development from making subsequent demands in terms of house-type design and layout, open space provision, landscape and other reserve matters outside the guidance given in circulars 22/80 and 1/85.

Mr. Waldegrave: Where a local planning authority refuses approval of reserved matters or grant approval subject to conditions or fails to make a decision within eight weeks, it is open to an aggrieved applicant to appeal to the Secretary of State. If the appeal arises from unreasonable behaviour by the local planning authority, an inquiry is held and an application for costs is made, it is possible that costs might be awarded against the authority concerned. This point will be emphasised in the forthcoming circular on award of costs in planning cases.

Weather Damage (Payments)

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will specify the number of occasions and circumstances since 1970 in which central Government have offered increased financial support to local authorities as a consequence of flooding, snow or other adverse conditions; what was the actual cost of the support; and if he will list his powers to provide support of this nature.

Dr. Boyson: Since 1970 special financial assistance has been given to local authorities as a consequence of flooding, snow or other adverse weather conditions on three occasions: during the winters of 1977-78, 1978-79 and 1981-82. In 1977-78 the need for payments arose mainly from storms, flooding and snow, in 1978-79 from prolonged snow and frost, and in 1981-82 from storms, flooding and snow.

Payments were made in response to claims by local authorities in the following years:

| Financial year | Amount £ million |
|---|---|
| 1977-78 | 1·18 |
| 1978-79 | 7·35 |
| 1979-80 | 4·57 |
| 1980-81 | 3·02 |
| 1981-82 | 0·38 |
| 1982-83 | 11·19 |
| 1983-84 | 1·61 |
| 1984-85 | 0·06 |
| TOTAL | 29·36 |

The Secretary of State has made such payments on the authority of the Appropriation Act.

Environmental Research

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how Her Majesty's Government have co-operated since 1979 with industry to develop environmentally friendly products; and if he will list those products which have resulted from such co-operation.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 9 December 1986, Official Report, column 90.

Royal Parks

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to purchase land to add to the Royal Parks.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Conservation Measures

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those parties to the Ramsar convention which require the securing of national conservation status of wetlands before granting international status; and if he will make a statement on the means for the pursuit of such policies in England and Wales;

(2) if he intends to make available to the Nature Conservancy Council further resources to enable notification of the Severn estuary both as a site of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 and also as a special protection area under the European Community Direction 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds, to be completed by the end of 1987;

(3) if he intends to make available to the Nature Conservancy Council further resources to enable notifications as sites of special scientific interest under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 of the 101 sites originally intended to be notified under the Ramsar convention by the end of 1986, and not so notified by that date, to be completed by the end of 1987;

(4) if he will explain why, in the light of his statement to the meeting in 1984 of parties to the Ramsar convention at Gronningen that 132 sites eligible for notification under the convention would be notified by the end of 1986, only 31 sites were so notified; and what steps he intends to take towards notification of the outstanding sites.

Mr. Waldegrave: Conservation involves more than merely putting labels on sites. It is therefore our policy to designate sites under the Ramsar convention only when they have been properly protected through notification as sites of special scientific interest. I have no information about the detail of the procedures adopted by other contracting parties to the convention, but I believe firmly that our approach is the right one. However, the sheer size and complexity of the task of notifying and renotifying some 30,000-40,000 owners and occupiers of almost 5,000 existing and proposed SSSIs was not fully appreciated at the time of the Groningen conference. This coupled with subsequent unforeseen technical difficulties has meant that progress has been less rapid than hoped for.

We have taken steps to speed things up by providing the Nature Conservancy Council with very substantial increases in resources. In the past two years it has received increases of 25 per cent. and 41 per cent. respectively, bringing its total grant in aid for the current year to £32·1 million. With the assistance of those additional funds, the NCC expects that the SSSI renotification exercise will be substantially completed by July 1987.

The priority which should be given to the renotification of particular sites is for the NCC to determine in the light of its other priorities.

EEC Directives

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the proposed European Economic Communities directives relating to matters subject to his Department upon which Her Majesty's Government hold a reserved position; and if he will make a statement as to the reasons for reservation in each particular case.

Mr. Waldegrave: Apart from maintaining a necessary negotiating position, Her Majesty's Government have placed no general reserve on any proposed European Community directive on matters for which my Department is responsible.

North Sea

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, year by year, the projects funded by his Department in 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 on research improving knowledge of the fate of pollutants in the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: Projects funded by the Department on research to improve the knowledge of the fate of pollutants in the North sea are listed below. These include projects aimed at the marine environment in general as well as specific projects aimed at the North sea.

1981-82
Surveys of the river Tyne sludge dumping ground.
Disposal of sludge to sea.
Heavy metal contamination in estuaries.

Surveys of the river Tyne sludge dumping ground.
Disposal of sludge to sea.
Heavy metal contamination in estuaries.

1983-84
Disposal of sludge to sea.
Heavy metal contamination in estuaries.
Estimates of list I and list II discharges to tidal waters.
Input of contaminants to the North sea.

Disposal of sludge to sea.
Heavy metal contamination in estuaries.
Estimates of list I and list II discharges to tidal waters.
Survey of pentachlorphenol and other pesticides in coastal waters.
Input of contaminants to the North sea.

1985-86
Disposal of sludge to sea.
Heavy metal contamination in estuaries.
Estimates of list I and list II substances discharged to the North sea.
Water balance and pollution loads in the North sea.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Ridley: Most types of paper used by my Department, including letterhead stationery and notepads, contain varying amounts of British made recycled paper.

Housing Defects

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the types of Airey type houses and Wates type houses, (b) the type of house in both categories which are eligible for grant for rehabilitation purposes; and when those not eligible for grant will be made eligible.

Mr. Tracey: The Airey and Wates prefabricated reinforced concrete dwelling types, designed before 1960, are designated under the housing defects legislation; private owners are eligible for assistance (either reinstatement grant or repurchase) in accordance with the rules laid down in the legislation. Wates large panel properties are a later, different form of construction and are not designated. Such systems are being investigated by the Building Research Establishment and any further action will need to be considered in the light of BRE's findings.

Housing Associations

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the numbers of dwellings owned and managed by charitable housing associations which were not purchased using housing association grant.

Mr. John Patten: Around 170,000 dwellings owned by charitable housing associations in England have been acquired, built or converted without housing association grant.

Housing Investment Programmes

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the bids submitted for housing investment programmes for 1986-87 and the respective allocation in each case, giving totals for each region.

| Region | Total programmes proposed in HIP submissions £ million | Total of initial capital allocations £ million |
|---|---|---|
| North excluding Cumbria | 293·575 | 63·887 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 617·966 | 111·628 |
| East Midlands | 297·703 | 76·740 |
| Eastern | 478·892 | 98·126 |
| Greater London | 1,935·446 | 386·406 |
| South Eastern | 554·364 | 132·104 |
| South West | 319·253 | 80·184 |
| West Midlands | 619·951 | 131·170 |
| North West including Cumbria | 790·314 | 194·291 |

Corresponding information about individual authorities has been placed in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 14 January.

The capital allocations issued by my Department give local authorities approval to fund capital expenditure on housing by borrowing. However, the major portion of their housing investment programmes in 1987-88 is likely to be funded by using capital receipts from the sale of houses or flats, rather than by borrowing.

Sports Council

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has initiated over alleged financial irregularities in the affairs of the Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: Following discovery of irregularities at one of the Sports Council's national centres, audit staff of the council and of the Department are examining the financial controls at all the national centres. This has already been drawn to the attention of the National Audit Office and Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland offices for any action they may need to take and, as soon as possible, the Department will consider what further advice may need to be given to other sponsored bodies.

It would not be possible to comment further in advance of the completion of police inquiries.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when it is proposed to introduce urban regeneration grants using the powers contained in the Housing and Planning Act.

Mr. John Patten: Urban regeneration grant will be paid under the authority of part III of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. My Department will shortly be inviting formal applications and some potential applicants are already in touch with my officials.

Gipsies

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to ensure that all the West Yorkshire district councils provide adequate accommodation for gipsies.

Mr. Tracey: As I stated in reply to a question from my hon. Friend on 21 January 1987, at column 590, any proposals put to my right hon. Friend by my hon. Friend will be considered on their merits.

Nitrates

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring work is being conducting by his Department on the use of nitrogen in agriculture.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is contributing to a study with MAFF and the Nature Conservancy Council into the effects of nitrogen on species diversity and agriculture on the Somerset levels. Other monitoring work is also available to the Department such as the survey of fertiliser practice carried out annually by the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, Rothamstead research station and the Fertiliser Manufacturers Association.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Ridley: There can be no doubts about the legality of Acts of Parliament, nor can they be challenged in the courts. I assume that the hon. Member is referring to doubts about the legality of actions taken by me or my Department under Acts of Parliament. There have been two occasions when Bills have been introduced to amend legislation introduced since 1979 because of such doubts —the Rate Support Grant Act 1986 and the current Local Government Finance Bill.

I assume that by "orders" the hon. Member is referring to all forms of legislative statutory instrument. There has been no case since June 1979 when the legality of such an instrument made by me or one of my predecessors has been challenged in the courts. Since that date it is believed that one statutory instrument has been revoked and not replaced because of doubts about the extent of the enabling power and that one instrument has been revoked and replaced by an amended instrument because the enabling power was inadvertently misquoted.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the cost of extending enterprise zone status to (a) all assisted areas and (b) to all assisted and intermediate areas.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans at present to extend the enterprise zones and estimates of the cost of extending EZ status to the assisted areas and intermediate areas could only be made at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Lawyers

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many lawyers were employed in his Department on 1 April and 1 October in 1984, 1985 and 1986; if he will give the establishment figures for the same dates; and how many different individuals have occupied these posts, giving the average length of employment in the period 1 April 1984 to 1 October 1986.

Mr. Ridley: I will answer this question shortly.

Windsor and Maidenhead (Planning Appeals)

Dr. Glyn asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning decisions made by the Royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead have been reversed on appeal by him in the last year for which records are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of determined planning appeals against decisions made by the Royal borough of Windsor and Maidenhead in the calendar year 1985, the latest period for which information is available, and the number of appeals unheld were:

Number of appeals decided in 1985 — 97
Number of appeals allowed in 1985 — 40

14,639 planing appeals were decided in England in 1985 of which 5,477 were allowed. This represents a success rate of 37·4 per cent.

Royal Opera House

Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will call in the proposed Royal Opera House re-development phase II.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend has considered carefully whether the planning applications should be called in for his decision. However, he has decided that his intervention would not be justified.

The proposals also involve a number of applications for listed building consent. If the local planning authority is minded to allow these, it is required to submit them to my right hon. Friend in order that he may consider whether to call them in. A decision on whether or not such action is appropriate will be taken if and when any such applications are referred to the Secretary of State.

Fuel Conservation

Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage increase in fabric heat loss would be permitted by the disapplication to industrial and storage buildings of the provisions for the conservation of fuel and power in the Building Regulations (England and Wales); and whether this accords with the objectives set by Her Majesty's Government during Energy Efficiency Year.

Mr. John Patten: Any increase would depend on the level of heating and type of construction proposed. The Department's consultation letter on the review of the building regulations proposes that decisions about the appropriate level of insulation in industrial and storage buildings should be left to those commissioning and building them. This is because of the wide variety of industrial processes and the different heating and humidity levels found in this type of building where the use of impervious claddings can cause problems of condensation. For other kinds of buildings the review proposes significantly higher standards for the conservation of fuel and power.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on the re-notification of sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that on 30 November 1986, 2,571 SSSIs notified under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 had been re-notified under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981. A further 1,024 new sites had been notified under the 1981 Act.

The NCC expects to achieve substantial completion of the re-notification programme as a whole by July 1987.

PSA (York Office)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Property Services Agency management provided their cost appraisal in respect of the re-organisation of the York area office; what conclusions he has reached on it; to whom copies have been made available; and if a copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

Water Legislation

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply of 18 December, Official Report, column 685, about expenditure incurred in preparation for water legislation, he will provide a detailed analysis of the expenditure on fees incurred in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many television sets are at the official residence of the Lord Chancellor; and who is responsible for the payment of the licence fee.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

National Water Grid

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy on a national water grid; and what action his Department is taking towards the creation of such a grid.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: Water sources and supply areas are linked by pipelines to form integrated systems in some regions and a few inter-regional transfer schemes exist, in cases where they are the most economic way of meeting demands. Advantage can usually be taken, however, of the proximity of sources to areas of demand in regional development, leading to economy and efficiency. By comparison, the cost of building and operating a complete national water grid would be excessive because water is bulky and heavy to transport.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency Year

2. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the overall results of energy efficiency year.

16. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the achievements of energy efficiency year.

Mr. David Hunt: During Energy Efficiency Year my original target of 1,000 events was surpassed by over 50 per cent. Awareness of the Monergy slogan rose from 4 per cent. to around 70 per cent. and energy efficiency survey grants in October were 82 per cent. up on the previous October.

The campaign was highly successful in alerting the nation to the benefits of adopting energy efficiency measures.

As a fitting climax to Energy Efficiency Year the national energy management conference and exhibition was the biggest in its 10-year history — attracting 236 exhibitors and 1,264 delegates.

14. Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate what savings were made by industry in the north-west of England during and as a result of energy efficiency year.

Mr. David Hunt: Organisations in the north-west have responded enthusiastically both to Energy Efficiency Year and to our continuing campaign to improve energy efficiency. Overall we estimate that energy efficiency measures undertaken by industry and commerce throughout the United Kingdom are currently leading to savings of over £500 million a year.

23. Mr. Rost asked the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to build on the outcome of energy efficiency year.

Mr. David Hunt: I intend to discuss with the industries which have helped in making the year so successful the ways in which we can continue to benefit permanently from the continuation of our mutual aims.

To assist in this I have announced a 14-point programme of action which is summarised as follows:

1. maintain discussions with the energy efficiency industries
2. build up the prestige and training of energy managers
3. expand our monitoring and targeting programme

4. encourage management to use the energy efficiency survey schemes
5. vigorously market the energy efficiency demonstration scheme
6. improve the performance of the public sector
7. incorporate energy efficiency measures in major housing rehabilitation schemes
8. educate every architect in the country on the importance of energy efficiency in building design
9. create a system of home energy audits that everyone can afford
10. publish a simple checklist for house purchasers to evaluate standards of energy efficiency in their prospective home
11. expand community insulation projects for low income families
12. double the number of demonstration projects in buildings
13. allocate a good proportion of our Research and Development fund to energy efficiency
14. ensure that the financial institutions recognise the importance of funding energy efficiency projects.

These proposals were universally welcomed by my energy efficiency strategy board last week and, together with the continuing intiatives being taken by my energy efficiency office, will further accelerate the pace of progress towards greater energy efficiency.

Coal Firing Scheme

10. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Energy what number of projects have been offered assistance under the coal firing scheme; how many of that number were offered the full 25 per cent. grant; how many applications were rejected; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of 624 projects have been offered assistance under the coal firing scheme, of which 481 were offered full 25 per cent. grants; a total of 413 applications were rejected or withdrawn before or after grant was offered.

The scheme will close to new applications made after 30 June 1987.

Sacked Miners

13. Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any information from the chairman of British Coal about sacked miners.

Mr. David Hunt: The dismissal and re-employment of mineworkers is a matter for the management of British Coal.

British Coal Enterprise Limited

15. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs created by British Coal Enterprise Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I am pleased to report that British Coal Enterprise Ltd. is continuing to make good progress in its work of creating alternative employment in coalfield areas. At the end of December 1986 the company had committed nearly £21 million and had helped create over 13,000 new job opportunities.

Chernobyl

17. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his visit to Chernobyl in December 1986.

Mr. Goodlad: During my right hon. Friend's visit to Chernobyl he saw the remarkable efforts which have gone into dealing with contamination and into preventing further contamination through construction of a massive shield around the destroyed reactor. My right hon. Friend was able to learn at first hand of Soviet measures to prevent any recurrence of the disaster and of their plans for a programme to double their nuclear capacity. My right hon. Friend agreed with Soviet Ministers on the importance of working through the IAEA to secure improvements in international co-operation on nuclear safety. My right hon. Friend has placed the joint communiqué issued after his visit in the Library of the House.

Sizewell

18. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy when Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate expects to conclude the assessment of the safety case for a pressurised water reactor nuclear power station at Sizewell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The chief nuclear inspector has advised me that the NII's assessment of the safety case should be complete in two to three months.

British Coal (Productivity)

19. Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what increase there has been in productivity in British Coal from 1979 to the most recent date for which figures are available; how this compares with the increase from 1973 to 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hunt: Average deep mined revenue output per man shift rose from 2·24 tonnes in 1978-79 to 3·21 tonnes in the current year to 3 January, an increase of 43 per cent. This compares with a drop from 2·33 tonnes in 1972-73 to 2·24 tonnes in 1978-79. The recent dramatic increases underline the industry's potential.

Coal-fired Power Stations

20. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what considerations have delayed the announcement of preferred sites for the next coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: The selection of sites for new power stations is a matter for the CEGB. The board has made known which sites it is considering for new coal-fired power stations.

Coal Imports

21. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the monthly totals of coal imported into the United Kingdom in 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest available information, which covered the period January to November 1986, is as follows:

|---|---|
| January | 847 |
| February | 893 |
| March | 805 |
| April | 1,139 |

| Month | Quantity '000 tonnes |
|---|---|
| May | 828 |
| June | 801 |
| July | 1,106 |
| August | 694 |
| September | 1,193 |
| October | 954 |
| November | 612 |
| TOTAL | 9,782 |

Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

24. Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Energy what the level of coal imports for 1986 was (a) by tonnage and (b) by country of origin.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer to the reply given earlier today to the member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies). On the countries of origin of coal imports, the latest available information which covers the period January to November 1986 is as follows:

| Country of origin | Quantity '000 tonnes |
|---|---|
| Australia | 3,621 |
| United States | 3,241 |
| Poland | 1,084 |
| West Germany | 416 |
| Canada | 393 |
| South Africa | 308 |
| Netherlands | 197 |
| Belgium | 166 |
| Bulgaria | 135 |
| Colombia | 56 |
| Others | 165 |
| TOTAL | 9,782 |

Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Coal Industry (Privatisation)

22. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is considering plans to privatise the coal industry.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have no plans to privatise British Coal.

Cavity Insulation

25. Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department has taken to realise savings in energy costs through cavity insulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The energy efficiency office is actively promoting cavity wall insulation as a highly cost effective energy saving measure. My right hon. Friend launched wall insulation month in September during Energy Efficiency Year with the National Cavity Insulation Association. Cavity wall insulation featured in one of the energy efficiency office's television advertisements and one of the press advertisements. A special leaflet for householders has also been produced by the energy efficiency office in consultation with the NCIA. The office has also had several meetings with the NCIA in the past year as a result of which a number of initiatives to improve the industry's consumer protection plan are under consideration.

Leicester (Combined Heat and Power)

26. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the feasibility study of the Leicester combined heat and power consortium.

Mr. David Hunt: I met the Leicester CHP consortium on Wednesday 21 January in Leicester to receive a presentation on its report. The Government fully support CHP district heating schemes where they are economically viable, but believe the key to development must lie with the private sector. It is now up to the Leicester consortium to take the project forward.

Gas and Electricity (VAT)

27. Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the gas and electricity boards about the implications of the case initiated by the European Economic Community Commissioners before the European Court on their objection to the value added tax zero rating of gas and electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The gas and electricity industries have been consulted during the preparation of the United Kingdom response to the case brought by the European Community Commission to the European Court of Justice. The Government completely reject the Commission's case and will defend the issue strongly before the European Court.

CEGB (Capital Requirements)

28. Mr. Orme asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he will next review detailed forecasts of Central Electricity Generating Board capital requirements.

Mr. Goodlad: In the spring, when I receive the board's 1987 proposed capital investment programme.

Cold Weather (Energy Demand)

29. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the capacity of the United Kingdom energy supplies sectors to cope with extra demand for heating and lighting during cold weather.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The supply industries have the capacity to cope with additional demand for heating and lighting during periods of severe weather.

This was demonstrated recently when, apart from a few local difficulties in distribution, they were able to meet record levels of demand for gas and electricity during some of the coldest temperatures experienced this century.

National Coal Board

30. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of the National Coal Board; what was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Coal Industry (Investment)

31. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is his most recent estimate of investment in the coal industry in 1986-87; how this compares with 1978-79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: British Coal's investment approval for 1986-87 is £650 million, £169 million more than was invested in 1978-79. Over £5 billion has been invested in the coal industry since 1979.

Domestic Heating Costs

32. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the current costs of domestic heating; and how these compare with those for 1979.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: In 1986 the price of energy generally to the home was 18 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1979. However, in recent years the real prices of all domestic fuels have been falling: since 1983 those of gas and electricity have fallen by 8 per cent. and 11 per cent. respectively.

Sellafield

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident involving possible radiation contamination of a worker at the Windscale works on 15 December 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 8 December 1986, at column 6.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Energy what reports he expects to receive during the next 12 months concerning progress on implementing recommendations made by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in the safety audit of British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive intends to make a progress report to the Health and Safety Commission after six months. I shall be kept informed of its contents.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department uses envelopes made from such paper.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I am not aware of any such occasions.

Oil Prices

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the average Brent crude oil spot price since 1 April 1986.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: There is no single definitive price series for the Brent crude oil spot price, but rather several competing price reporting systems. For the period 1 April to end December 1986 the estimated average across several prices series is in the range $13·1 to $13·5 a barrel.

Sizewell Power Station

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list his estimates for the cost of nuclear power from Sizewell compared with coal power from the stations planned for the south of England.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has today published the inspector's report on Sizewell B. In view of the decision he has to take, I cannot comment on matters related to the CEGB's application to build the station. The board has made no application to build a coal-fired station.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list electricity prices (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in France for (i) domestic and (ii) industrial consumers.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Civil Nuclear Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the categories of information held by his Department on civil nuclear power which are deemed necessary to be kept secret on grounds of national interest.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c. 80]: The categories of information to which security classifications apply are the same for civil nuclear power as for all other subjects. Security classifications apply only to information the unauthorised disclosure of which would not be in the interests of the nation and to information passed to us by another country on the express understanding that it shall be treated as classified information.

SCOTLAND

Glasgow (Health Board Manager)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date the present general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board took up his appointment; and which hospitals within the board's area he has visited since then.

Mr. John MacKay: Mr. Laurence Peterken took up the post of general manager of the Greater Glasgow health board on 1 January 1986. I am asking the chairman of the board to write to the hon. Member about Mr. Peterken's visits to hospitals within the board's area.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what use his Department makes of British-made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office uses British-made recycled paper for envelopes, but not otherwise. We are discussing with Her Majesty's Stationery Office whether, having regard to cost and quality, wider use would be appropriate.

Prisons

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will have discussions with the General Secretary and office bearers of the Scottish Prison Officers Association to discuss the draft interim report of the working party on alternative regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The draft interim report of the working party on alternative regimes has not yet been agreed by the members of the working party.

I met members of the trade union side of the Scottish prison service, including representatives of the Scottish Prison Officers' Association, on Friday 23 January and we had useful and wide-ranging discussions on the problems facing the Scottish prison service, including the problems of handling difficult prisoners. My Department will keep in close touch with the trade union side on any new proposals or development affecting staff in the Scottish prison service.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to appoint to his Department an additional press officer whose duties would be solely to deal with the running of the prison service in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am considering this at present along with other prison service requirements.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the total amount of Government funding granted to Peterhead prison for general services in the years 1979 to 1986 showing each year separately.

|---|---|
| 1979-80 | Not available |
| 1980-81 | Not available |
| [1]1981-82 | 3,328 |

| 1985-86 | 4,911 |

[1] Excludes cost of inter-establishment transfers: information not available.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made in the implementation of the recommendations of the 1979 May report on prison services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The May committee made a very large number of recommendations, many of which applied only to the prison service in England and Wales. If my hon. Friend will let me know in which recommendations he has a specific interest, I shall reply to him as soon as possible.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now make it his policy that, before prison officers are accepted for service in Scottish prisons, they should be in possession of a professional qualification equivalent to a higher national certificate in prison studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Fish

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Official Report the increase in the landings of the following species of fish, at Peterhead fish market in the years 1979 to 1986 showing each year separately: (a) cod, (b) haddock, (c) herring, (d) mackerel, (e) Norway lobsters, (f) Queen scallops and (g) scallops.

Mr. John MacKay: The information requested is given in the most readily available form in the following table.

Hypothermia

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he publish in the Official Report a table to show, by age group and by month, the number of deaths in Scotland with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate for the last five years for which figures are available.

Deaths with any mention of hypothermia, by age group and month, Scotland, 1982-86

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide estimates of the area of woodland felled in each month in Scotland for the past 36 months for which figures are available.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria he used in deciding (a) to make offers under regional development grant headings to the Burroughs Corporation and (b) not to make offers to Northern Engineering Industries, in respect of Reyrolle Belmos Blantyre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The criteria used when considering applications for regional development grant under the Industrial Development Act 1982 (as amended) are the same in all cases. These criteria are published in the regional development grant guide for applicants.

No recent applications have been received by the Department from either company.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Rifkind: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Criminal Injuries

Mr. Soley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, at constant prices, for each of the next three years (a) the estimated amount to be paid to victims of violence under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, (b) the amount allocated to administration of the scheme and (c) the amount allocated to local victim support schemes giving in each case the estimated increase over 1986-87.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows. With regard to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, which operates on a Great Britain basis, the Scottish element is currently estimated at 20 per cent. of the planned provision for Great Britain as a whole.

| | 1987-88 £ million | 1988-89 £ million | 1989-90 £ million |
|---|---|---|---|
| Estimated expenditure on compensation under criminal injuries compensation scheme | 15·183 | 15·443 | 16·637 |
| Increase over 1986-87 | 6·235 | 6·494 | 7·689 |
| Estimated cost of administration of scheme | 1·319 | 1·593 | 1·666 |

Central Government grant is paid to the Scottish Association of Victim Support Schemes (SAVSS) which distributes funds as appropriate to 12 local victim support schemes. Grant has been paid to the Scottish association since it was formed in March 1985; and in 1986-87 amounted to £26,000 revenue and £1,500 capital. In addition, further revenue grant of £15,000 per year has been offered to the association to assist specific projects. The level of grant for future years is still under consideration.

Repairs Grant

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what increase there has been in the property rateable value eligibility limit for repairs grant to take account of the rating revaluation in 1985.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the Housing (Limits of Rateable Value for Improvement Grants and Repairs Grants) (Scotland) Order 1985 (SI. 1985, No. 297 (S.30)), copies of which are in the Library.

Gill Nets

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, further to the answer given by the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mr. MacKay) on 21 January 1986, he will specify the salmon and sea fisheries organisations which were consulted prior to the Prohibition of Carriage of Monofilament Gill Nets (Scotland) Order 1985 being laid before the House.

The Salmon Net Fishing Association of Scotland
The Association of Scottish District Salmon Fishery Boards
The Scottish Fishermen's Federation
The Highlands and Islands Fishermen's Association (SG)
The Orkney Fisheries Association
The Western Isles Fishermen's Association
The National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations
The Association of Sea Fisheries Committees

WALES

HMI Reports

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's inspectors' reports on secondary schools in Wales published in (a) 1975 and (b) 1976 which included specific reference to the teaching of geography separately distinguishing those containing sketch maps and those which do not;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's inspectors' reports on secondary schools in Wales published in (a) 1975 and (b) 1976, in which specific reference was made to the role in the curriculum of (i) road safety, (ii) fire safety and (iii) health education;

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's inspectors' reports on secondary schools in Wales published in (a) 1975 and (b) 1976.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Reports by HMI were not published prior to 1983. The number of HMI reports prepared on secondary schools in 1975 was 10, and in 1976 was eight. These reports sought to cover all aspects of the curriculum of the schools concerned.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will arrange for Her Majesty's inspectors' reports on schools to include more visual material such as maps and diagrams where this would aid understanding.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Reports by HMI sometimes include diagrams illustrating the layout of the facilities where this is likely to assist the reader. I have no evidence that wider use of illustrative material is felt to be necessary.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will arrange for the name of Her Majesty's inspector's producing reports on schools in Wales to be included in those reports.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. Since all reports by Her Majesty's Inspectors in Wales give the corporate view of the inspectorate it would not be appropriate to name individuals.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will identify the schools examined in the report by Her Majesty's inspectors on a survey of three recently amalgamated primary schools (West Glamorgan).

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of Her Majesty's inspectors involved in preparing their report on "A Survey of three Recently Amalgamated Primary Schools (West Glamorgan)" have had teaching experience in primary schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The actual visits for the survey in question involved four inspectors, two of whom have held teaching posts in primary schools. However, additionally several of Her Majesty's inspectors with local or specialist expertise and responsibilities usually make contributions to the planning of an inspection and the completion of a report.

School Inspectors

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's inspectors currently in post who have previously held the position of headteacher.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Six.

Staffing Statistics

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of staff currently employed in Gwydyr house which are attached to (i) the Secretary of State and (ii) each of the parliamentary under-secretaries.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: There are 10 staff attached to my Office who also provide support to the Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State who each have a private secretary and a personal secretary. In addition, there are, within Gwydyr house, a further 11 staff providing support to all Ministers and visiting officers.

Specialist Subject Advisers

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the information his Department holds on the numbers of specialist subject advisers in each local authority in Wales;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the year in which each local authority in Wales first appointed a specialist adviser in religious education.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department does not collect information on specialist subject advisers employed by local authorities.

Religious Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of Her Majesty's inspectors that visited the schools in West Glamorgan as referred to on page 1, paragraph 2 of report by Her Majesty's inspectors on "A Survey of Religious Education in 20 Primary Schools in West Glamorgan."

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Two members of Her Majesty's inspectorate undertook visits to schools in connection with this survey.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of Her Majesty's inspectors involved in visiting schools in West Glamorgan while preparing their report on "A Survey of Religious Education in Primary Schools in West Glamorgan" have had experience of teaching in primary schools.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Two of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools were involved in visits directly related to this survey. Both are specialists in religious education and have considerable experience of all aspects of primary schools, but neither has held a teaching appointment in a primary school.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will identify in the Official Report the names of the schools ranked in random order in appendix III of the report by Her Majesty's inspectors of schools on, "A Survey of Religious Education in 20 Primary Schools in West Glamorgan".

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No. The value of the report of this survey would not be enhanced by the identification and attribution of the practices of individual schools.

Childhood Leukaemia

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the incidence of childhood leukaemia by district health authority in Wales.

| District Health Authority | Number | Annual registration rate per 100,000 population aged 0-14 years |

Central Heating

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the percentage of elderly households in Wales that have central heating where these households are with two adults, one or both aged 60 years or over and for households of one person aged 60 years or over.

Mr. Mark Robinson: It is estimated from the Welsh house condition survey that, in 1981, the percentage of single pensioner households and two-person households with at least one pensioner, which had full or partial central heating were 42·0 per cent. and 48·5 per cent. respectively. The 1986 Welsh inter-censal and house condition surveys will provide more up-to-date information on house conditions.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: My Department obtains letterhead stationery and notepads from HMSO whose products contain a small and not readily quantifiable amount of recycled paper.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the overseas offices of the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency as such has no offices overseas, but WINVEST, its inward investment arm, has representatives in Palo Alto, California, Princeton, New Jersey, Pittsburg, Pennsylvania; Bad Bocklet in the Federal Republic of Germany and Tokyo, Japan.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of jobs which will be safeguarded or created in Wales over the next three years arising out of the impact of the Welsh Development Agency's programme.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56 II) shows that the agency's budget is set to rise by about a quarter over the period from 1986-87 to 1989-90. This will enable the agency to contribute to the creation of a significant number of job opportunities, although it is not possible to forecast the numbers involved.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the increase in real terms of the Welsh Development Agency financial allocations for each of the financial years 1980-81 to 1986-87.

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 120·3 |
| 1981-82 | 121·9 |
| 1982-83 | 101·3 |
| 1983-84 | 86·1 |
| 1984-85 | 78·2 |
| 1985-86 | 72·5 |
| 1986-87 | 76·9 |

The figures for 1980-81 to 1983-84 reflect the additional resources made available to the agency to assist those areas of Wales affected by steel closures.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the capital expenditure allocated for the Welsh Development Agency for each of the past five years and details for the year 1985-86 for land reclamation schemes.

Capital expenditure by the Welsh Development Agency

|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Land | 2·8 | 2·6 | 2·0 | 0·2 | 0·9 |
| Construction | 75·3 | 49·4 | 36·3 | 33·9 | 24·5 |
| Land reclamation | 9·3 | 10·4 | 13·0 | 6·5 | 9·0 |
| Environmental schemes | 0·3 | 0·5 | 0·6 | 0·8 | 0·5 |
| Grants | — | — | 0·2 | 0·4 | 0·5 |
| Loans | 0·3 | 0·5 | 0·4 | 0·5 | 0·7 |

[1] Owing to rounding, the totals may not equal precisely the sum of the constituent items.

I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with details of the land reclamation projects undertaken by the agency during 1985-86.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the projects of the Welsh Development Agency's service industries division currently being considered for financial support are related to tourism.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Ten out of a total of 87 investment proposals presently under consideration are directly related to tourism.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of factories owned by the Welsh Development Agency indicating the number of 5,000 sq ft and under, 5,000 to 10,000 sq ft, 10,000 to 20,000 sq ft, 20,000 to 50,000 sq ft and over 50,000 sq ft showing how many are (a) currently in productive use, (b) allocated, but not operational, and (c) unallocated, respectively.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of jobs created by the Welsh Development Agency and the total expenditure for each year in each Welsh county since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency contributes to the job creation process through a range of activities including the provision of factory space, investment funds and advice. It is not possible to quantify the full cumulative impact in terms of jobs created. Information on job opportunities provided through the agency's factory building programme is published in its annual report and accounts, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many factory units have been built by the Welsh Development Agency since its inception.

|---|---|
| Advance factories | 1,254 |
| Bespoke developments | 126 |
| High-tech schemes | 4 |
| Estate centres | 2 |

Note:

The WDA has also been involved in several projects aimed at converting old industrial property into modern factory units.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of employees currently working in factories constructed by the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: At 31 March 1986 employment in Welsh Development Agency factories and estates was 43,803. Information on employment in other factories constructed by the agency and subsequently sold is not available.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each year since 1976, the percentage of lettable floor space that was unoccupied in Welsh Development Agency factories.

| As at 31 March each year | Per cent. of total floor space vacant and available for letting |
|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 1·0 |
| 1979-80 | 2·5 |
| 1980-81 | 6·5 |
| 1981-82 | 14·6 |
| 1982-83 | 14·8 |
| 1983-84 | 13·5 |
| 1984-85 | 13·2 |
| 1985-86 | 10·4 |

Note:

Information for 1976-77 and 1977-78 is not available.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh Development Agency factory floor space is currently being used for (a) manufacturing purposes, (b) service industry purposes, (c) social purposes and (d) other purposes; and what is the balance of unused factory floor space.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: At 31 December 1986, 9·5 per cent. of Welsh Development Agency factory space was vacant and available for letting. The agency does not hold summary information on the activities of tenants.

Mid-Wales Development

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for increasing funds available to Mid-Wales Development for the purpose of industrial development in mid-Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I hope to make available about £10 million in total to the Development Board for Rural Wales in 1987-88. The final figure will be published in the Supply Estimates when they are presented to Parliament in March. The allocation of these funds between individual activities is largely a matter for the board.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the amounts of cash given to Mid-Wales Development in each of the years 1979-80 to 1986-87; and if he will publish a corresponding table giving each of these figures in constant money terms.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Funds, including housing subsidy, provided or expected to be provided to the Development Board for Rural Wales are, in cash terms:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 9·97 |
| 1980-81 | 7·45 |
| 1981-82 | 8·18 |
| 1982-83 | 8·92 |
| 1983-84 | 9·14 |
| 1984-85 | 9·72 |
| 1985-86 | 10·34 |
| 1986-87 | 10·10 |

Comparison in the terms asked for is not directly possible. Government programmes are no longer planned on a constant price basis. However, applying the gross domestic product deflator and at 1986-87 prices, the figures are:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 16·59 |
| 1980-81 | 10·44 |
| 1981-82 | 10·44 |
| 1982-83 | 10·61 |
| 1983-84 | 10·40 |
| 1984-85 | 10·61 |
| 1985-86 | 10·65 |
| 1986-87 | 10·10 |

Key Workers (Housing)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number of key workers' houses which are owned by the Mid-Wales Development, the Welsh Development Agency and local authorities in Wales; how many of these are currently standing empty; and if he will estimate the annual cost to public authorities in Wales, in terms of loss of rent, in holding key workers' houses empty.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At 31 December 1986, the Development Board for Rural Wales owned 84 houses specifically for key workers of which 14 were empty. The loss of rent during the current financial year is estimated to be £26,000. In addition, housing associations and local authorities in Mid Wales identify houses to which, for a limited time and in return for a guarantee of rent, they give the board nomination rights for key worker tenants. There were 231 such houses at 31 December 1986 of which 19 were empty. Rent guarantee payments made by the board are estimated at around £19,000 in the current financial year.

The Welsh Development Agency does not provide housing for key workers. It owns a small number of houses originally provided for key workers but no longer used for that purpose.

Information on key worker dwellings owned by local authorities throughout Wales is not collected centrally.

Information Technology Centres

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to how many information technology centres are currently operating in Wales; and what information he has as to the plans of the Welsh Development Agency to invest in more such centres.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: There are 12 information technology centres currently operating in Wales. The Welsh Development Agency has not invested in the development of these centres and has no plans to do so.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many women died of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer in each health authority area in Wales in 1986; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) in the Official Report on 14 January 1987 at columns 47-50.

Information for 1986 is not yet available.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will initiate a uniform national screening programme for the prevention of breast cancer for women aged over 50 years using oblique mammography; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on his Department's initiatives in promoting the early detection and prevention of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer; and what are the future plans in these spheres.

Mr. Mark Robinson: We have received the report of the United Kingdom expert working group on breast cancer screening and we shall make a statement as soon as possible on how we shall respond in Wales. During this financial year an additional £400,000 has been made available to district health authorities to strengthen the cervical cancer screening programme. Also, we have asked the Health Education Advisory Committee for Wales to advise on health education support for this programme. We expect to receive a reply shortly.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many specialist staff are employed by each of the district health authorities in Wales in the detection of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer.

Welsh Office (Parking)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he proposes to take any measures to eliminate the necessity of paying fines or fixed penalty payments incurred by official vehicles for unauthorised parking outside or near to the Welsh Office; and if he will make a statement.

Woodland

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates of the area of woodland felled in each month in Wales for the past 36 months for which figures are available.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had (a) to introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall reply as soon as possible.

THE ARTS

Clore Gallery

36. Mr. Gale asked the Minister for the Arts when he expects the Clore gallery extension to be opened to the public.

Mr. Luce: I am delighted to take this opportunity of acknowledging on behalf of the Government this generous gift by the Clore Foundation.

The Clore gallery extension to the Tate gallery will be opened by Her Majesty the Queen on 1 April and will be open to the public from Monday 6 April.

Marketing

37. Mr. Rowe asked the Minister for the Arts what response he expects to his recently announced scheme to encourage marketing within the arts.

Mr. Luce: The response so far has been very good; everyone has welcomed the scheme and many arts organisations have asked for application forms. The scheme is experimental and I anticipate making between 25 and 50 awards depending on the size of the project.

Public Funding

38. Mr. Conway asked the Minister for the Arts if he is satisfied that arts bodies are making the best possible use of the various sources of public funding available.

Mr. Luce: There are a wide variety of sources of funding both public and private and I urge all arts bodies to exploit them to the full.

Ministerial Visits

41. Mr. Key asked the Minister for the Arts how many arts organisations and bodies he has visited since becoming Minister for the Arts.

Mr. Luce: I have visited the following arts bodies and functions:

News International Publications

42. Mr. Greenway asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to the legal costs of Ealing, Camden and Hammersmith and Fulham councils concerning their ban on The Times, The Sun and other News International publications.

Mr. Luce: I have no information as to the legal costs incurred by these councils. As I told the House on 15 December, at column 407, I have written to the Audit Commission, which has informed me that the district auditors are alert to the situation.

Gallery Collections

Mr. Frank Field asked the Minister for the Arts if he will procure from each of the galleries for which he is responsible a list of those collections for which they are responsible, and which have not been shown to the public for (a) the last five years, (b) the last 10 years and (c) the last 20 years.

Mr. Luce: The collections in the galleries for which I am responsible are normally composed of individual items rather than discrete sub-collections. Information is not held in the form requested, but the galleries have provided the following information:

National Gallery
All paintings are on display

Tate Gallery
Because of contraints on space, only a proportion of the collection can be shown at one time. About 25 per cent. of the collection of British historic painting and sculpture is on display, a similar proportion of modern foreign art and about 12 per cent. of the large number of modern British works. Items from the collection are rotated between public display and the reserve collection. All items can be seen by arrangement. The opening of the Clore extension in April 1987 and the Tate in the north in the summer of 1988 will increase the proportion of works on display at any given time.

National Portrait Gallery
Between 20 and 25 per cent. of the collection is on display at any one time. Again, items are rotated between public display and the reserve and all items can be seen by arrangement.

Wallace Collection
All items are on public display.

National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside
(a) Walker Art Gallery. About 30 per cent. of the collection is on display at any one time. Displays are rotated and all items can be seen by arrangement. About half of the collection has not been on public display in the last ten years.

All museums and galleries are aware of the need to improve public access to their collections and I encourage them to do all they can within available resources.

Royal Opera House

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the alternative proposals for the Royal Opera House redevelopment scheme, phase II.

Mr. Luce: The board of the Royal Opera House is seeking planning and other approvals for an improvement scheme which would be funded by a commercial development. The Government have not yet taken a view.

Mr. James Lamond asked the Minister for the Arts what consultations he has had with (a) the Covent Garden Community Association or (b) other bodies concerning the Royal Opera House redevelopment, phase II.

Mr. Luce: I met representatives of the Covent Garden Community Association on 12 January to hear their views. I have also had discussions with the Royal Opera House. No other body has approached me.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister for the Arts what information he has received from the chairman of the Royal Opera House concerning his discussion with the Arts Council on the annual deficit of the Royal Opera House and the anticipated deficit for 1987; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am advised that the Royal Opera House hopes to break even in 1986-87. The Arts Council and the Royal Opera House are discussing the later's financial prospects for 1987-88. It would be premature to comment before these consultations are completed.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Steel Industry

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total number of jobs dependent on the British steel industry; and if he will list the figures for each area of Great Britian.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On the basis of a broad definition of the steel industry, which includes SIC groups 221 (the iron and steel industry), 222 (steel tubes) and 223 (drawing, cold rolling and cold forming of steel), the latest available regional distribution is based on the annual census of production (ACOP) for 1984 as follows:

| Standard Regions of England | Employment (1000s) |
|---|---|
| North | 12·4 |
| Yorkshire & Humberside | 31·0 |
| East Midlands | 6·7 |
| East Anglia | 0·7 |
| South East | 7·9 |
| South West | 1·2 |
| West Midlands | 18·8 |
| North West | 3·8 |

| Standard Regions | Employment (1,000s) |
|---|---|
| England | 82·6 |
| Wales | 21·2 |
| Scotland | 10·7 |
| GREAT BRITAIN | 114·4 |

Evidence based on the Department of Employment series of estimates of employees in employment suggests that total employment in these industry sectors fell between 10 and 15 per cent. between 1984 and 1986. The Department of Employment warns, however, that its estimates are subject to a considerable potential estimating error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry. There are no figures available for the number of jobs which are indirectly dependent on the steel industry, but calculations based on input-output tables indicate that the ratio of the number of jobs associated with the steel industry to the number of jobs in the steel industry itself is of the order of 1·5 to 1. It is not possible to give a regional breakdown of these associated jobs as the input-output tables are not broken down regionally and the jobs occur in a large number of industry and service sectors.

Fireworks

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements his Department is making to monitor the import of banger and minirocket fireworks into Britain.

Mr. Howard: The Health and Safety Executive, which samples all imported fireworks for safety in normal use, is revising its licensing arrangements to tighten up on monitoring and approving imports in order to overcome the problems experienced over the last two years. In addition, the firework manufacturers have agreed to reduce this year the number of mini-rockets with bangers in their tips and to eliminate the latter altogether by the following season. I am not aware of problems with imported bangers as such.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what has been the change in the number of firework accidents taking place in the street in Scotland in the latest two available years;

(2) if he will publish the incidence of firework accidents by age group in Scotland in each of the latest two available years;

(3) what has been the change in the number of firework accidents in the latest available year attributed to (a) bangers and (b) rockets in Scotland;

(4) what has been the incidence of firework accidents in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Howard: The figures for firework injuries in Scotland for 1986 will be available shortly. The figures for previous years are as follows:

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| (1) Total injuries | |
| 1976 | 22 |
| 1977 | 24 |
| 1978 | 41 |
| 1979 | 30 |
| 1980 | 30 |
| 1981 | 35 |
| 1982 | 25 |
| 1983 | 38 |
| 1984 | 37 |
| 1985 | 62 |
| (ii) Street injuries | |
| 1984 | 15 |
| 1985 | 32 |

| | 1984 | 1985 |
|---|---|---|
| (iii) Injuries by age | | |
| Over 20 | 6 | 13 |
| 16-20 | 5 | 8 |
| 13-15 | 15 | 19 |
| Under 13 | 11 | 22 |
| (iv) Injuries caused by bangers and rockets | | |
| Rockets | 7 | 14 |
| Bangers | 16 | 21 |

All these figures are for Scotland only.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the workings of the agreement reached with the Firework Makers Guild on restricting the number of banger fireworks made.

Mr. Howard: Yes. Since 1975 the number of bangers let off has been cut by well over one half, and since 1979 their explosive content has been reduced by 20 per cent.

Companies Acts Investigations

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 16 January, Official Report, column 324, about Companies Act investigations, if he will give for each of the investigations listed the grounds for appointing the inspectors.

Mr. Howard: No. There is no statutory requirement to disclose the grounds for an investigation and it is a long-established practice not to do so.

2,4,5-T (Imports)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report the quantity of 2,4,5-T imported into the United Kingdom for each month in 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information is available only for the months January to October 1986. The United Kingdom imported no 2,4,5-T for that period.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Cement Imports

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter), Official Report, 10 December 1986, column 175, what has been the outcome of discussions with the European Commission and with the Greek Government concerning subsidised cement imports from Greece; what further steps he proposes to take to protect both the British cement industry and those parts of British Coal's operations which are dependent on a healthy cement industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission reached agreement with the Greek Government in December on the phasing out of Greek export subsidies and the introduction of a safeguard clause which could be triggered if market disruption is threatened. The Greek Government have also given an assurance not to disrupt the United Kingdom market. I met a delegation of Members representing United Kingdom cement and coal industries on 22 January to discuss these arrangements and am sending the right hon. Member a note of the meeting.

Lloyd's

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason he has not published the report of his inspectors' inquiry into the affair involving Ian Posgate, Lloyd's and Alexander Howden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Aircraft (Retrofitting)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received regarding the contract for the retrofitting in the United States of America of British Aerospace aircraft belonging to British airlines; what estimate he has made of the employment effects of this contract on British engineering industries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the contract for the retrofitting of British aircraft in the United States of America with Rolls-Royce Tay engines; and if Rolls-Royce has given any financial guarantees in connection with this contract.

Mr. Pattie: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Regional Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate for each region of England, at 1986 prices, spending on (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance for each year until 1989-90.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Estimates of regional assistance are produced only for England as a whole. I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him on 20 January, (at columns 466-67; by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister about future provision for regional development grant expenditure in England. The Prime Minister has today answered a further question from the hon. Gentleman requesting the equivalent information on regional selective assistance.

Manufacturing Investment

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the change in the real value of manufacturing investment from 1979 to the latest date for which figures are available for each region of England; and if he will express the figures for each region for manufacturing investment in 1979 and the latest year for which figures are available at 1984 prices.

Net Capital Expenditure for Regions of England in 1979 and 1984 at 1984 Prices

| Region | 1979 £ million | 1984 £ million | Percentage cha[illegible] |
|---|---|---|---|
| North | 899 | 522 | −42 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 916 | 605 | −34 |
| East Midlands | 701 | 557 | −21 |
| East Anglia | 309 | 255 | −17 |
| South East | 2,318 | 2,013 | −13 |
| South West | 553 | 541 | −2 |
| West Midlands | 1,034 | 842 | −19 |
| North West | 1,424 | 976 | −31 |
| England | 8,153 | 6,311 | −23 |

Car Sales

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the proportion of cars sold in the United Kingdom which were assembled in the United Kingdom by the Rover Group, Ford, General Motors and Peugeot, respectively, for 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following is the information requested, based on new car registration data for the United Kingdom.

| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Rover Group | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Ford | 57 | 56 | 64 |
| General Motors | 42 | 44 | 56 |
| Peugeot/Talbot | 35 | 31 | 35 |

Insider Dealing

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number and qualifications of the inspectors engaged on the inquiry, the number and grades of staff assisting the inspectors and the percentage of their normal working time being spent by each in all current inquiries established by him under the Companies Acts or in relation to insider dealing.

Mr. Howard: The total number of inspectors engaged on inquiries under the Companies Act or in relation to insider dealings is 42, including 20 specialist departmental officers engaged full-time on confidential inquiries under section 447 of the Companies Act. Of the other 22, 11 are lawyers, seven are accountants, and the other four have extensive experience relevant to the matter under investigation. I regret that information about the percentage of normal working time spent on the inquiries by each inspector could be provided only at disproportionate cost and by diverting effort from the investigations themselves. Inspectors are well aware of the importance of completing their investigations as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to the answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 583, about civil servants in the Office of Fair Trading, what action was taken by the junior official referred to; and how many Office of Fair Trading and Monopolies and Mergers Commission investigations were involved.

Mr. Howard: I could not answer the first part of the question without risking prejudice to the investigation and to any criminal proceedings which might result.

As regards the second part, the inspectors' inquiries are continuing. They are empowered to investigate any possible contravention of the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act involving information relating to the exercise of the functions of the Director General, the Commission or the Secretary of State in relation to merger situations under the Fair Trading Act.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Butcher: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Timeshare Properties

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will introduce legislation to ensure that those who agree to buy timeshare properties are given a limited period of reflection during which they may change their mind and retrieve any money placed with the developers as a deposit; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will initiate and publish a code of practice to be observed by firms selling timeshare properties; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he expects his Department's consumer advice leaflet on timeshare properties to be published; what type of advice or information it will contain with particular regard to standards to be observed in approaches to potential customers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) on 3 December 1986, at column 634, I do not at present intend to introduce legislation on time share. There are three trade associations covering most United Kingdom developers and members of these associations voluntarily provide cooling-off periods during which customers may have an opportunity to reconsider their purchase. I welcome this and I do not feel that a code of practice would materially add to the protection offered by this arrangement. I also believe that it is important that people are fully aware of the facts when they are considering purchasing time share. With this object my Department will be publishing a consumer advice leaflet on time sharing on 27 January. It is aimed at the potential time share buyer and provides advice and a checklist of items to bear in mind.

Share Dealing

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish a scheme under section 54 of the Financial Services Act 1986 to compensate clients of licensed share dealers who default on their obligation to buy shares, unit trusts and other securities.

Mr. Howard: Not in anticipation of the rest of new regulatory framework within which section 54 is intended to operate. Besides this, the application of the arrangements made in due course under section 54 retrospectively would run counter to the general presumption against retrospective legislation, and it is difficult to see how it could be arranged equitably.

Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 583, what action has been taken or is proposed in relation to the junior official at the Office of Fair Trading implicated in the inquiry into insider trading.

Mr. Howard: The Director General announced on 27 January that he is reviewing the position of the employee concerned.

City Investment Centres

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider making ex gratia payments to compensate clients of City Investment Centres who dealt with the company during the period after his Department's inspector had gone into the company and before his Department closed the company down on 7 November 1986.

Mr. Howard: Much as I sympathise with the people in question, I do not consider that there are grounds for ex gratia payments. The institution of confidential inquiries does not necessarily mean that the firm in question is unsound.

Patent Office

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans he has for the future of the Patent Office;

(2) what plans he has for the patent information network;

(3) whether he will make it his policy that the British Library should retain responsibility for running the patent information network on behalf of the Patent Office;

(4) if he will direct P. E. Consultancy to reconsider the findings it has recently submitted on the future of the patent information network.

Mr. Pattie: The Government's plans for the Patent Office were announced in the White Paper, "Intellectual Property and Innovation," Cmnd. 9712. It is the intention to make the Patent Office a statutory non-departmental public body as soon as legislation can be introduced. P. E. Consultancy Services were retained by the Patent Office to assist in the preparation of plans for hiving-off. They were not asked to examine the patent information network. My Department wishes to see the patent information network used to the best advantage of United Kingdom industry, and the Government's plans to hive-off the Patent Office include proposals to develop information services to this end. My Department is not, however, responsible for the British Library and it is not open to us to determine the policies of the British Library. The Patent Office and the British Library do, nevertheless, work closely together and will continue to do so.

CIVIL SERVICE

Management and Personnel Office

43. Mr. Rowe asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he intends to publish a report on the work on the Management and Personnel Office.

Mr. Luce: This is the first report on the work of the Management and Personnel Office during 1985 and 1986 and will be released on Wednesday 28 January. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

Management Reform

45. Mr. Conway asked the Minister for the Civil Service if he will list the major improvements in the Civil Service attributable to management reform since 1979.

Mr. Luce: Higher productivity, better value for money, and more professional management.

Northern Region

46. Mr. Dormand asked the Minister for the Civil Service what is the number of Civil Service posts transferred to the northern region since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The dispersal programme announced on 26 July 1979 does not include any transfer of posts to the northern region. Full details of posts that may have been transferred there by Departments for management reasons are not held centrally, but the Government continue to provide a substantial number of Civil Service jobs in the region; in fact, over 33,000 posts. This represents a higher proportion of the regional labour force than in many other regions in the country and is above the national average.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Debt

Mr. Ground asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the national debt, including foreign currency debt but excluding official holdings, outstanding at the end of March in each of the years 1979 to 1986, inclusive, as a percentage of gross domestic product, average measure, at current market prices centred on 31 March; and what is his estimate of the national debt so expressed for 1987 and 1988.

Mr. MacGregor: The figures are as follows:

Market holdings of national debt[1] as a percentage of gross domestic product[2] at market prices

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| end March 1979 | 36.5 |
| 1980 | 34.5 |
| 1981 | 38·3 |
| 1982 | 38·3 |
| 1983 | 38·6 |
| 1984 | 41·2 |
| 1985 | 42·2 |
| 1986 | 42·6 |

Note:

No estimates for 1987 or 1988 are available.

Transport International Routier

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Her Majesty's Customs and Excise permits were issued to Transport International Routier in 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985 from the Geneva headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Transport International Routier licences were taken up in 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985 by the eastern bloc countries and the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: TIR carnets for eastern bloc countries are issued by guarantee associations approved in the individual countries concerned. Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has no readily available statistics.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost of extending value added tax bad debts relief (a) to all debts eligible for relief under section 130(i) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 and (b) to all unsatisfied judgment debts, indicating in each case the extent to which the cost would be affected by the proposals in his consultative document, "Value-added Tax: Small Business Review", to permit smaller traders to account for value added tax on a cash basis;

(2) what information he has concerning the increase in value added tax revenue which would occur if the standard method of reckoning gross takings were abolished as proposed in his consultative document "Value-added Tax: Small Business Review"; and what is the number and size of traders who would be affected.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many individuals paid capital gains tax on the sale of shares, for the year 1985-86; and what was the total yield on capital gains tax for 1985-86 from such sales of shares;

(2) how many individuals paid £750 or more capital gains tax on the sale of shares for 1985-86; and what was the total yield in capital gains tax from such individuals.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many television sets there are at his official residence; and who is responsible for paying for the licence fee.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS (Staff)

Mr. Mates asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many employees work for each regional health authority in England, excluding medical and dental staff working at district level; what is the total cost of these employees by each region; and how many districts there are in each region.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry that I cannot provide the information precisely as my hon. Friend wishes. In particular, it is not possible separately to identify medical and dental staff working at district level; all medical and dental staff have, therefore been excluded. Such information as is available centrally is shown in the table.

National Health Service Non-medical staff at Regional Health Authority headquarters and headquarter units by region at 30 September 1985 and number of districts per region at this date.

| Region | Number of districts in region | National Health Service non-medical staff in post in Regional Health Authority headquarters and headquarter units at 30 September 1986[1][2] whole-time equivalents | Total cost of National Health Service non-medical staff 1985-86 £[3] |
|---|---|---|---|
| Northern Regional Health Authority | 16 | 990 | 8,120,814 |
| Yorkshire Regional Health Authority | 17 | 1,180 | 9,175,822 |

| Mersey Regional Health Authority | 10 | 990 | 6,917,725 |

Notes:

[1] Figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole time equivalents.

[2] Includes General Managers.
[3] These figures are derived from annual accounts of Regional Health Authority's in England. Excludes expenditure on ambulance staff.

Pharmaceuticals (Code of Practice)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions since 1979, the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry has informed his Department that it has been investigating an alleged breach of its code of practice; on how many occasions there was a ruling that there had been a breach; and what action was taken by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry on each occasion.

Mr. Newton: Available information is for the period from 1984 when the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI) began to communicate the findings of its code of practice committee to the Department of Health and Social Security, the British Medical Association, the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, the British Medical Journal, and the Pharmaceutical Journal. Our records are of 10 such communications during this period and of ABPI inquiries into 106 allegations, 48 of which were proven. ABPI's normal action is to require an undertaking that the breach will cease and not recur. In the case of one breach, it was decided also to suspend the company's membership of ABPI and to conduct a further review of its promotional activity.

Drug Companies (Monitoring)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will request the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry to inform him of the methods it uses to monitor the relationship between general practitioners and drug companies, and the marketing methods of companies.

Mr. Newton: No. The Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry provides for complaints of breach of its code of practice to be received from any person. These are investigated by a committee whose chairman is an independent lawyer and the outcome is made available for publication.

Heating Additions

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the total cost of heating additions in 1978-79 and in the latest year for which figures are available in actual and real terms, together with the numbers of persons who received such additions in each year.

| Year | Numbers qualifying (000s) | Expenditure £ (millions) |
|---|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 1,546 | 90 |
| 1984-85 | 2,829 | [1]400 |

It is estimated that expenditure in 1984-85—the latest year for which information is available — is approximately £140 million more in real terms than in 1978-79.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals the Government now have to amend the £500 saving limitation in connection with cold weather payments.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 25 November 1986 at column 191.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for cold weather payments have been received by each local office of his Department in respect of the week commencing 12 January.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications have been received for the £5 severe weather payment for the week 12 to 18 January; how many had been paid by 20 January; and what is each figure as a percentage of the estimated number of people eligible.

Mr. Major: Information on the number of applications for exceptionally cold weather payments received in respect of week commencing 12 January and the number of payments made by 20 January is not yet available. It will be provided in due course.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why Tottenham Department of Health and Social security office has refused to accept a bulk claim for severe weather payments for the week 12 to 18 January inclusive from the Broadwater Farm neighbourhood office on behalf of pensioners over 65 years and families with children under the age of two years on supplementary benefit living within the London borough of Haringey; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy that pensioners not normally in receipt of supplementary pensions should have their heating requirement assessed as £5 per week greater during exceptionally severe weather; and that if this additional cost puts them over the supplementary pension threshold they should receive the severe weather payment.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Members have replies as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate for the most recent possible date (a) the cost of extending long-term supplementary benefit to the long-term unemployed and (b) how many claimants would benefit.

Mr. Major: (a) £540 million; (b) 1·2 million claimants.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of (a) United Kingdom and (b) English and Welsh gross domestic product was spent on the Health Service in (i) 1966 and (ii) 1983.

Mr. Newton: It is customary to express spending on particular services as a proportion of gross domestic product, measured at market prices. These data are available only on a United Kingdom basis. National Health Service gross spending in 1983 was 5·5 per cent. of GDP; the comparable figure for 1966 was 3·7 per cent.

AIDS

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will include in his campaign against the spread of AIDS promotion of the diaphragm, together with the use of a spermicide containing nonoxinol-9; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government already stress the value of condoms in reducing the risk of transmitting HIV infection. As yet, there is no clinical evidence that other barrier methods are effective, with or without these spermicides. However, this is being kept under review.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional resources Her Majesty's Government intend to provide for counselling and treating AIDS patients, for the extra nursing and medical staff, including research staff needed, for the general education of the public about AIDS, and for the provision of clinics and hospices needed for patient care; and what resources will be provided for those needs over five and 10 years respectively.

Mr. Newton: The Government recognise the importance and necessity of allocating resources appropriately to meet the needs of patients and the public with regard to AIDS. My right hon. Friend has set out in his replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 1 December 1986 at columns 525-526 and to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 18 December at column 703 the level of additional resources already allocated or planned in England for publicity and research, for extra work in the blood transfusion and public health laboratory services, for special counselling for haemophiliacs, for services to drug addicts, for support by voluntary services and for health authorities, who will decide upon the staffing requirement and service provision for patients that is most appropriate to local needs. Similar measures are being taken or are under consideration in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Government will continue to keep the future need for resources under close review in the light of increasing knowledge, both in the United Kingdom and abroad, of how best to meet the problem of AIDS.

Departmental Computer Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to the Inland Revenue; what is the anticipated number of such transfers; and for what purpose those transfers will take place;

(2) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise; and for what purpose those transfers will take place;

(3) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to the Home Office; what is the anticipated number of such transfers; and for what purpose those transfers will take place.

Mr. Lyell: Electronic Data Systems is among five consortia which have expressed an interest in the proposal for the possible establishment of a shared Government data network. Each consortium will shortly have an opportunity to submit formal proposals.

If such a network is established there are no plans to use it for exchange of information between this Department and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise or the Home Office.

It is expected that this Department will, in due course, wish to use the facility (with appropriate safeguards to protect confidentiality) to transfer information relating to income tax deductions and taxable national insurance benefits between it and the Board of Inland Revenue. This information, currently exchanged on magnetic tape, helps the board to calculate the correct income tax liability.

The number of such transfers is primarily determined by the number of individuals who are in employment or who receive taxable national insurance benefits.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single persons under and over 26 years and how many married couples (a) with children and (b) without children respectively, in Coventry, are in receipt of board and lodging payments.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many single persons under and over 26 years and how many married couples (a) with children and (b) without children, in Ipswich, are in receipt of board and lodging payments;

(2) how many single persons under and over 26 years and how many married couples (a) with children and (b) without children, in Colchester, are in receipt of board and lodging payments;

(3) how much his Department is paying to persons living in Colchester for board and lodging.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NHS (Thames Regions)

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients received National Health Service treatment in the four Thames health authority regions in 1978 and in the latest year for which figures are available.

National Health Service hospitals

|---|---|---|
| In-patient cases treated | | |
| North West Thames | 399·5 | 418·8 |
| North East Thames | 458·1 | 541·1 |
| South East Thames | 436·3 | 501·6 |
| South West Thames | 314·3 | 344·4 |
| ALL THAMES RHAs | 1,608·2 | 1,805·9 |
| Total out-patient attendances | | |
| North West Thames | 2,803·3 | 2,734·8 |
| North East Thames | 3,452·2 | 3,725·6 |
| South East Thames | 3,156·7 | 3,307·4 |

[1] Due to National Health Service restructuring and resultant boundary changes in 1982 the figures are not strictly comparable. Details are as follows:

1. Hammersmith and Acton Hospital formerly in North West Thames region became Hammersmith SHA (now Hammersmith and Queen Charlottes).
2. Middlesex Hospital; Athlone House, London N6, Hospital for Women, London W1; Marlborough Day Hospital and St. Luke's (Woodside) Hospital, North West Thames region, now North East Thames region.
3. Ashford Hospital, Middlesex, South West Thames region, now North West Thames region.
4. Royal National ENT, Shaftesbury, St. Peters, St. Pauls, St. Philips and Royal National Orthopaedic Hospitals formerly Board of Governors administered, now North East Thames region.
5. St. Johns Hospital for Diseases of the Skin formerly Board of Governors administered, now South East Thames region.

Drugs and Medicines

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the conspicuousness of warning labels on those drugs which, when taken in combination with alcohol, increase the risks of driving a motor vehicle.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if Generics (UK) Limited, has a manufacturing licence to produce medicinal products within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: Generics (UK) Limited has a licence under the Medicines Act 1968 and 1971 to manufacture and assemble within the United Kingdom products of the description or general classification specified in the licence.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has inspected all the overseas manufacturing sites of products supplied to the National Health Service by Generics (UK) Limited.

Mr. Newton: The principal overseas manufacturing sites for products for which Generics (UK) Limited holds United Kingdom product licences have all been inspected as part of the Department's regular inspection programme. One further site remains to be visited and this is scheduled for early next month.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether his Department has received any information from the Australian Department of Health in respect of a generic medicine, glibenclamide, supplied by Alphapharm (PTY) Limited; and whether, in view of Alphapharm's links with Generics (UK) Limited, he is satisfied that no supplies of this particular preparation have reached the United Kingdom market;

(2) if his Department has received any information from the Australian Department of Health with regard to some 20 generic medicines tested in a South African quality control laboratory, which are being investigated by the Australian regulatory authorities; and whether he is satisfied that bioavailability data generated in the same South African quality control laboratory has not been used to support product licence applications to the United Kingdom licensing authority on behalf of Generics (UK) Limited or any other importers.

Mr. Newton: We are aware of the allegations made in Australia and are in touch with the authorities there. We have no evidence of any hazard affecting patients in the United Kingdom but we are keeping the matter under close review and will take appropriate action should it be needed to safeguard the health of patients. On the questions about particular data, all information provided to the licensing authority in support of applications made under the Medicines Act 1968 is treated as confidential under that Act.

Childhood Leukaemia

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the information his Department holds on the incidence of childhood leukaemia in different areas of England.

Mrs. Currie: The numbers of registrations of newly diagnosed cases of all forms of leukaemia by age groups under age 20 years for regional health authority of usual residence for 1983, the latest available year, are shown in the table. These data are held in postcoded form, so that it is possible to produce analyses for a number of different groupings by geographical location.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Lyell: The Department obtains pre-printed letterheads and notepads through Her Majesty's Stationery Office which secures the most appropriate materials at the best possible price. Recycled paper does not meet this criterion for use in letterheads and notepads and is not, therefore, purchased for the Department.

Unemployment and Health

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of research projects funded by his Department on the relationship between youth unemployment and health;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of research projects funded by his Department on the relationship between unemployment and health.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is not currently supporting any research specifically on the relationship between unemployment and health in any age group but the following projects were completed in 1986:

(i) Study of the relationship between unemployment and health (Professor W. W. Holland, United Medical Schools of Guy's and St. Thomas' hospital).

(ii) 1971 census circumstances and changes 1971-81 according to economic position in 1981 census (Professor A. J. Fox, the City University, London). This project formed a small part of City university's analyses of the longitudinal study census sample, some of which have focused on the association between unemployment and mortality.

Heart Disease

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, when planning his Department's forthcoming Look After Your Heart campaign, he will take account of the conclusions reached by the sugars task force of the United States Food and Drug Administration concerning the atherosclerosis and heart disease.

Mrs. Currie: Planning for the Look After Your Heart campaign is taking account of all relevant scientific evidence.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he has now undertaken with representatives of voluntary organisations and of the local authority associations on the implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation Act) 1986; if he will bring sections 5(1) and 5(2) into force immediately so that disabled people leaving further education in 1991 may be identified at the age of 14 years and not risk losing their rights under the Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Officials from the Department met officers of the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities on 19 December to discuss the implementation of the Act and, in particular, the possible resource implications of sections 5 and 6 (including sections 5(1) and 5(2).) I am hoping to meet the Associations myself at the earliest practicable date to continue these discussions. I have also agreed to meet representatives of the main voluntary organisations with an interest in the act at an appropriate stage to discuss its implementation. No decision can be taken on the timing of the implementation of sections 5 and 6, or any part of them, until the issue of the possible resource implications of these sections has been resolved.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to make an inquiry under section 36 of the National Assistance Act 1948 of any local authorities which publish a nil budget estimate for any service for which they have a duty to assess the needs of disabled people under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled persons Act 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Organ Transplant

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration his Department has given to the bid for Wythenshawe hospital to be recognised as a fourth heart transplant centre; what action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The bid has been passed, with those from other health authorities, to the Supra Regional Services Advisory Group. A decision on the location of the fourth centre will be taken when the Group's advice to the Secretary of State has been received and considered.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has conveniently available figures for the total number of hip replacement operations performed under the National Health Service in (a) 1979 and (b) 1984.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my predecessor to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir David Price) on 3 June 1986 at column 533.

Mrs. M. Godley

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to give a definitive answer with regard to the retirement and superannuation position of Mrs. M. Godley, formerly of 38 Mount Pleasant, Brixham, Devon, following letters from the hon. Member for South Hams to him on 14 August, on 28 August and on 15 December 1986.

Mr. Lyell: My noble Friend wrote to my hon. Friend on 21 January 1987.

Hypothermia

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state, in respect of each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 (a) how many men reached the age of 65 years, (b) how many women reached the age of 60 years, (c) how many pensioners were admitted to hospital with hypothermia-related illnesses and (d) how many pensioners died during each of the stated years with hypothermia or hypothermia-related illnesses recorded as the primary cause of death.

Mrs. Currie: It is not possible to give precise figures for the number of people reaching a certain age in any given year. However, annual population estimates give the number of people of any particular age at 30 June of the year in question. Table (a) shows the estimated number of men aged 65 years and women aged 60 years for the mid-years 1980-85 for England and Wales, and for England.

Table (b) gives the estimated number of hospital admissions of persons of pensionable age (men aged 65 years and over, and women aged 60 years and over) with a main or subsidiary diagnosis of hypothermia. The figures are estimated from the hospital in-patient inquiry, which is based upon a one in 10 sample of in-patient records from National Health Service non-psychiatric hospitals. Figures for 1980 and 1981 are for England and Wales, but for 1982 to 1984 are for hospitals in England only. Data for Wales from 1982 are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. Statistics for 1985 are not yet available.

Table (c) shows the available data on the number of deaths to persons of pensionable age with any mention of hypothermia on the death certificate, irrespective of whether it did or did not appear as the underlying cause of death. The figures relate to deaths registered in England and Wales, and of these, the number usually resident in England.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will initiate a uniform national screen programme for the prevention of breast cancer for women over 50 years of age using oblique mammography in England; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has received the final report of the Forrest committee on breast cancer.

Mr. Harry Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has yet received the final report of the Forrest committee on breast cancer.

Mrs. Currie: A report by Professor Sir Patrick Forrest's United Kingdom working group on breast cancer screening has been received and sent for printing. The Government are urgently considering their response and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his Department's initiatives in promoting the early detection and prevention of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer and its future plans.

Mrs. Currie: Concerning breast cancer screening, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him and the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) today.

The Government have already taken a number of urgent steps to reduce deaths from cervical cancer by improving the effectiveness of health authorities' screening programmes. All health authorities have been required to give priority to making improvements, including implementing computerised call and recall systems and ensuring that laboratories avoid backlogs of cervical smears. Our detailed guidance to health authorities is currently under review, and a fuller announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many specialist staff are employed by each of the district health authorities in England in the detection of (a) breast and (b) cervical cancer.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women died of (a) breast cancer and (b) cervical cancer in England in 1986; and what are the figures for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is shown in the table. Figures for the whole of 1986 are expected by the middle of 1987.

Number of deaths registered[1] with underlying cause as (a) malignant neoplasm of female breast and (b) malignant neoplasm of cervix uteri
Usual residents of England

Child Deaths

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children died in hospitals outside the South Cumbria health authority area, where they had been transferred by the authority for treatment for each of the past five years; and what plans he has to enable the families of deceased children to recover the costs of returning the body for burial within the authority.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the numbers of children normally resident in South Cumbria who have died in hospitals outside the health authority's area is not available in precisely the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. My hon. Friend may wish to write for information to the chairman of South Cumbria health authority.

Health authorities already can pay for the transport of a body where the death occurs in a hospital some distance from home if the relatives wish the burial to be in their home area but are unable to meet the costs of transport. Each case is considered on its merits by the health authority involved, but general guidance is contained in HM(72)41, a copy of which is in the Library.

Occupational Health

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys will publish its first analysis of the new death certificate which includes a coding for possible occupational causes of death.

Mrs. Currie: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys expects to publish in 1988 annual volumes with data from the new death certificate and covering the response to the new question on whether death might have been due to or contributed to by the employment followed at some time by the deceased.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to ensure that the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has adequate funding to carry out its work on occupational health, using its available statistics.

Mrs. Currie: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys work on occupational health is funded from the OPCS vote and is proceeding as normal. Future work programmes are, of course, reviewed in conjunction with decisions on public expenditure provision.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in each of the last three years on pregnancies of (a) under 20 weeks, (b) 20 weeks, (c) 21 weeks, (d) 22 weeks, (e) 23 weeks and (f) 24 weeks or more; and how many of the abortions in each case were performed under (i) ground 1 and (ii) ground 5 of the Act.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 by period of gestation and statutory grounds 1 and 5
Residents and non-residents
England and Wales 1983 to 1985

Grounds as listed in schedule 2 of the Abortion Regulations 1968:
1 Risk of life to woman
5 In emergency—to save life of woman

The full definition of statutory grounds appears in the introduction to the OPCS annual publication "Abortion Statistics".

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in pregnancies of 24 or more weeks gestation in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and what percentage of total abortions this figure represents in each of those years.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Lyell: Over each of the years in question the Department has laid approximately 100 to 145 statutory instruments. A number of amendments have been required in relation to these. The circumstances relating to the years preceding 1979 were broadly similar. I regret that the information necessary to identify each of the occasions requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

NHS Regulations

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services under what circumstances a health authority may legitimately refuse treatment for a National Health Service patient on the basis that it does not have a reciprocal arrangement with the authority within whose boundaries the patient lives.

Mr. Newton: The decision on whether or not to accept a patient lies with the consultant to whom he is referred, not with the health authority. However, consultants may agree with health authorities, as part of the planning process, that they will normally take patients only from a limited area, particularly in specialties where it is important for the patient that hospital, community and social services should work closely together.

Adjudication Officers

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will place in the Library a copy of the Chief Adjudication Officer's guidance on the full extent normal rule.

Mr. Lyell: The Chief Adjudication Officer's guidance on the full extent normal rule is contained in the Insurance Officers' Guide (IOG) part 2, Unemployment Benefit, paragraphs 2189 to 2243. A copy of the Insurance Officers' Guide is already in the Library.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he intends to make in the grades of officials appointed as adjudication officers, as a result of the provisions of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Lyell: None. Under the present instrument of appointment for adjudication officers, officials of clerical officer or local officer grade II rank or above can be appointed to act as adjudication officers.

Social Fund

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on ministerial responsibility for the proposed social fund inspectors.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Crewe District Health Authority

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the correspondence between his Department and the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich, he has anything to add to the answers of 5 November 1986, Official Report, column 473, on the funding of the Crewe district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: I assume the hon. Member is referring to my letter of 20 January 1987, which explained that the correct figures for the net revenue expenditure of Crewe health authority as a percentage of the net revenue expenditure of the Mersey region are:

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 6·9 |
| 1983-84 | 7·0 |
| 1984-85 | 7·0 |
| 1985-86 | 7·0 |

I have nothing further to add.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of abolishing employers' national insurance contributions in all assisted regions.

Mr. Major: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Vehicle Loans

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied that all persons in receipt of vehicle loans in the West Cumberland health district as of 1 August 1986 are complying with Whitley conditions in relation to those loans.

Mrs. Currie: Yes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the facility to National Health Service staff of vehicle loans under the Whitley conditions is funded.

Mrs. Currie: Vehicle loans to National Health Service staff required to use a car on official business are provided from health authorities' normal financial allocations and are repayable, with interest, over a maximum of five years.

Patient Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each district the expenditure on contractural arrangements for patient care in 1985-86.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 24 November 1986 col. 130]: Following are the figures recorded in the annual accounts of district health authorities for 1985-86. The table also includes the final audited figures for 1984-85, which supersede the provisional figures given in my predecessor's reply to the hon. Member on 25 November 1985 at columns 493-497.

Nurses

Mr. McCrindle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many qualified nurses leave the profession each year; how this compares with the number of nurses qualifying each year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 11 December 1986, c. 295]: I regret that information of this nature is not collected centrally. However, we are aware of some work undertaken by the Institute of Manpower Studies which suggests that about 10 per cent. of qualified nurses and midwives leave the National Health Service each year. This figure will include retirements, those leaving to undertake further post-basic training and other nursing employment. They are not therefore all lost to the profession. On that basis some 23,000 in wholetime equivalent terms left the NHS in England in the last year.

Influenza Vaccine

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the effect on the voluntary price regulation scheme of doctors who buy 'flu vaccine at a 20 per cent. discount which is not shown on the invoices to be reimbursed by his Department.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 13 January 1987, c. 179]: General medical practitioners who administer 'flu vaccine to patients on their lists are reimbursed for the cost of the vaccine at standard rates, not on the basis of invoiced charges for individual supplies. The Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme operates by controlling the aggregate costs and profits of pharmaceutical companies supplying medicines to the National Health Service. It does not seek to control the prices of individual products or the cost of particular transactions.

Local Offices

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of benefit offices which have closed for (a) the whole and (b) part of this past week due to the severe weather conditions.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1987, c. 540]: One local office reported that it was closed to the public for the whole of the week beginning Monday, 12 January, and 140 local offices have reported that they were closed to the public for part of the week due to severe weather conditions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Hargreaves asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will publish in the Official Report a consolidated list of private Members' Bills which received extra parliamentary time from the Government, the dates such time was given, the sponsors of each Bill and what stages received such time; and whether the Bill received the Royal Assent for each session since 1956.

Mr. Biffen: The information requested is given in the table:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Jopling: My Department, which obtains its supplies of stationery through Her Majesty's Stationery Office, does not use letterhead stationery and notepads made from recycled paper for reasons of financial economy. Recycled paper is significantly more expensive than paper of comparable quality made from new material.

Livestock Exports

Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what checks are made on the movement of farm livestock exported for slaughter; if he is satisfied that the conditions laid down are not significantly breached; and what action he has taken in respect of any such breach during the last three years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply today to his other question on this subject.

Crabs

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to seek to amend regulation EEC 3094/86 with regard to the landing of detached crab claws by foreign vessels on British soil.

Mr. Gummer: EC conservation regulation No. 3094/86, which revised Community fisheries conservation rules, came into operation only on 1 January this year. It was not possible to secure Community agreement to the inclusion of a measure dealing with the landing of detached crab claws in this regulation, but we shall be seeking to raise the matter again when the Community next considers a general revision to the regulation. I am afraid this is unlikely to be in the near future.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to amend the Undersized Crabs Order 1986 and the Crab Claws Prohibition and Landing Order 1986 in order that foreign vessels removing claws from undersized crabs would be subject to the same penalties in this country as British vessel owners engaged in similar practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Under Community law an individual member state may not apply its national fishery laws to nationals and vessels of other member states and this was made plain to the fishing industry during the consultation process on the preparation of these Orders.

Mr. Steen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions there have been over the last 12 months of British registered vessels for landing claws of under-sized crabs caught within British territorial waters.

Mr. Gummer: There have been no prosecutions so far under the Crab Claws (Prohibition of Landing) Order 1986, which came into operation on 4 April 1986

Mackerel Transhipment

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply of 19 January, Official Report, columns 409-10, regarding the decision to grant a limited trans-shipment operation to Eastern bloc vessels in Falmouth Bay, how many licences were granted and on what dates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Following close consultation with the Ministry of Defence and with Scottish industry, my Department has approved six eastern bloc vessels to receive trans-shipped fish at Falmouth; of these two made application for licence on 22 January and licences for these vessels were issued on 23 January.

Woodland (Felling)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will provide estimates of the area of woodland felled in each month in England for the past 36 months for which figures are available.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

(1) Section 12 of the Agriculture Act 1986 validated the Apple and Pear Development Council Order 1980 and the Apple and Pear Development Council (Amendment) Order 1980 so as to remove any doubts about its application to Wales.

(2) The Importation of Milk (Amendment) Regulations 1985 amended the Importation of Milk Regulations 1983 so as to remove the condition that milk and cream had to be imported in a closed container in which it had to be supplied to the ultimate consumer or to a catering establishment. There was legal doubt about this condition.

(3) On 8 March the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments reported that it had doubts about the vires of the Medicines (Animal Feeding Stuffs) (Enforcement) Regulations 1983 (Session 1982-83 HL 107 HC 29-XIX). Opportunity was taken to clarify the enabling powers (section 117 of the Medicines Act 1968) in the Animal Health and Welfare Act 1984, section 15. Subsequently the 1983 Regulations were re-enacted in the Medicines (Animal Feeding Stuffs) (Enforcement) Regulations 1985.

It should be noted that although the clarifying primary legislation was enacted in 1984 the 1983 Regulations re-enacted almost verbatim the Medicines (Animal Feeding Stuffs) (Enforcement) Regulations 1976.

Beef

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present extent of overhang of beef intervention stocks; how this compares with the situation at this time in 1986; and what are the prospects for 1987.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: At end-December 1986 the total amount of beef in public intervention stores in the Community was about 447,000 tonnes compared with 653,000 tonnes at end 1985. Following the agreement on reform of the beef regime reached in December, intervention will from April this year play a less prominent role in market support.

Livestock Exports

Mr. Hardy asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, following the recent transport of sheep to Spain in breach of his Department's conditions, he will prohibit the export of farm animals for slaughter.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: Animals exported for slaughter must, immediately before the journey, be rested for at least 10 hours and offered food and water at any officially approved lairage. They may be exported only if they have been certified as fit to travel by one of my verterinary staff. Two-tier vehicles used for these exports are subject to approval by my Department, and the animals must be loaded in the presence of an official inspector. Licences are not issued for export of live food animals to Spain because that country has not yet implemented Community welfare safeguards.

As regards breaches of the conditions, I am aware that the RSPCA has recently successfully prosecuted a lairage manager for non-observance of the 10-hour rule. Detailed investigations following complaints have not revealed significant breaches of other requirements. Nevertheless, in the light of recent reports about exports of sheep the Government have imposed further conditions before export licences are issued. Exporters now have to supply written proof from the importer of the final destination and proposed feeding and watering arrangements on longer journeys, and undertake to provide confirmation from the importer after the journey of the time at which such feeding and watering took place and at which the animals arrived at their final destination.

A ban on the export of farm animals for slaughter would almost certainly contravene the treaty of Rome and the Government have no plans to introduce one.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Cargoes (Road Accidents)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to change the emergency procedures for accidents on roads involving vehicles with a nuclear cargo; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on the methods used, or the procedures applied to the movement of nuclear weapons.

Service Men (Accommodation)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans for improving the management of the homes owned by Her Majesty's Government for the use of service men.

Mr. Freeman: The management of service housing is a complex matter and the Ministry of Defence is always looking for improvements in performance. The turnover of occupants is very high and requirements for houses are affected by changes in the roles and locations of establishments to meet the ever evolving needs of defence.

Management of the housing stock is undertaken by the single services, in line with the way that defence as a whole is managed; there are no proposals to change this position. However, policy issues are resolved centrally and progress and performance are monitored similarly and targets set accordingly.

A recent tri-service study on accommodation, which took advice from the private sector, made a number of useful recommendations which are being followed up, but no fundamental changes were proposed.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence (i) how many homes for the use of service men Her Majesty's Government own in the United Kingdom, (ii) how many of these homes are currently vacant and (iii) what proportion of the homes for the use of service men they own have been vacant on 1 December in each of the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: The stock of houses owned by the Ministry of Defence for use by service men in the United Kingdom as at 30 November 1986 totalled 82,062, of which 14,994 were vacant.

The proportion of houses vacant as at the dates shown below (see note) during the previous five years, were:

| Year | Number | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| 15 January 1982 | 13,600 | 15·6 |
| 15 January 1983 | 14,152 | 16·4 |
| 15 January 1984 | 14,316 | 16·7 |
| 15 January 1985 | 14,249 | 16·8 |
| 30 November 1985 | 14,012 | 16·7 |

Note: Up to July 1985, statistics were gathered based on the positions as at 15 January and 15 July: they are now collected using base dates 31 March, 31 July and 30 November.

Since 15 January 1982 the stock level has fallen by 5,188 and further disposals are programmed over the next three years. However, these reductions have not been reflected in the vacancy levels, largely because more and more service men have been choosing to become home owners.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to make available to local authorities, on a short-term basis, any of the homes which they own, for the use of service men, which are currently vacant.

Mr. Freeman: Where circumstances permit, it is Ministry of Defence policy to offer houses which are likely to be vacant for periods of at least six months to local authorities on the condition that the authority undertakes to return the properties with vacant possession at the end of the term of letting.

DROPS

Sir Ian Gilmour asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the right hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham will receive substantive answers to the 23 questions to which a holding answer was given on 16 December, Official Report, column 504-5.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Substantive replies were provided on 15 January, at columns 308 to 317 inclusive.

Stores and Clothing Research and Development Establishment

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he is conducting concerning possible contracting out of the Stores and Clothing Research and Development Establishment.

Mr. Freeman: A study is being carried out into the functions and activities of the Stores and Clothing Research and Development Establishment which includes an examination of the scope for contracting out. The Department would follow its normal consultation procedure on any proposals for contracting out resulting from the study.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence buys all its United Kingdom paper and most of its overseas requirements through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. The paper purchased by MOD for letterheads contains up to 20 per cent. recycled material as specified in Her Majesty's Stationery Office contracts. The Ministry was offered, and sampled, British-made paper with 100 per cent. recycled waste content, but rejected it primarily because it was up to 125 per cent. dearer than the current product. The bulk of notepads used in the Ministry come from surplus computer paper or printing off-cuts which would otherwise be disposed of as waste-paper. The Ministry will continue to test new Her Majesty's Stationery Office products in the paper-card ranges.

Sleeping Bags

Mr. Mudd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state, in respect of each of the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985 (a) how many sleeping bags surplus to the needs of Her Majesty's armed services were disposed of by tender or public auction and (b) the sums realised from the disposal of these articles in each stated year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department's records of quantities of surplus stores sold and details of receipts obtained are not in a form that would enable it to provide the information requested without incurring disproportionate expense.

Service Children's Schools

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received about the impact of the fall in the value of the £ sterling on the living standards of (a) teachers and (b) other United Kingdom based civilian staff employed by the service children's schools in the Federal German Republic; and what reply he has given.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have received a number of representations on behalf of MOD civil servants serving in Germany, the majority from teachers employed at service children's schools. It is clear from these representations that many of the complainants do not fully understand the terms of the formal foreign service allowance agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions which forms a part of their conditions of service. The agreement provides for the payment of a supplement to pay to enable staff at the overseas station to maintain a standard of living at least equivalent to that enjoyed by civil servants in the United Kingdom and provides for reviews of the Allowance to compensate for local price and exchange rate variations at certain formally defined trigger points. I am satisfied that during the period in which the value of the pound has been declining reviews of the allowance have been carried out in accordance with the terms of the agreement. My replies have conveyed these points.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) teachers and (b) other United Kingdom based civilian staff are currently employed by the service children's schools in the Federal German Republic; and how many vacancies remained unfilled at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At 6 January 1987 the numbers of teachers and United Kindom based civilian staff employed by the service children's schools in the Federal Republic of Germany, and the number of unfilled vacancies, was as follows:

| Grade | In post | Vacancies |
|---|---|---|
| United Kingdom based teacher | 1,024 | [1]Nil |
| Locally entered and directly employed teachers | 300 | Nil |

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will extend the system of local overseas allowance now paid to service men in the Federal German Republic to cover United Kingdom based civilian staff employed by his Department.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The basis for calculating and reviewing foreign service allowance is contained in a formal agreement reached between the official side and the trades union side of the Civil Service National Whitley Council. It is an agreement of longstanding and applies to all overseas stations where United Kingdom based civil servants are employed. The local overseas allowance paid to service men is an integral part of their overall conditions of service while serving overseas and reflects their totally different terms which have existed and developed over a very long period. It is not possible to isolate local overseas allowance as one particular aspect of those conditions and apply it to civil servants.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the extent of industrial action currently being taken by teachers employed by the service children's schools in the Federal Republic of Germany as a result of the fall in the local value of their salaries.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Some teachers employed in service children's schools in the Federal Republic of Germany are working to rule and withdrawing lunchtime supervision.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what compensation is payable to teachers and other staff of the service children's schools in the Federal German Republic to take account of reductions in pay caused by falls in the value of the £ sterling against the German mark.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: United Kingdom civil servants serving in Germany, including teachers, receive a supplement to salary known as foreign service allowance. They also receive London weighting. Under the terms of the FSA agreement with Civil Service trade unions special reviews take place when there is evidence that the local living costs of the overseas station which are affected by a combination of prices and exchange rates, have changed by 10 per cent. since the last review or by 7·5 per cent. if sustained for a period of four months. In addition, the FSA budget contains an inbuilt uplift to cushion against the effects of living cost increases which are insufficient to "trigger" a review. Over the past year two special reviews have been carried out in Germany, in February and November, and have resulted in FSA increases. The current level of FSA is £2,295 for a married accompanied official living in rent-free accommodation with free utilities and £865 for single personnel living in mess.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence when the foreign service allowance paid to teachers and staff of the service children's schools in the Federal German Republic was last reviewed; and with what result.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The last review for Germany was undertaken in November 1986. This resulted in increases to foreign service allowance effective from 1 December 1986 to £545 per annum for married accompanied United Kingdom-based civilians living in rent-free official accommodation with free utilities and £325 per annum for single personnel living in mess.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate in the fall in actual pay suffered by teachers and staff employed by service children's schools in the Federal German Republic as a result of the reduction in the value of the £ sterling against the German mark over the past 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the long-standing foreign service allowance agreement with the Council of Civil Service Unions only a proportion of the salary of a civil servant serving overseas is assessed, or needed, in terms of local currency. The remainder of salary is needed to meet sterling United Kingdom commitments, including tax and national insurance. This agreed local currency element for teachers working in service childre'ss schools in Germany, who are civil servants on period contract appointments, has been fully maintained under the terms of that agreement to take account of local price and exchange rate variations since January 1985, the date of implementation of the last full review of allowances in Germany.

Honduras (US Exercises)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what United Kingdom participation there will be in the United States exercises in Honduras Big Pine 87.

Mr. Stanley: There will be no participation by British armed forces in the United States-Honduran Exercise Big Pine 87.

Caribbean (Naval Visits)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what visits are planned by United Kingdom naval vessels to Caribbean countries in the next six months.

Mr. Stanley: Royal Navy vessels will be visiting a number of Caribbean countries during the next six months. Visits to Barbados, Antigua, Bermuda and Guadeloupe have been approved and others are in the process of being arranged. It is not our practice to provide specific details of the future movements of RN ships.

Industrial Programme (Expenditure)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence what undertaking his Department has given to the Committee of Public Accounts as to the proposed level of expenditure on an industrial programme which necessitates information about such a project being provided to the Committee; how many programmes have been commenced, completed or are still in progress, whose minimum projected or actual cost amounted to less than £50 million, £50 to £100 million, £100 to £150 million, £150 to £200 million and £200 to £250 million, respectively.

Mr. Younger: In July 1982, following a request from the Committee of Public Accounts to be provided each year with summarised information on the progress and costs of major defence projects, my Department sent to the Committee a table listing 24 defence equipment projects with authorised expenditure in excess of £200 million, and showing cost information in respect of each, and also a separate table relating to nuclear projects. In November 1982 the then Chairman of the Committee wrote to ask, inter alia, for

"a supplementary annual list of projects where project definition costs have exceeded, say, £10M; or alternative proposals designed to give the Committee early warning of projects during project definition which are likely to exceed the £200 million limit".

In reply, my Department undertook to see what could be done in the 1983 statements to identify projects which might involve substantial expenditure before they had reached the point at which they entered the table. In 1986 the Committee agreed that the threshold for inclusion should be increased from £200 million to £250 million.

The information sought in the second part of the question could not be supplied without disproportionate cost.

British Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis), on 12 December 1986, Official Report, column 268, relating to visits of Indonesian officials, it is now his policy to answer questions relating to visits of foreign delegations to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not policy to release details on visits of foreign delegations to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Royal Ordnance Factories

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the companies seeking to buy the royal ordnance factories; and what guarantees he has obtained on the pension rights of the royal ordnance factories' work force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The companies are in alphabetical order): British Aerospace, Ferranti, GKN and Trafalgar House. The sale of the Government's 100 per cent. shareholding in royal ordnance plc will not affect the operation of the royal ordnance (Crown Service) Pesion Scheme, which the Government are satisfied is comparable to the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme and provides a secure basis for the payment of fully indexed linked pensions.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what new arrangements Her Majesty's Government are making to protect the long-term interests of the work force of the royal ordnance factories in relation to pensions, sickness benefits, and involuntary redundancies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The terms and conditions of service of former royal ordnance factories employees were protected by arrangements made at the time of incorporation which ensured that taken as a whole they transferred to Royal Ordnance plc without detriment. The sale of the Government's 100 per cent. shareholding in the company will not change the legal identity of the employer of the work force and no new arrangements are therefore needed.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Defence what formula has been used by his Department to calculate the value of the royal ordnance factory at Radway Green.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In accordance with plans announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 24 July 1986, the Ministry of Defence is negotiating to sell royal ordnance plc as a whole. It follows that discrete valuations of individual parts of the business are not envisaged.

Boeing AWACS

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures will be laid down to ensure promised offsets to British subcontractors under the Boeing AWACS purchase are fully honoured.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Boeing Aerospace Company will be contractually committed to meet in full the offset arrangements, whereby it spends £130 on work for British companies for every £100 we spend on the E-3A. Although there is no doubt that this commitment will be honoured, the build-up of Boeing's business with United Kingdom firms will be monitored in accordance with normal practice, which involves continuous liaison with the firm and regular reporting on progress.

L/Cpl. S. J. Cockton

Mr. Raison asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the results of the inquiry into the death of L/Cpl. S. J. Cockton on 6 June 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the purposes and costs of the proposed communications satellite, project Zircon.

Mr. Younger: In accordance with the practice of successive Governments, I am not prepared to give details of intelligence matters.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence (a) when he first learned of the existence of the series of programmes on the Secret Society and (b) the programme on the Zircon satellite system.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier today.

Mr. Trafford Boughton

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if any attempt was made by his Department to solicit from Mr. Trafford Boughton a letter dissociating himself and his company from the British Broadcasting Corporation "Panorama" programme of 7 July 1986 on the awarding of the DROPS contract;

(2) if it was with ministerial authority that Major-General Stevan Stopford telephoned Mr. Trafford Boughton on 30 June 1986 requesting him to send a letter immediately to the Department dissociating himself and his company from the British Broadcasting Corporation "Panorama" programme of 7 July 1986 on the awarding of the DROPS contract;

(3) if it was with ministerial authority that officials of his Department (a) spoke on the telephone to Mr. Trafford Boughton in April and May 1986 and (b) spoke to him in person at the British Army equipment exhibition concerning a proposed television programme on the awarding of the DROPS contract;

(4) if his Department keeps any record of (a) telephone conversations and (b) informal discussions between officials and defence contractors or potential defence contractors.

(5) on what authority General Stopford was asked to ascertain directly from Mr. Trafford Boughton his attitude to the BBC "Panorama" programme on the DROPS contract;

(6) on what dates General Stopford sought to ascertain directly from Mr. Trafford Boughton his attitude to the DROPS contract;

(7) what was the source of his information that Mr. Trafford Boughton's conversation with General Stopford accorded exactly with the line volunteered on a separate occasion at the British Army equipment exhibition to the Chief of Defence Procurement and Brigadier Last;

(8) whether he will publish in the Official Report a report of the conversation between Mr. Trafford Boughton, the Chief of Defence Procurement and Brigadier Last at the British Army equipment exhibition;

(9) on what authority Brigadier Last and the Chief of Defence Procurement sought at the British Army equipment exhibition to ascertain Mr. Trafford Boughton's attitude to the "Panorama" programme on the DROPS contract.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his replies, 12 January 1987, c. 98, and 23 January 1987]: As I informed the hon. Member on 13 January, at column 232, the telephone conversation between Major-General Stopford and Mr. Boughton was prompted by the need to confirm the extent to which Boughton's was involved in the criticisms of the DROPS procurement in the proposed "Panorama" programme. Boughton's is an established and respected defence contractor of long standing and it was important, given the normal rules of commercial confidentiality underlying the Department's relationship with its contractors, that the Department should be quite sure of the company's position before deciding on what it might itself say publicly in response to the "Panorama" criticisms. There are no contemporary records of either the telephone conversation with Major-General Stopford or of the conversation with senior defence officials at the British Army equipment exhibition at which Mr. Boughton volunteered similar statements to those expressed in his letter. Ministers were not involved on either occasion. The conversation at BAEE was, however, initiated by Mr. Boughton himself and he did not subsequently refer to either event when invited by my noble Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement to detail his concerns over the DROPS procurement at their meeting on 20 November. No pressure was put on Mr. Boughton to write his letter of 30 June and Mr. Boughton has not made any such representation directly to the responsible Ministers or senior officials.

"The Secret Society"

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence by what means he first obtained knowledge of the content of Duncan Campbell's film for BBC Scotland, "The Secret Society".

Mr. Younger [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in answering a question from the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours) earlier today.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Calls

Mr. Cohen asked the Lord Privy Seal how many times during the last two years access has been given to persons wishing to inspect the log of telephone calls from the Palace of Westminster; and if he will specify in each case the date and the name of the person or organisation granted access.

Mr. Biffen: The facility enabling calls made from the Palace of Westminster telephone extensions to be logged has been available only since 9 September 1985 when the new telephone exchange was installed.

I assume that the hon. Member is referring to printouts from the logging equipment. Apart from the test printouts which were obtained during September 1985 when the equipment became operational, access has been granted on only two occasions. On 17 October 1986 and on 19 November 1986 the communications manager obtained printouts at the request of the Serjeant at Arms Department.

Committees (Servicing Costs)

Mr. Prescott asked the Lord Privy Seal what has been the cost of servicing (a) Select and (b) Standing Committees of the House for each year since 1979.

Mr. Biffen: As was made clear by the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) in a reply to the right hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Mason) on 23 January 1985 at column 458, the cost of servicing Select Committees is not readily identifiable. Costs, other than salary costs, which are clearly attributable to Select Committees have been given in the Select Committee return since 1979.

The cost of servicing Standing Committees is also not readily identifiable.

EMPLOYMENT

"Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers"

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made on implementing the White Paper "Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers" (Cmnd. 9794); and what plans he has to achieve the objectives set out in the White Paper.

Mr. Trippier: We have made considerable progress in carrying out the proposals to reduce administrative burdens on businesses which were set out in the White Paper " Building Businesses . . . Not Barriers", which represent a balanced programme of action to remove unnecessary obstacles to enterprise and job creation while retaining essential protection.

The White Paper included proposals for a number of reviews of present regulations and consultation on new measures which are still in progress; other items await suitable legislative opportunities.

We have given particular emphasis to improving communications between Government and business through better access to information and improving the quality of publications. The mechanisms for evaluating regulatory proposals are working well. The enterprise and deregulation unit has so far received more than 150 preliminary compliance cost assessments from different Departments which show the implications of new regulatory proposals. The unit is also involved in a wide range of current issues on enterprise and employment. Progress has been made in the European Community with the setting up of a small and medium-sized enterprise task force and a system of assessing the impact of Commission proposals. By these means we hope to ensure both better regulation of business and better enforcement of regulations.

As indicated at paragraph 11.5 of the White Paper, the Government will report further on progress during 1987.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector since 1979 (a) on Merseyside and (b) in Liverpool at the latest available date.

Mr. Trippier: The precise information requested is not available. The Department's statistics for counties and smaller areas monitor only net changes in employment between census dates.

No census was taken in 1979, but between June 1978 and September 1981, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net loss of 45,600 employees employed in manufacturing industries in the county of Merseyside and of 19,900 in the local authority district of Liverpool. The September 1984 census estimates for counties and smaller areas are not yet available. Between censuses, employment statistics are based on small-scale sample inquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than the standard economic regions.

Mr. Dormand asked the Paymaster General what was the percentage of people unemployed in the northern region at May 1979 and the latest available date, respectively.

Mr. Trippier: On 11 December 1986, seasonally adjusted unemployment in the northern region represented 15·9 per cent. of the working population. The corresponding figure for May 1979 was 6·9 per cent.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about unemployment figures for the north-west.

Mr. Trippier: On 11 December 1986, the number of unemployed claimants in the north-west region was 436,784.

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General if he will state the number of those people registered as unemployed in the constituency of Basildon in January 1983, January 1984, January 1985, January 1986 and January 1987.

Mr. Trippier: Following is the available information. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the parliamentary constituency of Basildon in January of each year since 1984. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. The January 1987 unemployment figures will be available on 12 February.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| January 1984 | 6,834 |
| January 1985 | 7,273 |
| January 1986 | 6,793 |

Mr. Holt asked the Paymaster General what are the unemployment figures, broken down by male, female and under 25, 25-50 years of age, and over 50 years of age, for each of the past four years in the parliamentary division of Langbaurgh.

Mr. Trippier: The following information is in the Library. The table gives the number of unemployed male and female claimants in the age groups requested for October of each year since 1983 in the Langbaurgh parliamentary constituency. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what were the unemployment totals for each parliamentary constituency on (a) 10 May 1979 and (b) 9 June 1983; and how many unemployed claimants aged (i) under 18 years and (ii) 18 to 25 years there were in each constituency at the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Following is the available information, which is also available from the Library. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the word-based system and are available only from June 1983. The tables show the number of unemployed claimants in each parliamentary constituency in Great Britain on 9 June 1983, and the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 18 years and aged 18 to 24 years in each constituency at 9 October 1986.

Community Programme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General what were the numbers of entrants to the community programme in the 12 months to October 1986 and December 1986.

Mr. Trippier: In the 12 months to 31 October 1986 there were 301,791 entrants to the community programme, and 307,405 in the 12 months to 12 December 1986.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

City Investment Centres

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much time elapsed between the putting in of an inspector and the closure of the share shops of City Investment Centres; and if he will give reasons for the delay.

Mr. Howard: An officer was authorised on 28 July 1986, under the provisions of section 447 of the Companies Act 1985, to examine the books and records of City Investment Centres Limited.

On 7 November 1986 a petition for the compulsory winding-up of the company was presented under the provisions of section 440 of the Act and on the same day the Official Receiver was appointed provisional liquidator.

This action was taken as soon as sufficient information was available to support such a serious step. The winding-up order was made on 16 December 1986. There was no delay.

Community Trade Mark Office

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the Community trade mark office committee set up to aid the United Kingdom's bid for the proposed Community trade mark office.

Mr. Pattie: The Community trade mark office committee has done much to support the Government's bid and has made representations explaining the advantages both to the United Kingdom and to the proposed Community trade mark system of locating the office in London. It has indicated that the particular site proposed by the Government, at St. Katharine-by-the-Tower, is very suitable. I am pleased that my hon. Friend, in his capacity as chairman of the Community trade mark office committee, has agreed to serve on an action group which I have recently set up to further the United Kingdom bid.

Guinness plc

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his Department's inquiries into the affairs of Guinness Holdings.

Mr. Howard: The inspectors are getting on with their investigation of the affairs and membership of Guinness plc as quickly as possible. It would not be in the public interest to give details of their inquiries.

Patent Office

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish the management report on the future of the Patent Office recently produced by a firm of management consultants.

Mr. Pattie: No, the report from PE Consulting Services will not be published. It was commissioned by the Patent Office for internal management purposes to assist in the preparation of plans for hiving-off the office from my Department.

Non-ferrous Metal

Sir Philip Holland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the adoption by the Council of the European Communities of export arrangements for non-ferous metal waste and scrap.

Mr. Pattie: As requested by the House of Commons Select Committee on European Legislation, I wish to explain the agreement by the Government to the adoption of a Council regulation on export arrangements for certain types of non-ferrous metal waste and scrap before it was possible for the Select Committee to scrutinise it.

The regulation provides for the continuation in 1987 of Community controls under which the export of aluminium and lead waste and scrap to third countries is subject to the issue of surveillance licences, and quota restrictions 11-12 per cent. higher than in 1986 are maintained on exports of copper waste and scrap and copper ash and residues to third countries.

In order that the controls which were in force during 1986 governing the export of non-ferrous waste and scrap to non-EC countries and to Spain could be continued into 1987, it was necessary to reach agreement on the proposed regulation by 31 December 1986. The Council meeting on 22 December was the last in 1986. Had agreement not been reached, difficulties would have been experienced by United Kingdom industry. I regret that normal parliamentary procedures were not followed on this occasion but in the circumstances I hope that the House will understand why it was felt best in the overall United Kingdom interest to act in this way.

Lloyd's

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what reason he has not published the report of his inspectors' inquiry into the affair involving Ian Posgate, Lloyd's and Alexander Howden; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: The hon. Member refers to a substantial interim report by inspectors appointed under section 165(1)(b) of the Companies Act 1948 (now section 432(2) of the Companies Act 1985) to investigate and report on the affairs of Alexander Howden Group plc. The report cannot be published at this stage while police inquiries continue as its publication could impede the institution of criminal proceedings.

Recycled Paper

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what use his Department makes of British made recycled paper for letterhead stationery and notepads.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: None of the letterhead stationery or notepads used in my Department is made entirely of recycled material. The papers currently used offer better value for money, and a substantial proportion can contain recycled fibre if the supplying mills wish to use it. I chaired a conference on 22 January which explored the scope for extending the production, supply and use of United Kingdom printing and writing papers containing recycled fibre. One of the results of this conference was an agreement to examine the use of writing paper with a recycled content by public sector bodies. My Department will be part of this exercise, which will examine whether an increase in the use of such paper can be justified on economic grounds.

Aircraft (Retrofitting)

Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received regading the contract for the retrofitting in the United States of America of British Aerospace aircraft belonging to British airlines; what estimate he has made of the employment effects of this contract on British engineering industries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the contract for the retrofitting of British aircraft in the United States of America with Rolls-Royce Tay engines; and if Rolls-Royce has given any financial guarantees in connection with this contract.

Mr. Pattie [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: My Department has received a number of representations from Executive Jet Sales Limited of Newport Pagnell. A decision to re-engine BAe 1-11 aircraft with Rolls-Royce Tay engines is a commercial matter for British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce. It would be for the companies to take account of all the commercial implications, including effects on employment, as appropriate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent meetings he has had with representatives from the Council of Europe and the European Economic Commission to discuss the potential for closer co-operation on anti-drug work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: On 20-21 January I chaired a meeting of Ministers of the Council of Europe co-operation group to combat drug abuse and illicit trafficking in drugs (the Pompidou group). The Commission of the European Communities was represented at the meeting by a vice-president. Against a background in which drug misuse continues to present the countries of western Europe with a major social problem, we all recognised the need for close co-operation not only amongst members of the Pompidou group but also between the group and other international organisations which are active in this field. We agreed upon a new plan of action to be pursued by the group covering:

(i) Practical measures for effective implementation of legislation to confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking;
(ii) Mechanisms to improve co-ordination of controls in major ports and of maritime surveillance;
(iii) Role of the media in shaping attitudes to drug misuse;
(iv) Role of primary health care personnel and short-term crisis intervention in responding to the needs of drug misusers;
(v) Problems related to the operating and funding of treatment facilities;
(vi) Encouragement of co-operation and action by municipalities and local action groups;
(vii) Misuse of medically prescribed psychotropic drugs;
(viii) Review of drugs legislation in member states in order to compare solutions adopted to deal with similar problems;
(x) Detection and prevention of drug dependence in the armed forces;

Copies of a declaration agreed by Ministers in the course of the meeting have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Soviet Union (Students)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many students from (a) Kiev and (b) the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are studying in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Information held on the immigration and nationality department computer indicates that there are about 150 citizens of the USSR studying in the United Kingdom. The computer records do not include their place of residence in the USSR.

Prisons (Strip Searches)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (i) how many category A women prisoners there are in Her Majesty's prison Durham and (ii) how many strip searches have been made on category A prisoners in Her Majesty's prison Durham in the last six months of 1986 as an absolute figure and on a monthly basis, indicating (a) strip searches before and after consultation with legal advisers, (b) after visits and (c) after cell change, wing search and cell search.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present four women prisoners in Durham prison who are, or who are provisionally, in category A. During the last six months of 1986, the followimg numbers of strip searches of women prisoners who are, or who are provisionally, in category A were carried out in Durham prison.

Ticket Touts

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the nuisance caused by the operations of theatre ticket touts in London selling tickets outside theatres; what evidence he has as to the extent to which these touts are organised; what evidence he has as to whether theatres and ticket agencies are involved; if he will consider an investigation into these activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The resale of tickets is not a criminal offence and, therefore, not a matter for the police. The police deal with any criminal matters which may arise, such as obstruction of the highway.

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to control the activities of ticket touts.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to introduce legislation directed specifically at ticket touts. Their activities may, however, be subject in particular cases to provisions of the general criminal law (for example, on obstruction of the highway).

News International Works

Mr. Peter Shore asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police into whether TNT lorries leaving the News International printing works at Wapping are allowed not to observe speed limits in built-up areas; and whether they are allowed to disregard other features of the highway code, including the regulation by traffic lights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner informs me that all vehicles leaving the News International plant are required to observe road traffic regulations.

Toxteth Riots

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many claims for compensation following the Toxteth riots in 1981 are outstanding with the residuary body at the latest date;

(2) if he will make a statement on the claim for compensation by Mr. C. H. Woo still outstanding since the Toxteth riots in 1981.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Responsibility for receiving and considering claims under the Riot (Damages) Act 1986 rests with the local compensation authority, which for the Merseyside area is the Merseyside police authority. The Home Office is not involved and no central record of claims is kept.

Computer Network (Data Transfers)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department(1) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to the Department of Health and Social Security; what is the anticipated number of such transfers; and for what purpose those tranfers will take place;

(2) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to the Inland Revenue; what is the anticipated number of such transfers; and for what purpose those transfers will take place;

(3) in relation to the planned computer network proposed by Electronic Data Systems, what kind of data he proposes to obtain from or transfer to the Customs and Excise; what is the anticipated number of such transfers; and for what purpose those transfers will take place.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987 at col. 666]: I regret that my earlier answer was incomplete. The full answer is as follows.

A Government data network is being considered as a means of minimising the data communications, development and running costs of Government Departments (initially up to four). Electronic Data Systems is one of several companies which responded to a request for information issued by the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. No proposals have yet been received, and a consortium which includes Electronic Data Systems is only one of a number of consortia invited to submit proposals. There are at present no plans to use such a network, if it were established, for exchange of information between the Home Office and either the Inland Revenue or the Department of Health and Social Security. There are no plans for exchange of information between the Home Office and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, other than the properly authorised transfer of data via existing networks which provide an inquiry-only service on the vehicle keepers index held on the police national computer unit. A formal decision has yet to be made as to whether the PNCU network would be transferred to the Government data network, if it were established.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Electricity Board

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to privatise the Northern Ireland Electricity Board.

Mr. Viggers: I have no plans to privatise Northern Ireland electricity.

EC Vocational Training Regulations

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has regarding the legality within the European Economic Community of the vocational training regulations pertaining to general practice in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The Medical Practitioners (Vocational Training) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1979 as amended do not contravene European Community law.

ENVIRONMENT

Isle of Dogs Enterprise Zone

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether the London Docklands Development Corporation will be required to sell land to the Canary Wharf Consortium at the open market value for office land in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the district valuer will set a price for the sale of land sold by the London Docklands Development Corporation to the Canary Wharf Consortium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. But when the London Docklands Development Corporation sells land it is required to obtain a certificate from an independent valuer that the land price is not below current market value and, if that is unobtainable, it needs specific consent from my Department to the disposal of its land at a lower price. That valuation may be given by the district valuer. For Canary Wharf, however, it is our intention to obtain an independent, professional view that the terms of the agreement overall, and not simply the land price, are satisfactory.

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the average price per acre of land for offices in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone;

(2) what information he has as to the average price per acre of land zoned for housing on the Isle of Dogs.

Mr. John Patten: Individual prices vary widely for a number of reasons. But the price of land for both residential and office use appears to be about £1·5 million per acre.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs there were in docklands in the London borough of Newham at the inception of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and how many there are now.

Mr. John Patten: The 1981 census of employment revealed that there were 12,400 jobs in the docklands area of the London borough of Newham. The LDDC's latest survey shows that in February 1985 the number of jobs in the same area was 9,746. Of these, 3,200 have been created since 1981.

Housing (Basildon)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many housing units the Basildon Development Corporation and New Town Commission have built since the town's inception and in each of the last five years;

(2) how many shared ownership housing units the Basildon Development Corporation and New Town Commission have built since the town's inception and in each of the last five years;

(3) how many houses the Basildon Development Corporation and New Town Commission have built since the town's inception; how many of those have been to purchase; and how many to rent.

Mr. John Patten: Since designation of Basildon new town in 1949, and in each of the last five years, Basildon Development Corporation and the Commission for the New Towns have built the following housing units at Basildon:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Total since 1949 | 24,553 |
| 1982-83 | 144 |
| 1983-84 | 58 |
| 1984-85 | 37 |
| 1985-86 | Nil |
| 1986-87 | Nil |

(b) Housing for shared ownership

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Total since 1949 | 1,045 |
| 1982-83 | 237 |
| 1983-84 | 274 |
| 1984-85 | 153 |
| 1985-86 | 236 |
| 1986-87 | 64 |

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Total since 1949 | 4,564 |
| 1982-83 | 467 |
| 1983-84 | 352 |
| 1984-85 | 167 |
| 1985-86 | 248 |
| 1986-87 | 251 |

Notes:

1. Of the 24,553 dwellings built initially for rent, 10,085 have so far been sold to tenants.
2. The 1,045 shared ownership dwellings and the great majority of the 4,564 dwellings for purchase have been built by private developers in partnership with the new town corporation.
3. 1986-87 figures are taken to 31 December 1986.

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many sheltered housing units the Basildon Development Corporation and New Town Commission have built since the town's inception and in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: The total number of sheltered housing units built by Basildon Development Corporation and the Commission for the New Towns in Basildon is 748. In each of the last five years, the figures are:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 82 |
| 1983-84 | 27 |
| 1984-85 | 65 |
| 1985-86 | 71 |
| 1986-87 | 30 |

Notes:

1. The figures include sheltered dwellings built for sale by private developers in partnership with the new town corporation.
2. The 1986-87 figures are taken to 31 December 1986.

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give central Government expenditure on housing per head of population in England, for each year since 1979-80.

Mr. John Patten: The figures are as follows, for public sector gross capital expenditure on housing per head of adult population:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 91 |
| 1980-81 | 84 |
| 1981-82 | 73 |
| 1982-83 | 94 |
| 1983-84 | 113 |
| 1984-85 | 111 |
| 1985-86 | 96 |

Dacorum Borough Council

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all sites registered by Dacorum borough council under part X of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

Mr. John Patten: The land register contains no sites owned by Dacorum borough council. There are 15 registered sites within the district owned by other bodies. These are as follows.

| Site Number | Area (Acres) | Location |
|---|---|---|
| | | British Railways Board |
| BR1 | 1·434 | Berkhamsted: Land adjacent to Station Car Park |
| BR3 | 5·0 | Part of Hemel Hempstead to Harpenden closed branch line |
| | | Hertfordshire County Council |

| CC2 | 7·0 | Land at Caddington Hall, Markyate |
| CC3 | 0·676 | Land to the rear of Nos. 8-10 Manor Street, Berkhampsted |
| | | Eastern Electricity |
| EE1 | 1·39 | Flaunden Lane, Bovingdon |
| EE2 | 7·07 | Highwood Hall, Bunkers Lane, Apsley, Hemel Hempstead |
| | | Commission for the new towns |
| NT2 | 72·4 | Bryant and May Lane, Three Cherry Trees Lane |
| NT3 | 1·05 | Redbourn Road, Hemelite 'A', Hemel Hempstead |
| NT7 | 21·25 | Gadebridge Lane |
| NT8 | 3·13 | Baconsthorpe |
| NT9 | 22·0 | Paradise/St. Albans Road |
| NT12 | 2·6 | Breakspear Way |
| NT14 | 1·63 | East of Maxted Close |
| NT15 | 10·0 | Boundary Way |

Local Government Expenditure

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount expended by each metropolitan district council per head of population living within their boundaries for each of the last six years for which figures are available.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows.

In 1986-87, net current expenditure per head increased because of additional responsibilities taken over by metropolitan districts following the abolition of the metropolitan county councils.

Net current expenditure per head—Metropolitan Districts

Note: Net current expenditure is defined broadly as rate fund spending on services (i.e. excluding debt charges and other non-current items), net of income (such as sales, fees and charges, non-relevant specific grant), but gross of rate income, rate support grant etc.

Housing Corporation (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the projects which are funded by the Housing Corporation in Liverpool at the latest date.

Mr. John Patten: The question of allocations to housing associations within the gross provision by the Secretary of State for the Environment to the Housing Corporation for its approved development programme is a matter for the Housing Corporation.

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total funding by the Housing Corporation for projects in Liverpool in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The question of allocations to particular areas within the gross provision by the Secretary of State for the Environment to the Housing Corporation for its approved development programme is a matter for the Housing Corporation.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the working of the residuary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Yes. The seven residuary bodies are making satisfactory progress towards their own wind-up for which the legislation sets a period of five years from 1 April 1986. In practice, I expect that some of the bodies will have completed their task of disposing of or transferring their inherited functions, property, rights and liabilities well before the end of the period. I have regular meetings with the chairmen of the residuary bodies, the most recent of which took place yesterday.

Climatic Variability

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to implement the recommendations relating to his responsibilities in the report "Social and Economic Responses to Climatic Variability in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Tracey: I will answer this question shortly.

Council House Sales

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each London borough for the years 1980 to 1986 the numbers of tenants who have initiated purchase of their council house, and the numbers who have completed; and if he will break these figures down to show purchases of flats and houses.

Mr. Tracey: I will answer this question shortly.

Water Services

Sir Michael Shaw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any further response from the Yorkshire water authority following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the water services it provides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The report has been given further consideration by the authority and I am placing a copy of its second response in the Library of the House. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report had commented on the substantial improvement in the efficiency of the authority in recent years, and Yorkshire Water's initial response in 1985 showed, that the authority was already taking effective action on the five matters to which the report recommended that priority be given.

In the second response, Yorkshire Water reports the action taken on over 50 proposals. It has made significant progress in implementing all the priority recommendations. In particular, I am pleased to report that the authority has embarked on a programme of locational surveys of all sewers and is implementing the recommendations of its working group on water mains. Performance measures have been identified in physical output, manpower, and financial terms, and a data base of unit costs for most services has been established. Yorkshire Water has also fixed levels for investment based on targets for improvement in levels of service, and assesses individual investment projects on the basis of the ratio between customer benefits and cost. Resources were allocated within the region with reference to these processes for the first time in 1985.

The MMC report pointed the way to greater efficiency and effectiveness in the authority's performance. Marked improvements have been made and I congratulate the management and staff, as well as the chairman, Mr. Gordon Jones, on the positive way in which Yorkshire Water has responded to the report.

I will be drawing Yorkshire Water's second progress report to the attention of the other water authorities, and inviting them to consider which of the lessons learnt here could be applied in their region.

Water Legislation

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham), Official Report, 18 December 1986, columns 685-6, if he will list the names of individuals and companies which received fees in 1985-86 and 1986-87; what fees each received; and, in each case, what services were provided.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, Friday 23 January 1987]: I have nothing to add to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 18 December 1986.

Dr. John Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply of 18 December, column 685 about expenditure incurred in preparation for water legislation, he will provide a detailed analysis of the expenditure on fees incurred in 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 18 December 1986 at column 685-86.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Property Services Agency management provided its cost appraisal in respect of the reorganisation of the York area office; what conclusions he has reached on it; to whom copies have been made available; and if a copy will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: I am considering various options for the reorganisation of PSA and I hope to announce a decision soon. A summary of the management benefits to the agency as a whole and the costs and savings of one particular option were sent to the national trade unions concerned on 31 October. When I announce my decision I shall let the hon. Member have the overall cost appraisal relating to the option chosen.

Departmental Staff

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state how many lawyers were employed in his Department on 1 April and 1 October in 1984, 1985 and 1986 and if he will give the establishment figures for the same dates; and if he will state how many different individuals have occupied these posts, giving the average length of employment, in the period 1 April 1984 to 1 October 1986.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: The number of lawyers employed in the Department for the period 1 April 1984 to 1 October 1986, compared with the complemented posts for the period are:

| | Staff in post | Complement |
|---|---|---|
| 1 April 1984 | 37½ | 41 |
| 1 April 1985 | 35½ | 41 |
| 1 April 1986 | 37½ | 38 |
| 1 October 1986 | 38½ | 40½ |

(October figures are not available for 1984 and 1985 but should not be significantly different).

The average length of service of lawyers who were employed in this Department during the period 1 April 1984 to 1 October 1986 is 12 years.

The turnover of legal staff during the period resulted in 47 individuals occupying posts in the Department's legal directorate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Namibia

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reasons Her Majesty's Government opposed the extension of the EEC sanctions package to Namibia.

Mr. Eggar: We joined other European partners in excluding Namibia from the measures taken against South Africa because we do not believe that to apply such measures to Namibia would advance the common objective of Namibian independence.

Miss Elena Gurevich

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report as much information as is in his possession about Miss Elena Gurevich of Moscow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Elena Gurevich was born in 1964. Her family first applied to emigrate to Israel in 1974. Their application was refused on the grounds that her mother had had access to classified information. The same grounds have been cited for refusal of all subsequent visa applications. We deplore the refusal of the Soviet authorities to grant Elena Gurevich and her family a visa and we shall continue to press them to allow their citizens the basic human right to emigrate.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish up-to-date figures giving the number of vehicles with diplomatic registration and the number of alleged motoring offences committed by drivers of these vehicles, for each diplomatic mission.

Mr. Eggar: There are at present 3,970 cars with diplomatic registration. There were 77 offences in 1986. This represents a considerable reduction from earlier years.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 22 January, he will now take steps to amend the London diplomatic list to include the full name and address of all spouses, children under 18 and those other relations covered by the Vienna convention of all diplomats registered and based in London.

Mr. Eggar: The London diplomatic list has existed in its present form for many years. It fulfils very well the function of providing basic information about senior officers of diplomatic missions in London.

ENERGY

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will include in his consultations on the studies of the proposed Severn barrage all major contractors involved in the construction of (a) the Thames barrage, (b) the Avon bridge, (c) the Severn bridge and (d) the Humber bridge.

Mr. David Hunt: Consultation with all relevant bodies will take place within the programme of studies on tidal power announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy in July last year.

Sellafield

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Windscale involving the radioactive contamination of a worker on 15 December 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(2) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Windscale involving the radioactive contamination of two process workers and a fitter towards the end of December 1980 and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries;

(3) if he will now make available for independent assessment all the details of the incident at Windscale involving possible radioactive contamination of a maintenance worker on 26 March 1981; and all the documents relating to subsequent inquiries.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the answer already given to him on 8 December 1986 at columns 5 to 6 of the Official Report.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will report on progress made on plans for combined heat and power schemes as an economic use of energy; what information he has about the operation so far of the lead city scheme; and whether any such schemes have been discontinued or are proposed to be discontinued.

Mr. David Hunt: The three cities selected for grant assistance under the lead city scheme have made considerable progress in their feasibility studies on CHP/DH. The Belfast and Edinburgh consortia are due to complete their studies this spring. The Government have now received the report from the Leicester consortium who are considering how best to take their project forward. There are no plans to discontinue any of the schemes in these lead cities.

British Gas

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether members of British forces posted overseas were able to apply for shares in British Gas on exactly the same terms as United Kingdom residents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Members of British forces posted overseas (excluding those resident in the United States or Canada) were able to apply for shares in British Gas under the same terms and conditions as anybody else.

However, for overseas legal as well as practical reasons, the British Gas share information office was not able to send prospectuses abroad.

Those overseas who contacted the share information officer were, therefore, advised to arrange for a stockbroker, solicitor or bank in this country to make the application on their behalf.

SCOTLAND

Dundee

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies and firms which have closed down in Dundee since 1979.

Mr. Lang: No; comprehensive information is not available, and details of individual companies cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many instances since 1979 the Manpower Services Commission was notified of redundancies in Dundee; and how many jobs were involved.

Mr. Lang: There are no comprehensive statistics on redundancies. The following information relates to the number of redundancies, affecting 10 or more workers, notified to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in the Dundee travel-to-work area during the period January 1980 to December 1986. The number of reports received was 306, confirming 16,712 redundancies.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the number of people unemployed in Dundee as per standard industrial classification order when such figures were last available.

Mr. Lang: Information for May 1982 is given in the table below. It cannot be provided for any later date because the industrial analysis on which it is based was then discontinued.

| Industry in which previously employed (1968 Standard Industrial Classification) | Number |
|---|---|
| 1. Agriculture, forestry, fishing | 204 |
| 2. Mining and quarrying | 88 |
| 3. Food, drink and tobacco | 571 |
| 4. Coal and petroleum products | 10 |
| 5. Chemicals and allied industries | 34 |
| 6. Metal manufacture | 125 |
| 7. Mechanical engineering | 149 |
| 8. Instrument engineering | 608 |
| 9. Electrical engineering | 270 |
| 10. Shipbuilding and marine engineering | 349 |
| 11. Vehicles | 28 |
| 12. Metal goods not elsewhere specified | 92 |
| 13. Textiles | 1,619 |
| 14. Leather, leather goods and fur | 5 |
| 15. Clothing and footwear | 125 |
| 16. Bricks, pottery, glass, cement | 25 |
| 17. Timber, furniture etc. | 137 |
| 18. Paper, printing and publishing | 214 |
| 19. Other manufacturing | 122 |
| 20. Construction | 1,531 |
| 21. Gas, electricity and water | 55 |
| 22. Transport and communications | 516 |
| 23. Distributive trade | 1,525 |
| 24. Insurance, banking, etc. | 175 |
| 25. Professional and scientific services | 723 |
| 26. Miscellaneous services | 1,528 |
| 27. Public administration and defence | 826 |
| — None or not classified by industry | 3,417 |

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the number of people unemployed in Dundee by age group; and what were the corresponding figures in 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of unemployed claimants by age group in the city of Dundee district on 14 July 1983 and on 9 October 1986 (the earliest and most recent dates for which such information can be provided) was as shown in the table below. As a result of the change in the timing of the count in March 1986, these figures cannot be directly compared.

City of Dundee district

| Age group | July 1983 | October 1986 |
|---|---|---|
| Under 17 | 315 | 330 |
| 17 | 711 | 604 |
| 18 | 930 | 682 |
| 19 | 805 | 759 |
| 20 to 24 | 3,365 | 3,365 |
| 25 to 29 | 2,090 | 2,256 |
| 30 to 34 | 1,512 | 1,502 |
| 35 to 39 | 1,219 | 1,295 |
| 40 to 44 | 973 | 993 |
| 45 to 49 | 1,019 | 916 |
| 50 to 54 | 1,102 | 1,054 |
| 55 to 59 | 1,209 | 1,166 |
| 60 and over | 384 | 207 |
| TOTAL ALL AGES | 15,634 | 15,129 |

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people in Dundee have currently been unemployed for one year or more; and what was the corresponding figure in 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of claimants who had been unemployed for one year or more in the city of Dundee district on 14 July 1983 and on 9 October 1986 (the earliest and most recent dates for which such information can be provided) was 5,797 and 6,686 respectively. As a result of the change in the timing of the count in March 1986, these figures cannot be directly compared.

This information is available in the Library.

Regional and Islands Council Elections

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of those who were eligible to vote at the regional and islands council elections in 1986 were (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) spouses of domestic ratepayers and (c) people who receive any statutory relief from domestic rates.

Mr. Ancram: It is estimated that, of the 4 million people eligible to vote in the 1986 regional and islands council elections, 49 per cent. were domestic ratepayers and 30 per cent. were spouses of domestic ratepayers. All domestic ratepayers qualify under statute for domestic rate relief. It is estimated that some 42 per cent. of them (20 per cent. of electors) currently also qualify on income grounds for full or partial rate rebates under social security and housing benefit legislation. A relatively small number of domestic ratepayers also enjoy reduced rates under arrangements outside the housing benefit scheme, probably several thousand under the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 and 130,000 under the Rating (Revaluation Rebates) (Scotland) Act 1985, but information is not available about the numbers of those entitled to more than one kind of relief or rebate.

GEAR Project

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many jobs have been lost in the GEAR area of Glasgow since the GEAR project was set up; and if he will break down these figures according to industry classification.

National Curriculum

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any intention to introduce a national curriculum for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The curriculum in Scotland has for many years been based on a national consensus of views articulated through the consultative committee on the curriculum, the Secretary of State's principal advisory body in these matters, and reflected in the requirements of the Scottish Examination Board. The Secretary of State will continue to ensure that advice is available to Scottish schools which will secure the provision of a coherent and consistent curriculum.

Government Aid to Businesses

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now make it his policy to answer questions about how much Government financial aid has been given to specific companies in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lang: A wide variety of aids are provided to companies by the Government and their agencies. It would not be practicable to publish information about Government financial aid to specific companies because of the confidentiality surrounding certain awards and the costs which would be incurred in bringing together the necessary information. Details of regional development grant payments and of regional selective assistance offers, above certain limits in both cases, are regularly published in British Business.

Tayside Health Board

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now increase the annual budget of Tayside health board to ensure that there is a 1·5 per cent. annual increase to take account of demographic changes in populatiin and advances in medical technology.

Mr. John MacKay: The SHARE formula ensures that Tayside health board receives a fair proportion of the additional resources made available to the National Health Service in Scotland to take account of demographic change and technological advance. In addition the Government are encouraging the board to initiate projects to improve efficiency and thereby release additional funds for patient care.

WALES

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing how much has been granted in (a) Gwynedd and (b) Wales for local authorities capital expenditure on housing, education, personal social services, roads and transport and urban programme in 1985-86 and 1986-87; and what are the comparable budgeted figures for each category for 1987-88.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Capital allocations for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 and initial capital allocations for 1987-88 for the Gwynedd area and the whole of Wales are as follows:

| | Gwynedd area[1] | | | All Wales | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Category | 1985-86 | 1986-87 | 1987-88[3] (Initial) | 1985-86 | 1986-87 | 1987-88[3] (Initial) |
| Urban Programme[2] | 693 | 1,007 | — | 20,050 | 20,743 | — |
| Over £5 million road schemes | 6,951 | 875 | 770 | 53,021 | 39,492 | 43,101 |
| All other services (including PRNI/SP)[4] | 7,539 | 11,182 | 13,341 | 70,432 | 108,729 | 144,711 |

[2] Allocations for 1987-88 have not yet been issued.

[4] Specific capital allocations for welsh local authorities are only made for housing, urban programme, road schemes costing over £5 million, projects of regional or national importance and special projects (PRNI/SP). A general capital allocation is made for all other services. It is based on a formula and allocations for particular services are not separately identifiable.

Housing Investment

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether, at current levels of expenditure, he estimates that there will be an underspend on housing investment by Welsh local authorities in 1986-87.

Mr. Mark Robinson: On the basis of figures currently available an underspend is not expected.

Tourism

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed in the tourist industry in Wales between 1970 and 1975 and 1975 and 1980, and the last available figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is not available in the form requested. Tourism is not an industry in the conventional, statistical sense of a group of businesses with a distinctive output of goods and/or services. A Wales Tourist Board study published in September 1977, however, concluded that about 83,000 were employed in the industry directly or indirectly. The board estimates that the numbers employed have grown since then to at least 90,000.

Housing (Repair Grants)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the grant available for house repairs in (a) Wales, (b) South Wales and (c) Cardiff between 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The level of grant available for the repair of dwellings is the same throughout Wales. Repair grants were introduced in 1974 at a rate of £800 per dwelling. That level increased to £1,500 in 1977, to £2,000 and subsequently £4,000 in 1980 and to its present level of £4,800 in 1983.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the pupil ratio at schools in Wales between 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980, and 1980 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The pupil-teacher ratio within maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools is given in the following table:

| At January each year | Pupil teacher ratio within schools |
|---|---|
| 1970 | 22·0 |
| 1975 | 20·2 |
| 1980 | 19·1 |
| 1985 | 18·8 |

Financial Assistance

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for each year, the audited Government financial assistance that has been given to (a) the Welsh Development Agency, (b) Mid Wales Development and (c) the Wales Tourist Board in each year since 1979.

Mr. Edwards: The information is contained in the annual reports for 1979-80 to 1985-86 of each of the bodies, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Venture Capital (WDA)

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many proposals for venture capital were received by the Cardiff consortium section of the Welsh Development Agency in 1986; and how many proposals were approved in that period.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Welsh Development Agency is not responsible for the operation of the Cardiff consortium. I suggest that the hon. Gentleman contacts the consortium directly at its offices in Cardiff.

Elderly People

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many and what proportion of people of pensionable age in each district authority area in Wales live alone.

Persons of pensionable age[1]

|---|---|---|

[1] Retirement age is defined as aged 65 and over for males and aged 60 and over for females.

[2] Excludes absent households.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people there are of retirement age in each district authority area of Wales; and how many and what proportion of these are (a) married, (b) single men and (c) single women.

Usually resident population of retirement age[1]

[1] Retirement age is defined as aged 65 and over for males and aged 60 and over for females.

[2] Does not include persons who are either widowed or divorced.

Eye Patients

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the National Health Service hospitals in Wales which dispense spectacles to hospital eye patients on site.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The following NHS hospitals in Wales dispensed spectacles on site in 1985, the latest year for which statistics are available:

St. David's, Carmarthen
Glanrhyd
Hensol
Parc
Brecon War Memorial
Llandrindod Wells
Adelina Patti
South Pembrokeshire

Derelict Land Reclamation

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total spending on derelict land reclamation in Wales in each year since 1979; what are the estimates for 1987-88 and 1988-89; what was the total funding for derelict land reclamation and environmental improvements by the Welsh Development Agency in each year since 1979; and what are the estimates for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Land Reclamation and Environmental Improvement

£ million

| | Budget allocation | Outturn |
|---|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 7·4 | 7·7 |
| 1980-81 | 7·9 | 9·3 |
| 1981-82 | 9·6 | 11·1 |
| 1982-83 | 10·9 | 10·3 |
| 1983-84 | 13·6 | 12·0 |
| 1984-85 | 7·3 | 9·3 |
| 1985-86 | 9·5 | 10·9 |
| 1986-87 | 12·7 | [1]12·7 |

As I announced in the House on 8 December, the agency's land reclamation and environmental improvement budget for each of the next three financial years will be about £4 million, or 30 per cent. higher than the initial budget allocation for 1986-87.

NHS Staff

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the average gross weekly earnings of (a) secretarial and (b) clerical staff in the National Health Service in Wales; and how this compares with the average gross weekly earnings of secretarial and clerical staff in general;

(2) how many (a) secretarial staff and (b) clerical workers in the National Health Service in Wales have gross weekly earnings of (i) £120 or more, (ii) between £100 and £120, (iii) between £80 and £100 and (iv) less than £80; and what proportion of the total each category (i) to (iv) represents.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of (a) secretarial staff and (b) clerical workers in the National Health Service in Wales are women.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At the end of September 1986, almost 100 per cent. of secretarial staff and almost 91 per cent. of clerical workers[1] employed in the National Health Service were women.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will set up a review into the conditions of work and pay of secretarial staff and clerical workers in the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Pay and conditions of service for this group of staff are negotiated within the Administrative and Clerical Whitley Council, which is currently conducting a grading structure review.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied that present levels of salaries of secretarial staff and clerical workers in the National Health Service in Wales are sufficient to attract adequately qualified applicants for vacant posts.

Mr. Mark Robinson: I have been given no indication that the salary levels negotiated within the Whitley Council are failing to attract suitably qualified secretarial and clerical staff into the NHS in Wales.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many secretarial and clerical staff are employed by the National Health Service in Wales; and what proportion they represent of the total National Health Service work force in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At the end of September 1986, the National Health Service in Wales employed 4,984 persons on secretarial[1] and clerical grades, representing 7·5 per cent. of all persons employed. These employees account for 4,238 whole-time equivalent posts, representing 7·7 per cent. of all such posts.

Government Expenditure Plans

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will break down the figures in table 3.17 of the Government's expenditure plans for 1987-88 to 1989-90, Cmnd. 56-II, on the same basis as tables 3.4, 3.5, 3.6, 3.7, 3.8, 3.9, 3.10, 3.11, 3.12, 3.13 and 3.14 of the same publication.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: There are no Welsh equivalents to Tables 3.6 and 3.11. For the rest, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave on 22 January at columns 686-96 to my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Best).

Local Authority Rents

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the average rent increases made by each Welsh housing authority in the current financial year.

Average level of rent increases per dwelling 1986-87

Retirement

Q99. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister what she is doing to put into effect the Government's concept of a decade of retirement for British citizens between the age of 60 and 70 years.

The Prime Minister: Work is under way to re-examine the assumptions about retirement patterns and labour market behaviour which underpin any estimates of the overall cost of changes in pension age. Since cost is the main obstacle to introducing a flexible pension scheme on the lines suggested in the Green Paper on social security in June 1985, and since cost estimates are highly sensitive to changes in these basic assumptions, this work is a necessary foundation to further consideration of this issue.

Port Glasgow

Q136. Dr. Godman asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Port Glasgow in the near future.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 January.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 January.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 January.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 27 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will list the current contracts between Government Departments and Electronic Data Systems; and if she is satisfied with co-ordination between the Home Office, the Ministry of Defence, and the Department of Health and Social Security on this work.

The Prime Minister: The Government do not hold centrally information on all information technology contracts between Government Departments and suppliers of goods and services.

In those cases where the Central Computer and Telecommunications Agency acts as agent for Departments, central records are held. There are no current contracts between CCTA and Electronic Data Systems.

There is no need for co-ordination except where a contract involves more than one Department.

DEFENCE

Fylingdales

11. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the progress of the modernisation programme at Fylingdales.

Mr. Freeman: The modernisation programme is still at the planning stage. As I told the hon. Member for Ryedale (Mrs. Shields) on 4 November 1986, a notice of proposed development has been submitted to the north Yorkshire moors national park committee and a memorandum of understanding concluded with the United States.

Army Regimental System

12. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to institute changes in the regimental system of the British Army.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Crown Proceedings Act 1947

14. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received concerning Her Majesty's Government's decision on section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947.

48. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations has he received regarding giving retrospection to the abolition of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act.

Mr. Freeman: Since my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced on 8 December 1986 Hansard, columns 86-87 that the Government had decided that section 10 should be repealed we have received four representations: one questioning whether repeal is necessary and three urging that it should be made retrospective.

NATO Defence Strategy

15. Mr. Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to propose changes in Northern Atlantic Treaty Organisation defence strategy with regard to conventional weapons.

Mr. Younger: No. NATO's strategy of flexible response and the role of conventional weapons within that strategy remains fully valid and the best basis for maintaining defence.

Nuclear Weapons Testing (Nevada)

16. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether British nuclear weapon testing in Nevada is planned to continue.

Mr. Younger: As long as a comprehensive test ban treaty fails to be negotiated, the United Kingdom will continue to conduct tests in order to maintain the effectiveness of its nuclear capabilities.

Royal Dockyards

18. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the allocation of contracts for the management of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My hon. Friend will be aware that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State intends to make a statement about the royal dockyards this afternoon and he will therefore understand if I refrain from answering his question.

Procurement

19. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the defence procurement budget was spent with British companies in 1985-86.

26. Mr. Andy Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of equipment and services purchased by his Department in 1985-86 from British companies.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1985-86, just over 90 per cent. of the MOD's gross equipment expenditure of some £8·5 billion was spent with British companies, or on collaborative projects from which United Kingdom industry benefitted as a participant.

43. Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures exist for appeals or for investigation of complaints about his Department's decisions on procurement and the protection of research and development products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is the Ministry's policy to treat all companies in a scrupulously fair and impartial manner. Any company which is unsuccessful in a competitive tendering may seek a de-briefing from the Ministry. More generally any company which considers it has a complaint about a procurement decision should first raise the matter with the staff responsible for the procurement. If that action does not resolve the complaint, it should be referred as appropriate to a more senior level.

The Ministry respects the ownership of intellectual property rights in its procurement. If use is made of a patented invention the patentee is notified as soon as practicable and terms are agreed for its use.

Harrier GR5

20. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will now specify the role of the Harrier GR5.

Mr. Stanley: The primary role of the Harrier GR5 will be to provide direct air support of NATO ground forces, but it could also be used in deeper interdiction sorties against a wide range of targets. We have no plans to give Harrier GR5 a nuclear strike role.

European Fighter Aircraft

21. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on the current progress on the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on 9 December 1986 at column 141.

36. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place in the last month with his European ministerial colleagues on the interim engine for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. A process of international competitive tender for the selection of the interim engine for the European fighter aircraft is in progress.

United States Secretary of State for Defence

22. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the United States Secretary of State for Defence; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Younger: The United States Defence Secretary and I last met together privately in London on 8 December 1986, following the NATO Defence Planning Committee meeting in Brussels, when a range of issues of mutual defence interest was discussed.

Forces (Costs)

23. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the cost of the British nuclear deterrent and the cost of conventional forces at current values.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As shown in table 2·5 of the statement on the Defence Estimates 1986, the cost of the strategic nuclear force is estimated to be £658 million for the current financial year. Broadly speaking, therefore, the balance of the defence budget is available for conventional forces.

Falkland Islands

24. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to visit the Falklands;

29. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his recent visit to the Falkland Islands.

44. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his visit to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the member for Chipping Barnet (Mr. Chapman) earlier today.

RAF Vehicle (Accident)

25. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to improve safety, following the accident involving the Royal Air Force convoy in Wiltshire on Saturday 10 January.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) earlier today.

Recruiting

27. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current position of recruiting for the armed forces; and in what particular categories recruiting is falling short of expectations.

Mr. Freeman: Recruitment to the services is generally satisfactory with 32,651 men and women joining the armed force in 1985-86. There are shortfalls in officer recruitment and certain other rank specialisation where there is traditionally fierce competition with the civil sector.

Nuclear Weapons (Transport)

28. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations he has received regarding the methods of transportation throughout the United Kingdom of nuclear warheads and nuclear missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: In 1986 and so far this year my Department has received about 60 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and directly from members of the public concerned with various aspects of this issue.

37. Mr. Loyden asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the practices and regulations governing the movement of any convoys in which nuclear weapons may be involved.

Mr. Stanley: It has been the practice of successive Governments, for security reasons, not to comment on the methods of transporting nuclear weapons. However, the arrangements for ensuring their safe transport remain constantly under review.

39. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in the light of the incident in Wiltshire on 10 January in which a military convoy crashed, Her Majesty's Government intend to review their procedures concerning the road transport of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) earlier today.

41. Mr. Nellist asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now make it his practice to give the numbers of nuclear weapon convoys which travel (a) by road, (b) by rail and (c) by other forms of transport.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Nuclear Defence Policy

30. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding the United Kingdom's nuclear defence policy.

45. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received regarding Britain's nuclear defence policy.

Mr. Stanley: In 1986 and so far this year my Department has received around 800 letters and standard postcards from right hon. and hon. Members and directly from members of the public concerned with various aspects of United Kingdom and NATO nuclear defence policy.

Territorial Army (South-West)

31. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present position regarding the increased manpower authorised and the additional units to be established for the Territorial Army in the south-west of England.

Mr. Freeman: Plans to form a new TA infantry battalion in south west England, as part of the phase II expansion of the TA, were published in defence open government document (DOGD) 84/02, a copy of which is in the Library. We are currently considering some possible modifications to the detailed arrangements.

Service Men (Pay and Conditions)

32. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of complaints received by his Department in 1986 from service men about pay and conditions of service.

Mr. Freeman: Complete records are not held centrally and they could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. However, a total of 47 complaints from service personnel about pay and conditions were dealt with centrally by the Ministry of Defence in London during 1986. Of these, nine were settled by reference to single service boards under normal complaints procedures.

Trident

33. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Spencer) earlier today.

46. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Defence what amount is contractually committed to the Trident submarine programme to be paid by June 1987, October 1987, April 1988 and June 1988, respectively; and what are the cancellation costs for each of these dates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers that I gave to the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 12 and 15 January 1987 (cols. 98 and 308 respectively). It is not the practice to give forecasts of cost or commitment profiles for projects on a year by year or more frequent basis. The cost of cancellation would depend upon contractors' properly incurred liabilities at the time of cancellation.

Pilkington Group

34. Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the approximate value of orders of defence equipment ordered from the Pilkington group of companies for 1987.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The approximate value of orders for defence equipment placed with the Pilkington group of companies so far in financial year 1986-87 is £40 million.

Auxiliary Oil Replenishment Vessel

35. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made with the design and construction of the first of class AOR vessel.

Tornado Aircraft

38. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of overseas orders for Tornado aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are currently two overseas orders for Tornado. Both are progressing satisfactorily.

Nimrod Airframes

40. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Defence to what use he intends to put the Nimrod airframes originally purchased in connection with the airborne early warning programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave him on Monday 12 January.

Job Dispersal

42. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to move his Department's jobs away from the south of England.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 11 March 1986 at column 802.

Anti-tactical Ballistic Missile

47. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments he has made of the case for developing an anti-tactical ballistic missile for deployment in the European theatre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The requirement for the defence of the European theatre against tactical ballistic missiles is currently being studied within NATO. The United Kingdom is participating fully in these studies.

Binary Chemical Weapons

49. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he or his Department have held or are holding on binary chemical weapons with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation military authorities to draw up the current year's ministerial guidance.

Mr. Stanley: Consultations on the ministerial guidance for 1987 have not yet started and in any case will be confidential.

Land (Training)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence in how many areas his Department has sought to purchase or extend land already in its possession for training purposes indicating (a) the area, (b) the number of hectares involved, (c) the purpose of the training and (d) the number of public rights of way involved.

Mr. Freeman: During the current financial year the Department has sought to purchase or extend land in its possession for training purposes as follows:

| (a) Area | (b) Number of hectares | (c) Purpose | (d) Number of public rights of way |
|---|---|---|---|
| Swynnerton | 1·15 | Dry training | None |
| Nesscliff | 50·02 | Dry training | None |
| Salisbury Plain | 882·18 | Dry training | None |
| Leek | 34·8 | Dry training | None |
| Sennybridge | 15·79 | Dry training | None |
| Hullavington | 12·14 | Dry training | None |
| Ash Ranges | 49·96 | Dry training | 1 |

Fixed Price Contracts

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are taken to ensure that, in the fixed price contracts for his Department, sufficient flexibility is allowed to enable latest developments to be incorporated into the relevant defence product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A basic requirement of a fixed price contract is a clearly defined specification of the work. It is Ministry policy to disturb such specifications as little as possible, but where a worthwhile operational or technical improvement was proposed consideration would be given to whether, exceptionally, the contract should be amended in the interests of overall value for money.

RAF Northolt

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to dispose of RAF Northolt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: RAF Northolt remains an operational RAF station and there are no plans to dispose of the site. The potential for improving the facilities for civil air users is being considered and this may involve the development of a civil enclave within the station.

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received from the Heathrow Association for the Control of Aircraft Noise concerning additional civilian flights at RAF Northolt; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if it remains his policy to retain the existing maximum limit of 28 flights a day at RAF Northolt; if he will consider the noise implications of any increase in the existing average number of movements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No such representations have been received. There are no plans to increase the existing ceiling of 28 civilian flights per day at RAF Northolt, a limit set in order to minimise disturbance to local residents.

Royal Marine Officers (Correspondence)

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will initiate an inquiry into the recent public disclosure of a letter between the honorary Captain General and the Commandant General of the Royal Marines concerning a former Royal Marine officer.

Mr. Younger: I can confirm that such an inquiry has been instituted.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Universities and Polytechnics

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment his Department has made of the current demand for places at universities and polytechnics for (a) computer sciences, (b) electrical engineering, (c) mechanical engineering and (d) mechanical production; and what proportion of students he estimates are turned down for places on these courses.

Mr. Walden: Information is not available on total demand for places in higher education to study these subjects. Statistics on applications to universities and polytechnics for entry in 1986, through the national admissions systems, are set out in the tables—but there is significant overlap between them. It is estimated that overall about 50 per cent. of applicants to universities also apply to polytechnics; estimates by subject are not currently available. Applicants to universities and polytechnics may also apply to other colleges or higher education which are not included in a national admissions system and for which data on numbers of candidates is thus not available.

The numbers of candidates and acceptances for United Kingdom university full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses in 1986 via the Universities Central Council on Admissions are as follows:

Universities United Kingdom 1986

| | Candidates with subject of first preference as shown[1] (1) | Accepted candidates for subject shown (2) | Acceptance rate (per cent.) (2) ÷ (1) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Computer Sciences | 4,020 | 1,900 | 47 |
| Electrical/electronic engineering | 4,008 | 2,384 | 59 |
| Mechanical engineering | 3,675 | 2,246 | 61 |
| Production engineering | 559 | 310 | 55 |

[1] Including candidates who fail to achieve entry requirements.

The total numbers of applications and estimated numbers of candidates for full-time and sandwich first degree courses at polytechnics in England and Wales in 1986, via the Polytechnics Central Admissions System, and the estimated numbers of students enrolling on these courses are as follows:

Polytechnics England and Wales 1986

| | Total Applications for the subjects shown[1] (1) | Estimated number of candidates for the subjects shown[1 2] (2) | Numbers of students enrolling (provisional)[3] (3) | Estimated Acceptance Rate (per cent.) (3) ÷ (2)[3] (4) |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Computer Sciences | 15,384 | 4,400 | 1,800 | 41 |
| Electrical/electronic engineering | 8,436 | 2,400 | 1,900 | 79 |
| Mechanical engineering | 12,099 | 3,450 | 900 | 26 |
| Production engineering | 1,534 | 450 | 200 | 44 |

[2] Estimated on assumption that overall average number of applications per candidate (3·5) also holds for each subject.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many official speeches he has made on the general subject of education in each of the last four years.

Since I took office in May last year I have made some 18 major speeches on various aspects of education policy. In the three previous years the comparable figures in respect of my predecessor were:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| May 1983 to April 1984 | 13 |
| May 1984 to April 1985 | 14 |
| May 1985 to April 1986 | 14 |

Bogus Degrees and Diplomas

Mr. Prentice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what studies have been made by his Department on the subject of bogus degrees or diplomas; what representations he has received; what evidence he has about the growth of the problem; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to regulate bogus educational qualifications, and, in particular, bogus degrees; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the list prepared for the Council of Europe of institutions where alleged qualifications are not generally recognised in Europe; and whether Her Majesty's Government will press for the publication of this list;

(4) whether Her Majesty's Government will hold discussions with other countries in the European Community, and with the European Commission, with a view to joint action against the purveyors of bogus degrees or diplomas.

Mr. Walden: The Government recognise that the problem exists, although they have no accurate information about its extent. My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from individuals, including several hon. Members, and from the College of Preceptors, the British Council and the Open University.

The Government deplore the activities of those offering bogus qualifications. Proposals for legislation to curtail such activities have been studied, in particular those put forward by my right hon. Friend the Member for Daventry. Legislation remains a possibility, but there are substantial practical difficulties, not least in relation to European Community law and the position of respectable foreign universities operating in this country. The Government will continue to consider the position, but see difficulties in introducing early legislation.

The Council of Europe has shelved plans to publish a revised version of its list of non-recognised institutions. The Government have strong reservations about the value of such a list, which would need to be both comprehensive and frequently updated in order to be effective.

The Government have no plans to hold discussions with other European Community members with a view to joint action. An approach to the European Commission is, however, intended in order to overcome the difficulties referred to about Community law.

Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the recurrent grant to the universities for each year since 1978-79, in cash and constant prices, excluding those amounts representing compensation for changes in home student fees and compensation for redundancy and early retirement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Recurrent grant to the universities for each year since 1978-79, in cash and constant prices, excluding additional funds provided by the Government for compensation for redundancy and early retirement, is as follows:

University Grants Committee recurrent grant

| Financial years | Cash | Real terms[1] |
|---|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 602·0 | 1,135·6 |
| 1979-80 | 728·5 | 1,175·9 |
| 1980-81 | 942·9 | 1,283·0 |
| 1981-82 | 968·0 | 1,198·9 |
| 1982-83 | 1,126·2 | 1,300·8 |
| 1983-84 | 1,192·2 | 1,317·8 |
| 1984-85 | 1,253·2 | 1,328·4 |
| 1985-86 | 1,282·6 | 1,282·6 |
| 1986-87 | [2]1,317·8 | 1,279·4 |

[1] At 1985-86 prices using the GDP deflator.

The table excludes the additional funding provided by the Government of £50 million and £30 million in the financial years 1982-83 and 1983-84 for redundancy and premature retirement compensation. The University Grants Committee paid a total of £153·1 million in compensation for redundancy and early retirement between the academic years 1981-82 and 1984-85.

The £158·2 million increase in recurrent grant between the financial years 1981-82 and 1982-83 included an addition in respect of compensation for changes in home student fees, which is reflected in the provision for later years.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the allocation to each local education authority for capital expenditure on schools, in cash and constant prices, in each year since 1978-79.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing local authority capital allocations in respect of schools for each year since 1978-79, in cash terms, and in 1978-79 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice).

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the capital allocation made to each local education authority for expenditure on schools, in cash and constant prices, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1987, c. 373]: The information requested for the years 1981-82 to 1987-88 is set out in tables 1 and 2. Before 1981-82 local education authorities did not receive block allocations but were notified annually, in the context of a rolling programme, of a limit on the value of building starts in the following year.

1. includes provision for nursery education.
2. calculated at 1985-86 prices using the GDP deflator.
3. the allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year, and do not include additional allocations made later to some authorities.
4. includes a notional element in respect of energy conservation work at both schools and FHE establishments.
5. single block allocations covering both schools and FHE were made in 1984-85: there was no separate schools element.

[1] Allocations for 1981-82 and earlier years were made on a different basis and have therefore been omitted.

[2] The allocations shown are those announced before the start of the financial year in question and do not reflect subsequent revisions.

TRANSPORT

Merchant Seamen

Sir Paul Bryan asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of British seafarers employed in British-owned merchant vessels in each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table has been derived from information provided by the General Council of British Shipping.

| End September | thousands |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 57·9 |
| 1981 | 53·7 |
| 1982 | 47·5 |
| 1983 | 40·0 |
| 1984 | 34·5 |
| 1985 | 34·5 |
| 1986 | [1]32·0 |

Figures exclude employees in the United Kingdom non-federated sector (comprising mainly fishing, port and coastal activities).

Rose and Crown, Fosdyke

Sir Richard Body asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will give the date when he received from the district valuer, Boston, an estimate of the value of the property known as the Rose and Crown, Fosdyke, Lincolnshire;

(2) whether he will give an estimate of the likely cost of making a compulsory purchase order for, and the holding of a public inquiry about, the purchase of the property known as the Rose and Crown, Fosdyke, Lincolnshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on Thursday 22 January at column 696.

Airports (Touting)

Mr. Mason asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the information he has regarding the activities of taxi and other touts at London airports causing a nuisance to overseas visitors; what steps he plans to take to stop these practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am advised by the Commissioner that he takes this problem seriously, to the extent that 10 officers are employed in dealing with touting at Heathrow airport, where more than 600 offences were dealt with last year. The other London airports are not in the Metropolitan police district.

Climatic Variability

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to implement the recommendations relating to his responsibilities in the report "Social and Economic Responses to Climatic Variability in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Moore: I will answer this question shortly.

British Airways

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make it his policy to ensure that members of British forces posted overseas are entitled to apply for shares in British Airways on exactly the same basis as United Kingdom residents.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British forces posted overseas may apply for shares in British Airways on exactly the same terms as United Kingdom residents provided that they have satisfied themselves that to do so would not conflict with any local legal requirements. Alternatively, they may give a United Kingdom resident power of attorney to apply on their behalf.

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement about the privatisation of British Airways.

Mr. Moore: This morning the offer for sale of 720,200,000 ordinary shares in British Airways plc was fully underwritten at a price of 125p per share. This represents a market capitalisation value of £900 million. Copies of the prospectus are available in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Statistics

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the statistical analysis in the letter written to the hon. Member for Kensington by the Minister for Health on 18 August 1986, showing (a) the number of working families with children in 1984 at various income levels and (b) the number of out-of-work families of working age with children in 1984 at various income levels; and if he will also give a breakdown of the out-of-work families who were not in receipt of any benefit, showing how many had no entitlement and how many appear to have been entitled but were not claiming.

Mr. Major: The tables accompanying my predecessor's letter of 18 August 1986 to my hon. Friend are as follows.

A breakdown of out-of-work families with children who were not in receipt of supplementary benefit in 1984, the latest date available, is also shown.

It is not possible to identify from the family expenditure survey potential recipients of national insurance benefits who are entitled but not claiming.

Notes:

1. The figures are derived from the 1984 Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to sampling error. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 and so rows and columns may not sum exactly to the totals shown.
2. Gross weekly income is the income reported in 1984 without any updating.
3. A 'working family' is defined as one where at least one parent is in full-time employment or self-employment. The figures include families where the head has been sick or unemployed for less than 3 months—in these cases income has been taken as the family's income when the head was in work.
4. The figures exclude any families not living in private households.
5. A 'two wage family' is one where the second wage exceeds £4 a week.

(1) The figures are derived from the 1984 Family Expenditure Survey and are subject to sampling error. All figures have been rounded to the nearest 10,000 and so rows and columns may not sum exactly to the totals shown.

(2) The totals do not coincide exactly with other published statistics. This is due to the different data sources.

(3) Gross Weekly income includes rent and rate rebates and is the income reported in 1984 without any updating.

(4) An "out of work family" is defined as one where neither parent is in full-time employment or self-employment, except that families where the head has been sick or unemployed for less than 3 months are excluded.

(5) The figures exclude any families not living in private households.

(6) "Other" NI benefits include industrial disablement, maternity and widows benefits.

Benefits

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide figures for the number of people in Coventry dependent on social security benefits, broken down by category of benefit and age group.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available for centrally paid benefits, for example, retirement pension, about the number of beneficiaries in any particular locality nor, generally, about the beneficiaries' age groups.

The Coventry area is covered by two local offices of the Department, Coventry East and Coventry West, and the latest available information about recipients of various locally administered benefits is as follows:

| | Coventry East | Coventry West |
|---|---|---|
| Sickness and Invalidity Benefit | 3,393 | 2,886 |
| Maternity Allowance | 292 | 390 |
| Supplementary Benefit (as at 16.12.86) | | |
| (a) beneficiaries over pension age | 5,521 | 5,730 |
| (b) beneficiaries under pension age and required to sign at the Unemployment Benefit Office | 10,304 | 7,565 |
| (c) other beneficiaries under pension age | 6,673 | 5,046 |

Housing benefit is administered by the local authority and the numbers of recipients in Coventry at 31.3.86 (the latest date for which information is available) were as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Rent Rebate recipients | 18,504 |
| Rent Allowance recipients | 8,414 |
| Rate Rebate recipients | [1]54,113 |

[1] Includes local authority tenants who also receive a rent rebate and private tenants who also receive a rent allowance.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will report on the progress of his investigation into the possible transfer of control of the West Midlands ambulance service from Birmingham to Coventry.

Mrs. Currie: There is no such investigation under way. My right hon. Friend stated in his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East (Mr. Nellist) on 13 January at column 128 that he was satisfied that the West Midlands ambulance service is working effectively, and undertook to examine the individual case mentioned.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the direct revenue effect in 1986-87 of changing the rates of class 1 national insurance contributions in all earnings bands by one percentage point; and whether he will show separately the effect on employers' and employees' contributions.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that such a change to all rates of employers' and employees' national insurance contributions in 1986-87 would have led to changes in receipts from employers and employees of £1,430 million and £1,290 million respectively.

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, what would be the cost of abolishing employers' national insurance contributions in all assisted regions.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: I regret that the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Occupational Deafness

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will amend the Social Security Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations to cover persons who have been employed in the glass industry and who suffer from occupational deafness;

(2) if he will invite the standing working group of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council to investigate the extent of industrial deafness in the glass industry.

Mr. Major: The Government are advised on the prescription of industrial diseases by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, whose standing working group is keeping the occupational deafness provisions under review. We have drawn the council's attention to the hon. Member's suggestion.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations from employers' organisations to extend the scope of the Social Security Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations to cover workers suffering from occupational deafness, in industries and occupations other than those currently listed in the regulations.

Mr. Major: We have received no representations to this effect from employers' organisations.

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations from trade unions to extend the scope of the Social Security Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations to cover workers suffering from occupational deafness in industries and occupations other than those currently listed in the regulations.

Mr. Major: We have received a number of representations from trade unions. Their views have been passed to the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council which is keeping the occupational deafness provisions under review.

Brotton-Skelton Hospital

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects that building works on the new Brotton-Skelton 70-bed community hospital will be commenced.

Mrs. Currie: Regional health authorities are responsible for the planning of capital schemes in the light of their available resources and competing local priorities. We understand that no firm date can yet be given for the start of the Brotton-Skelton hospital pending completion by the Northern regional health authority of the review of its capital programme which is currently in progress. My hon. Friend may wish to write for more detailed information to the chairman of the northern regional health authority.

Death and Maternity Grants

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he now proposes to take in the light of the discovery that under the regulatory powers governing the operation of the Social Fund in the Social Security Act 1986, no provision exists for him to determine the size of payments for death or maternity grant purposes.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to the statement that I made to the House on 22 January 1987 at column 1042.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for all births in 1984 to residents (a) in England and (b) In England and Wales which were conducted by (i) caesarian section and (ii) instrumental delivery the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neo[illegible]eaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories, under 1,500g, 1,500 to 1,999g, 2,000 to 2,499g, 2,500 to 2,999g, 3,000 to 3,499g, 3,500 to 3,999g, 4,000g plus and unstated birthweight;

(2) if he will list for all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority which were conducted by (a) caesarian section and (b) instrumental delivery the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500g, 1,500 to 1,999g, 2,000 to 2,499g, 2,500 to 2,999g, 3,000 to 3,499g, 3,500 to 3,999g, 4,000g plus and unstated birthweight;

(3) if he will list for all births in 1984 to residents in Wales which were conducted by (a) caesarian section and (b) instrumental delivery the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths, and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500g, 1,500 to 1,999g, 2,000 to 2,499g, 2,500 to 2,999g, 3,000 to 3,499g, 3,500 to 3,999g, 4,000g plus and unstated birthweight.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available. The registration of births (live and still) does not identify the mode of delivery.

Residential Homes

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each local authority in England and Wales average weekly expenditure on the provision of meals for each resident in its homes for the elderly.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested for England is not available centrally. Any information available for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Married Women Pensioners

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what work his Department has undertaken to make married women pensioners aware of the abolition of the half test rule, and of the tax allowance which they can now claim following its abolition.

Mr. Major: A total of 67,792 potential beneficiaries were identified in 1985 from computer records. Those women who might benefit in cash terms from the abolition of the rule were invited to claim their pension entitlement. The remaining women, who were already drawing pensions on their husband's contributions which equalled or exceeded those to which they would be entitled on their own contributions, were informed of their entitlement and advised that it might be helpful to them for tax purposes. A publicity campaign was conducted in an attempt to reach those women who could not be identified individually. Advertisements were places in the national press, women's magazines and specialist publications for the elderly, and leaflets inviting women to claim their pension entitlement were widely distributed. Both the advertisements and the leaflets included a coupon claim form. Consulates in countries overseas were also notified of the new arrangements.

As a result of these measures a total of 35,254 married women have been awarded pension for the first time or have had their previous entitlement increased.

Diabetic Patients

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has reached any decision on the prescribing by general practitioners of home blood glucose testing strips for diabetic patients.

Mrs. Currie: This is still under review.

Ms. Harman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why general practitioners working within the National Health Service are not allowed to prescribe plastic disposable syringes for the use of diabetic patients in cases where such syringes are considered by the doctor to be more suited to the patients needs.

Mrs. Currie: Diabetic patients who need disposable syringes can obtain them free through the hospital service. We are aware, however, that many diabetic patients prefer disposable syringes and the possibility of including them in the list of prescribable appliances is under review.

Leukaemia

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will immediately set up an investigation into the high incidence of child leukaemia in the Fareham, Hampshire area.

Mrs. Currie: The occurrence of an increased incidence of childhood leukaemia in the Fareham area, outside the common and natural range, has not been established. The Department will, however, arrange for the study of the available statistics and will then consider whether more detailed investigations are appropriate.

Climatic Variability

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to implement the recommendations relating to his responsibilities in the report "Social and Economic Responses to Climatic Variability" in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Mea[illegible] asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he [illegible] give (a) the daily mean temperature and (b) the weekly mean temperature for the 64 Department of Health and Social Security weather stations for the week beginning 19 January.

Mr. Major: The information requested for the 63 designated weather stations is as shown in the following table:

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy that pensioners not normally in receipt of supplementary pensions should have their heating requirement assessed as £5 per week greater during exceptionally severe weather; and that if this additional cost puts them over the supplementary pension threshold they should receive the severe weather payment.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: No. Pensioners with incomes above their supplementary benefit requirements level, who are receiving housing benefit supplement, are eligible for the £5 extra payment, where the other conditions are satisfied.

General Practice Trainees

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has regarding the legality within the European Economic Community of the limitation of numbers of general practice trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There are no provisions in the laws of the European Communities which prevent member states from operating medical manpower controls provided that they do not affect the rights of Economic Community nationals to compete freely for such appointments; this, of course, includes general practice trainee places.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical information is collected by his Department regarding the incidence of cot deaths; for how many years information has been collected; what has been the annual number of cot deaths recorded; what information there is on the incidence of cot deaths following vaccination; how many cot deaths have been noted as occurring within (a) 24, (b) 48, (c) 72 and (d) seven days following vaccination; and over what period these deaths occurred.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to make an inquiry under section 36 of the National Assistance Act 1948 of any local authorities which publish a nil budget estimate for any service for which they have a duty to assess the needs of disabled people under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: Under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 local authorities have a duty to provide certain services for an individual disabled person if they are satisfied that such services are necessary in order to meet his or her needs. Section 36 of the National Assistance Act provides that where a local authority has failed to discharge its duties under section 2, the Secretary of State may, after such inquiry as he may think fit, make an order declaring the authority to be in default. The publication of a nil budget estimate cannot in itself indicate such a failure. Where, however, there is evidence that a local authority has failed actually to provide the services which are necessary to meet a disabled person's needs, the necessary inquiries are made.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many specialist staff are employed by each of the district health authorities in England in the detection of (a) breast and (b) cervical cancer.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 26 January 1987]: The information requested is not available centrally.

Social Fund Inspectors

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on ministerial responsibility for the proposed social fund inspectors.

Mr. Major [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: My right hon. Friend will be responsible for making persons available to the social fund commissioner for appointment as social fund inspectors, and for issuing any general directions and guidance on reviews of social fund decisions. The commissioner will be responsible for appointing the inspectors, arranging their training, monitoring the quality of their decisions and giving them any advice or assistance needed to improve the standard of those decisions. The commissioner will also report annually to my right hon. Friend on the standards of review by inspectors, and my right hon. Friend will publish his report.

NATIONAL FINANCE

British Gas

Mr. Leigh asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the first tranche of British Gas debt will be repaid.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The first tranche of £750,000,000 of the British Gas debenture will be redeemed this financial year.

Departmental Staff (Training)

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average number of days' training [illegible] year given to professional information technology staff within Her Majesty's Customs and Excise who are no longer trainees in the most recent years available.

Mr. Brooke: Following is the information:

1985—7·95 man days per person
1986—6·86 man days per person

Premium Bonds

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the names of winners of premium bonds are held in a form which makes it possible meaningfully to analyse them by region, or otherwise geographically.

Morgan Grenfell (Inquiry)

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the respective roles of (a) his Department and (b) the Bank of England in the establishment of an inquiry into the management of Morgan Grenfell and, in particular, on the resignations of the chief executive and the head of the corporate finance department; and under what powers the Bank of England has purported to act in this matter.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer explained to the House on 20 January, at column 781, Morgan Grenfell, as a recognised bank, is subject to the supervisory authority of the Bank of England and to the terms of the Banking Act 1979. I have nothing further to add concerning the bank's role with respect to Morgan Grenfell. As my right hon. Friend also told the House, the Governor is keeping him informed of developments.

Personal Wealth

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of personal wealth was represented by the top 2, 10 and 20 per cent., respectively, of the British population in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the figures for general Government expenditure, privatisation proceeds and gross domestic product used in the plotting of chart 1.1 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-I, page 5).

Mr. MacGregor: General Government expenditure and privatisation proceeds figures were published in tables 2.1, 2.22 and 2.24 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-II).

|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 173 |
| 1979-80 | 207 |
| 1980-81 | 236 |
| 1981-82 | 260 |
| 1982-83 | 283 |
| 1983-84 | 307 |
| 1984-85 | 329 |
| 1985-86 | 360 |
| 1986-87 | 380 |
| 1987-88 | 407 |
| 1988-89 | 431 |
| 1989-90 | 455 |

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a note explaining how the definitions used for the calculation of the public expenditure-gross domestic product ratio have changed from White Paper to White Paper, with their numerical consequences, over the period 1979-1987.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 28 January 1986, at columns 443-44. There were no definitional changes in the general Government expenditure-GDP percentage between the 1986 and 1987 public expenditure W[illegible] Papers (Cmnd. 9702 and Cmnd. 56 respectively). A series of general Government expenditure as a percentage of GDP was published in table 2.22 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56).

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place tables in the Library showing the percentages by Department, spending authority and economic category for the period 1979-80 to 1989-90 using precisely the same definitions and classifications as in chart 1.3 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-I, page 7).

Mr. MacGregor: The figures underlying the percentages in chart 1.3 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-I), were published in tables 2.1, 2.3 and 2.7 of volumn II. These tables cover the period 1981-82 to 1989-90. Figures by spending authorities and economic category are not readily available prior to 1981-82. Copies of the White Paper are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the detailed entries for "Other national accounts adjustments" for the years 1981-82 to 1989-90, consistent with table 2.1 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. MacGregor: The underlying detailed figures for the "Other national accounts adjustments", shown in table 2.1 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-II), appear in table 2.19 of that White Paper.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table in cash terms showing, for each of the years 1979-80 to 1989-90 for each of the organisations which have been included in at least one year in the equivalent of table 5.3 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56-II), those actual or planned asset sales not included in "central privatisation proceeds"; whether such proceeds have directly accrued to the Exchequer or have remained in the relevant businesses; and if he will provide this information in a format comparable to the table in columns 861-62 of the Official Report of 26 July 1986, except that at least totals should be provided for the planning years.

Mr. MacGregor: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the answer of 26 July 1985, at columns 863-64, which my predecessor gave in reply to his earlier question on this subject.

For the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 receipts from asset sales totalling approximately £300 million, £250 million and £200 million respectively, have been assumed.

Proceeds from the sale of assets are a source of internally generated funds for nationalised industries and do not directly accrue to the Exchequer although they do affect the industries' need for external finance.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table comparable with table 2.1 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56-II), showing, by programme for the years 1979-80 to 1989-90, the actual or projected proceeds of public sector sales of assets outside the "central privatisation proceeds" detailed in table 2.21.

Mr. MacGregor: The table shows sales of land and buildings by Department for the years 1979-80 to 1989-90. The figures include sales by local authorities and new towns as well as central Government and are consistent with the figures published in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 56. To be consistent with table 2.1, the figures are provided by Department rather than programme.

It is not possible to identify fully the sales of assets, other than those from privatisation proceeds and sales of land and buildings, within the public expenditure figures. However, the amounts of these other sales are likely to be relatively small.

Capital Gains

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many valuations of assets at 6 April 1965 prices for the purposes of capital gains tax and corporation tax on capital gains were carried out in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the costs incurred by the Inland Revenue in connection with those valuations.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Budget

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the proportion of the European Commission budget spent on (a) all agriculture support, (b) social fund and (c) regional fund.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for Britain's net contribution to the European Commission; and if he will express that figure as a percentage of the total EEC budget.

Mr. Brooke: The latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community budget in 1986-87 is £1,259 million (see table 3.3 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cmnd. 56-II). This is some 5·4 per cent. of the 1986 Community budget.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Annual Review

Mrs. Roe asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the 1987 annual review of agriculture.

Mr. Jopling: A White Paper setting out the conclusions of the 1987 annual review of agriculture will be laid before Parliament today. The White Paper shows that gross output at current prices is forecast to rise by 1·5 per cent. to £12,198 million in 1986. The cereals harvest was a particularly good one. Output prices generally were higher but input prices were lower largely due to cheaper fuel and fertilisers.

Aggregate farming income is forecast to rise by 21 per cent. to £1,411 million in 1986, though there were marked variations over the United Kingdom as a whole. With a 2 per cent. fall in the work force, labour productivity is forecast to rise by around 2 per cent. compared with an annual average growth rate of 6 per cent. over the 10 years up to 1985.

EEC (Food Sales to Soviet Union)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food at what price, in pounds sterling, a pound of butter, a pound of beef, a litre of wine and a ton of grain is sold by the European Commission to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The most recent prices (in sterling terms) at which these commodities would have been made available to traders for bulk sales to third countries including the USSR are as follows:

Butter: 10p/lb.
Beef: bone in forequarters 32p/lb
bone in hindquarters 49p/lb
boneless cuts 38p to 59p/lb depending on the cut
Wine: 5p/litre
Cereals: £40-50 per tonne depending on type and quality

These prices are inclusive of export refunds and United Kingdom MCA's where applicable. With the exception of the cereals price which is the free on board price, they do not cover any transport, distribution or other costs. The prices at which these commodities are sold to the Soviet Union is a matter for the traders concerned.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present concentration of mercury in (a) fish in Liverpool bay and (b) eels in the Thames estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The average level of mercury in fish taken from Liverpool bay, weighted in accordance with the pattern of consumption, was 0·23 mg/kg in 1985, the latest year for which figures are available. The level in eels in the Thames estuary in 1986 was 0·30 mg/kg.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he intends to publish the baseline survey of metals in sea water on which his Department is currently engaged.

Mr. Gummer: This survey is part of a baseline survey by the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, which is expected to be completed and made available in 1988.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what resources are available to his Department in terms of finance and manpower to carry out the work of protecting the North sea from pollution arising from human sources.

Mr. Gummer: The protection of the North sea from pollution forms part of the aquatic environment programme of my Ministry. The resources devoted to it are listed in the publication "Ministerial Information in MAFF 1986" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 20 November, Offical Report, column 348, if he will give the latest assessment (a) by Her Majesty's Government and (b) by other Governments of the scale of pollution in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 20 November 1986 at col. 348.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 25 November, Official Report, column 182, if he will list all the licences issued under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 for the dumping or disposal by burning at sea of harzardous industrial chemicals and wastes.

Mr. Gummer: More than 30 such licences have been issued. A public register of all licences issued under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 is maintained in my Ministry and may be inspected free of charge at any reasonable time.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report, a revised table bringing up to date the information on annual expenditure under the common agricultural policy as given in his written answer dated 14 May 1986, Official Report, columns 481-82; and if he will provide estimates for 1986 and a forecast for 1987.

Mr. Jopling: The information requested is set out in the following table:

| | CAP Expenditure[2] | | Year on year increase in real terms per cent. | CAP expenditure as a percentage of total EC expenditure per cent. | United Kingdom receipts under the CAP[2] £ million |

Research

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the funding by project purpose and amount of agricultural research by his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A summary of my Department's research programme is published in an annual report on research and development. This outlines the broad allocation of expenditure and provides a commentary on selected aspects of the national programme. Copies of the five most recent reports are being placed in the Library of the House. I regret that a more detailed breakdown could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list by title, start date and amount, the funding of agricultural research projects involving (a) minor and (b) major aspects of animal welfare in each of the past five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information which is readily available has been placed in the Library of the House. It covers the three years 1983-84 to 1985-86 and gives details of work with animal welfare implications as reported to the Farm Animal Welfare Council by the Agriculture Departments and the Agricultural and Food Research Council. The projects have been annotated to show whether animal welfare was a primary or secondary objective of the study. More detailed information extending over a longer time scale could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbett asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list in the Official Report, by title and subject, those recommended revised welfare codes and reports from the Farm Animal Welfare Council, and the dates on which they were submitted to Ministers, which still await ministerial decision; and when decisions upon them are likely to be made.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Ministers have yet to take decisions on the implementation of the following reports and proposals for codes from the Farm Animal Welfare Council:

—Welfare of farmed deer (submitted January 1985). The Government's proposals for implementation are expected to be circulated to interested parties shortly.

—Welfare of livestock when slaughtered by religious methods (July 1985). Discussions are still taking place with interested organisations.

—Welfare of livestock at markets (May 1986). Proposals should be issued within the next few months.

—Interim statement on regulations (November 1986). Interested organisations have been asked for comments by 31 January.

—Revised welfare codes for turkeys and domestic fowls as well as new codes for ducks and rabbits and the disposal of day-old chicks (June 1982-November 1986). These codes will be laid before Parliament together very shortly.

DEFENCE

Contracts

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to highlight particular problem areas or contractors who persistently underestimate cost or completion dates.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 January to the hon. Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Wainwright).

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role of the European fighter aircraft in his Department's plans for European defence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The EFA is intended to replace the Phantom and the Jaguar in the air defence and ground attack roles.

S90 (Hull Design)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the latest position regarding the investigation into the properties of the S90 short fat hull.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As my right hon. Friend announced in another place on 13 November 1986, at column 124, Lloyd's Register of Shipping has agreed to conduct the inquiry into hull forms for frigates and destroyers under the chairmanship of Mr. H. R. MacLeod. I understand that Lloyd's Register has begun the gathering and assessment of the evidence and we look forward to receiving its report in due course. I would expect the inquiry to take about six to nine months to complete its work.

NATO (Ships)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation frigate replacement programme (NFR90).

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Together with seven other NATO nations, the United Kingdom participated in a 15-month joint feasibility study, which was completed towards the end of 1985.

In concert with our partners in this project, the results have been evaluated; detailed discussions aimed at the commencement of the next phase, project definition, are currently in progress with the other nations. Current plans envisage decisions on the way ahead being reached by about the middle of the year.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made as to how the planned United Kingdom number of surface ships is able to meet the maritime force requirements in the light of the study completed by the major North Atlantic Treaty Organisation commanders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The study to which I believe my hon. Friend is referring is confidential and work on it is continuing. The United Kingdom makes by far the largest contribution to the NATO surface naval presence in the eastern Atlantic and the Channel of any European NATO member.

Strategic Defence Initiative

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements he has made for the £300,000 contract awarded by the United States to his Department for research into strategic defence initiative-related test bed requirements to be completed; and whether private firms will be involved in this work.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: This study, which is already under way, is being led by the MOD's Royal Signals and Radar Establishment, Malvern, with the bulk of the work being sub-contracted to companies in the United Kingdom. A contract was recently awarded to Ferranti Computer Systems Ltd. which leads a consortium involving British Aerospace, the Marconi Company, Scicon and Software Sciences. Normal MOD rules of contracting by competition applied. The study, which is scheduled to be completed by March 1987, is valued at US$300,000.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land Reclamation

Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are being made available for derelict land reclamation in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The resources available for derelict land reclamation in 1987-88 will be about £81·14 million compared with £78·38 million at the beginning of 1986-87 and about double in real terms the £23·5 million available in 1979-80. Of this, £75 million (92 per cent.) will be spent in the north, north-west, Yorkshire and Humberside, west midlands and east midlands.

I have increased the allocation for grant to the private sector and nationalised industries by over two thirds, to £9·55 million. Resources for local authority schemes are slightly lower than in 1986-87, at £71·3 million. This is well justified by the level of interest shown by private firms and by the value for money that can be obtained from using scarce public resources in partnership with the private sector.

Local authorities retain a major role in reclamation, so I have approved a further three rolling programmes to enable authorities to tackle areas of extensive dereliction in Rotherham, Sunderland and Barrow. Total expenditure on the 16 programmes now approved will be over £29 million next year. This will enable local authorities to tackle dereliction on an area basis more effectively than could be achieved on a scheme by scheme basis.

I have allocated a further £10 million to continue support for the reclamation of the former Consett and Corby steel works (5·3 million), and investigation and remedial works on limestone workings in the Black Country (£5 million).

The allocations include over £7 million for the reclamation of coal tip and related dereliction. Following the "Coal and the Environment" (1981) report, this is the largest amount made available in any year, and demonstrates the Government's continued support for good quality schemes in coalfield areas.

Priorities for derelict land reclamation continue to [illegible] as set out in my Department's circular, "Reclamation for Re-use of Derelict Land (28/85)". This stressed the importance of schemes designed to reclaim urban, especially inner city land for housing and industrial and commercial end uses. These priorities will be reflected in the schemes to be supported in 1987-88.

Multi-occupied Properties

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received regarding multi-occupied properties; and how he proposes to respond.

Mr. Tracey: I refer to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Mr. Batiste) on Friday 23 January by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any plans to change his policy of providing loft insulation grants to householders in England and Wales;

(2) what is his policy on the provision of loft insulation grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction announced proposed changes to the Homes Insulation Scheme on 19 December, at column 756, in response to a question from the hon. Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller). The proposed new scheme would withdraw the general rate at 66 per cent. but would extend the availability of the 90 per cent. grant to all householders in receipt of housing benefit or supplementary benefit.

The new arrangements would also apply in Wales, where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has responsibility for the scheme.

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the level of expenditure on loft insulation grants (a) in 1979 and (b) in the most recent year for which figures are available; and whether he has any plans to increase such expenditure.

Mr. Tracey: Expenditure on grants in 1979 was £14·9 million, and in 1985, the most recent year for which figures are available, it was £25·4 million. My right hon. Friend has no plans to increase expenditure.

Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has submitted to the Paris Commission on the efficacy of environmental quality objectives and uniform emission standards; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department made a statement on the use of environmental quality objectives and uniform emission standards to a Paris Commission working group to evaluate the two approaches in February 1985. This statement, together with those of other contracting parties, was included as an annex to the seventh annual report on the activities of the Paris Commission; the report also records the conclusions reached on the subject by the commission at its seventh annual meeting. Arrangements are being made to place a copy in the Library. My Department also makes an annual return to the Paris Commission to demonstrate compliance with the quality standard for mercury.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to respond to the House of Lords Select Committee recommendation concerning the unification of uniform emission standards and the environmental quality objective approaches to water quality management.

Mr. Waldegrave: In his speech of 21 November 1985 my noble Friend Lord Skelmersdale undertook that the Government would give serious consideration to the House of Lords Select Committee's recommendations concerning a "unified" approach to the control of discharge of list 1 substances, while pointing out that any change in the current parallel approach would have far-reaching implications and require very careful thought. This remains the position.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what degree financially in the last three years his Department has supported work on (a) the effects of hydrocarbon discharges, including polyaromatic hydrocarbons on the North sea, and (b) development of biological indicators of pollution, and if he will detail the institute or person with whom these contracts were placed.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last three years my Department has not supported work on the effects of hydrocarbon discharges to the sea. Some £500,000 has been spent on the development of biological indicators of pollution, the main projects being:

— Evaluation of techniques for detecting pollution effects on benthic communities; and part of an integrated study on environmental quality — at the Institute for Marine Environmental Research;

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the contribution Her Majesty's Government have made to the data bases being developed by the international council for the exploration of the sea and that of the joint monitoring programme of the Oslo and Paris commission.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United Kingdom Government have played a full part in the development of these data bases and regularly submit information on the levels of contaminants in water, biota and sediments for particular locations.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what controls Her Majesty's Government have introduced in the last three years to control the discharge of grey list substances to coastal and estuarine waters.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer to my replies to the hon. Member's questions on 27 November, at columns 314-15. Her Majesty's Government have introduced national quality standards in respect of six grey list substances—copper, zinc, nickel, chromium, lead and arsenic; quality standards have been set for saline as well as fresh water. Water authorities are required to ensure that the quality standards are met, which entails the appropriate control of discharges.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when Her Majesty's Government intend to publish the results of the study they sponsored to examine the implementation in England and Wales of the cadmium directive, 1983/513/EEC.

Mr. Waldegrave: Publication of the results of this study has been delayed because of the need to respect commercial confidentiality. However, agreement has now been reached with the companies concerned and I expect to publish the results shortly.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date water authorities have to draw up plans incorporating time scales for the reduction of pollution from list II substances for those areas where quality standards are not met.

Mr. Waldegrave: Water authorities are required, under DOE circular 18/85, WO37/85, to inform my Department by 1 January 1988 of details of the measures they intend to take to enable the national quality standards so far established for list II substances to be met in any areas where they are not already being achieved, and of dates by which these measures will be taken.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by when, through international agreement, Her Majesty's Government are obliged to ensure that the best technical means are employed to reduce pollution by certain substances; and whose advice is sought to assist his judgment on what the best technical means are.

Mr. Waldegrave: As far as discharges to water are concerned, Her Majesty's Government are already bound by the relevant provisions of the EC directives relating to discharges of mercury, cadmium, lindane, carbon tetrachloride, pentachlorophenol and DDT (directives 82/176, 83/513, 84/156, 84/491, and 86/280) to grant authorisations for new plants which apply the standards corresponding to the best technical means available, when that is necessary for the elimination of pollution or for the distortions to competition.

Hitherto my Department has, in determining best technical means available, drawn on the expertise of its own staff who have taken into account any relevant discussion that may have taken place in the Community at the time of negotiation of limit values for the substance concerned. In the future, consideration of what constitutes best technical means available will be one of the tasks undertaken by the water pollution arm of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those occasions in the last three years when, in the light of experience or fresh scientific evidence, Her Majesty's Government have tightened numerically any environmental quality objectives;

(2) if he will list those occasions in the last three years when, in the light of experience or fresh scientific evidence, Her Majesty's Government have lessened numerically any environmental quality objectives.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department has not, in the last three years, tightened or relaxed any environmental quality standards.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the Minister of State's statement that complete protection of all ecosystems is unattainable, it is his intention that Her Majesty's Government should adopt a precautionary approach to protection of the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government already adopt a precautionary approach to the protection of the environment, including the North sea. We undertake, and will continue to undertake, measures to reduce inputs of contaminants to the marine environment where there are reasonable scientific grounds for supposing that failure to take action may in due course result in environmental damage. In doing so, we take into account the likely costs and benefits of such measures.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a detailed list of research for the wider activity of the joint monitoring group of Oslo and Paris commissions which Her Majesty's Government have conducted or commissioned in the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall write separately detailing the research asked for.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list cases where Her Majesty's Government have found it necessary to require a refinery within their jurisdiction to reduce the oil content of its discharge into marine, freshwater and estuarine ecosystems to 5mg/L.

Mr. Waldegrave: Consent conditions for refineries are the responsibility of the water authorities and are available from public registers.

Council Housing

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish in the Official Report in tabular form for each district council in the northern region the number of council properties (a) difficult to let, (b) vacant, (c) available for letting, (d) vacant for over one year and (e) vacant for over two years at 1 April 1986.

Mr. Tracey: This information provided in local authorities' housing investment programme returns, is available in the Library in the "HIP (1986) all items print" under columns A71, A99, A91, A109 and A119, respectively.

Housing (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many local authorities' housing departments take responsibility for the adaptation of premises for disabled persons.

Mr. Tracey: The Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 requires all housing authorities when considering the needs of their districts to have regard to the special needs of chronically sick and disabled persons.

It is for each authority to determine its own priorities for housing investment and to decide whether there is a need for purpose-built dwellings or for adaptation to existing dwellings to make them suitable for occupation by disabled people. We have urged authorities to concentrate their housing resources on those in greatest need including disabled people.

Three hundred and fifty four English housing authorities, of a total of 366, notified the Department that they had made adaptations, or supported them through home improvement grants, during 1985-86 to make dwellings more suitable for occupation by disabled people.

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what payments he made to local authorities either through the rate support grant or directly to adapt premises for disabled persons in the last financial year.

Mr. Tracey: The Department supports local authority expenditure on housing and building adaptations for disabled people in a variety of ways.

Where rate support grant is concerned, local authorities may choose to spend part of their revenue expenditure for this purpose. But the block grant given towards that spending is not hypothecated on the basis that they will.

The Department also meets a proportion of the cost of local authority home improvement grants, and the whole cost of local authority home insulation grants. Both schemes provide for higher rates of grant to disabled people in certain circumstances. It is for local authorities to decide how to allocate their resources. It is not possible to identify the extent to which Exchequer grant to local authorities relates specifically to this purpose.

Empty Council Property

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the London boroughs to discuss the problem of bringing empty council properties back into use.

Mr. John Patten: On 19 January I met representatives of the local authority associations to discuss homelessness; our discussions included measures to bring authorities' empty housing back into use, and the disappointing response of some London boroughs to the Government's initiative, which I announced in August 1986, of making estate action resources available to accommodate homeless people in empty properties on estates.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on progress in setting up the four new urban development corporations which he announced in October 1986.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) on 15 January, at column 269.

Cornwall (Planning Applications)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, for the last five years, how many times he has, for the county of Cornwall, called in planning applications that had previously received the backing of the planning authority involved.

Mr. Tracey: Nine such applications have been called in by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors, within the last five years.

Commercial Development

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning pressures for substantial commercial developments in traditionally residential outer suburbs of the English conurbations; and what criteria he follows in deciding whether to call in planning applications of this kind.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State does from time to time receive representations on such matters. Requests for applications to be called in are considered on their individual merits, but the general approach is to be very selective about calling in applications for the Secretary of State's decision, and in general applications are called in only when planning issues of more than local importance are involved.

East Sussex

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many houses have been built by each borough and district council in East Sussex in each year since 1974; and what are the projected figures for each council until 1990-91;

(2) how many units of sheltered accommodation have been built by each borough and district council in East Sussex, both directly and in partnership with a housing association or trust, in each year since 1974; and what are the projected figures for each council until 1990-91.

Mr. Tracey: Reported completion of dwellings built for each of the authorities and, of these, the numbers from 1982 to 1985 which were designed for the elderly with warden supervision, appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are available in the Library.

All dwellings

| Period | Issue |
|---|---|
| 1974 | 33 |
| 1975 | 37 |
| 1976 | 41 |
| 1977 | 45 |
| 1978 | 49 |
| 1979 | 59 |
| 1980 to 1983 | 73 |
| 1984 | 77 |
| 1985 | 78 |
| 1st half 1986 | 79 |
| Sheltered dwellings | |
| 1982 | 66 |
| 1983 | 70 |
| 1984 | 74 |
| 1985 | 78 |

Sheltered dwelling completions were not identified in returns up to June 1980. The numbers reported in 1980, 1981 and the first half of 1986 were:

| | 2nd half 1980 | 1981 | 1st half 1986 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brighton | 25 | — | — |
| Hastings | 42 | — | — |
| Wealden | 42 | 33 | 50 |

Housebuilding returns do not identify dwellings built in partnership by councils and housing associations. The only sheltered dwellings for housing associations reported as completed in East Sussex were 19 in 1984 in Rother.

The authorities' estimates of dwellings to be completed for them in 1986-87 and programme bids for 1987-88 and 1988-89, are in their 1982 HIP2 returns, which are also available in the Library. These figures show dwellings for the elderly and disabled separately from others, but do not distinguish sheltered dwellings.

Housing (Basildon)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many houses the Basildon Development Corporation — New Towns Commission sold in each of the last five years; and for the same period how many shared ownership schemes or dwellings for single people have been built.

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 613 |
| 1983-84 | 512 |
| 1984-85 | 536 |
| 1985-86 | 448 |
| 1986-87[1] | 185 |

(b) Sale of dwellings built in partnership with private developers (not including shared-ownership sales)

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 467 |
| 1983-84 | 352 |
| 1984-85 | 167 |
| 1985-86 | 248 |
| 1986-87[2] | 251 |

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 237 |
| 1983-84 | 274 |
| 1984-85 | 153 |
| 1985-86 | 236 |
| 1986-87[3] | 64 |

[1] Up to 30 September 1986.

[2] Up to 31 December 1986.

[3] Up to 31 December 1986.

Note: All these dwellings were built by private developers in partnership with the corporation and commission.

I understand that only one scheme of new town dwellings specifically for single people was built at Basildon. This is a 64-unit development for rent, first let in 1980.

Bromley (Office Development)

Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department was first informed of the withdrawal by the London borough of Bromley from the court proceedings in respect of the proposed office development at Bromley, South by Arlington Securities.

Mr. Tracey: Inquiries on 6 January 1987 revealed that the Treasury Solicitor had been informed, by the London borough of Bromley's letter dated 10 December 1986, of its intention to withdraw. The Treasury Solictor had not previously notified the Department because the challenge remains extant until a notice of discontinuance has been agreed by all the parties. The notice of discontinuance has not yet been received and the matter remains subjudice. I have written to my hon. Friend to explain the situation.

Nature Conservation

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reissue his Department's circular No. 108/77 on nature conservation and planning.

Homes Insulation Scheme

Dame Jill Knight asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the homes insulation scheme to cover draught-proofing as well as loft insulation for people on supplementary benefit.

Mr. John Patten: Future arrangements for help with the cost of materials for draught-proofing are being considered by the Government Departments concerned.

Homeless People

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many people have been accepted as homeless by each London borough council in 1978 and in each subsequent year;

(2) how many people accepted as homeless were housed in bed and breakfast, other temporary accommodation or in permanent accommodation, respectively, by each London borough council in 1978 and in each year since.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to the reply, 12 January 1986, c. 39]: Information about homeless acceptances and use of different forms of accommodation is contained in the Department's published quarterly statistics on homelessness and in annual HIP returns from local authorities; copies of these documents are in the Library. Further information on placings into temporary accommodation is contained in the CIPFA publication "Homelessness Statistics", also available in the Library.

Land Register

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many acres of land have been placed on the register of vacant and derelict public land since its inception in 1981; if he will show in tabular form the ownership and size of parcel of land removed from the register since 1981; what new sites have been added each year; and under whose ownership;

(2) if he will list the parcels of land which have moved (a) on and (b) off the register of vacant and derelict public land in each of the last five years, identifying how much has been removed by disposal in each year; and what percentage of such land belongs to (i) Government, (ii) local government, (iii) nationalised industries, (iv) statutory undertakers or (v) any other category;

(3) if he will list the land on which notices have been served as a result of its being on the register for vacant and derelict public land, and the time interval between service of notice under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1982 and the completion of the sale for each parcel of land on which notices were served;

(4) how many staff are currently employed in his Department to manage the register of vacant and derelict public land; and what is the annual cost in each of the last five years;

(5) if he will set out in tabular form the ownership and size of the parcels of public land which have been removed from the register of vacant and derelict public land since the first register was published in 1981, showing how much was realised in each sale and the owner;

(6) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to the Ministry of Defence; how much has been sold in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(7) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to (a) his Department, (b) regional health authorities or (c) district health authorities; how much has been sold in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(8) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to his Departmemt; how much has been sold in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(9) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to the Department of Transport; how much has been sold in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to require all public vacant land irrespective or size of potential future use to be included on the register of vacant and derelict public land.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans to widen generally the present criteria for entering unused and underused land owned by public bodies on the land registers. Nevertheless, my right hon. Friend is prepared to consider entering on the register individual parcels of such land, irrespective of size, drawn to his attention by members of the public.

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what price was obtained for each parcel of land which has now been sold and which was formerly on the register for vacant and derelict public land; who was the owner; and what percentage of the money realised for each sale was kept by the former owner.

Winfrith (Radiation Levels)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish figures of levels of radiation in an area covered by the monitoring stations surrounding Winfrith, Dorset.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are 16 monitoring stations around the SGHW reactor. Levels of radiation detected at these stations are equivalent to dose rates of 70 nano sieverts per hour, consistent with background levels. The only exception has been a detection of the Chernobyl cloud, when levels increased to about 100 nano sieverts per hour, returning to the normal level after about two weeks.

Gipsies

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of sites provided by each local authority in West Yorkshire for gipsy encampment, and the number they are required to provide.

Mr. Tracey: Yes. The number of sites provided by each local authority in West Yorkshire for gipsy encampments is: Bradford two sites (32 pitches); Leeds one site (16 pitches); Wakefield one site (22 pitches); Kirklees and Calderdale no sites. The law requires each metropolitan district to provide accommodation for up to 15 caravans.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mauritius (Students)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom scholarships for students from Mauritius.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Government have for some years offered scholarships to students from Mauritius. Thirty five undergraduates and 33 at other levels studied here during 1986 under such arrangements. Seventeen of these were financed under the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan and six under the new Overseas Development Administration Shared Scholarship Scheme.

In addition to the continuation of these two schemes and our in-service training scheme, a new arrangement requested by the Mauritian Government was agreed during the visit of the Mauritian Education Minister to Britain last week. Under this the top 16 school leavers from Mauritius in each of the next two years will study in Britain; the British Government will fund some in full and pay the tuition costs of the remainder.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help he is giving to underdeveloped countries to control HIV through their education programmes and blood transfusion screening to benefit their own nationals and United Kingdom visitors.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are giving substantial support to the World Health Organisation's global AIDS programme. The programme is helping developing countries to establish facilities to screen blood and blood products and improve their health education as part of their national AIDS control programmes.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maladministration (Ex Gratia Payments)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Attorney-General if he will make a statement describing the present arrangements for ex gratia payments by the courts to litigants who have suffered loss by maladministration within the court system.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor is prepared to consider claims for compensation where loss is sustained through any negligence of court officials in matters for which he is responsible.

The courts as such do not make such payments.

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Alton asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the 11 Royal Ulster Constabulary officers named in Mr. John Stalker's report, whom he recommended should be charged with conspiracy to pervert the course of justice.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Stalker's recommendations are confidential and I am not prepared to make any statement in relation to them. The investigation originally undertaken by Mr. John Stalker is being continued by Mr. Colin Sampson, but is not yet completed.

When the DPP(NI) receives the completed report he will consider the question of prosecutions. I have asked him to inform me fully with regard to the facts reported to him and to consult me before any directions are given.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Defence

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil defence shelters have been built by local authorities between 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980, and 1980 to 1985 (a) in Wales, (b) in South Wales, (c) in Cardiff, (d) in Scotland, and (e) in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no statutory requirement for such provision, and information is not kept centrally. So far as can be ascertained the answer is none.

Local authorities in Great Britain are required under the 1983 regulations to make plans for the use of buildings and other structures as public shelter. Progress is variable, and a pilot study is being undertaken in eight areas to test how best this might be achieved.

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider introducing legislation to provide for the local planning authorities to require that all new houses include a civil defence shelter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's plans for the protection of the population include the improvement by the public of the protection already afforded by their own homes, and the utilisation, by local authorities, of buildings and other structures for public shelter. These plans are kept under review, but there are no proposals for change at present.

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure that the standards of keeping and using animals for experimental purposes by pharmaceutical and other firms comply with the statutory requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which has replaced the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876, provides a new and more rigorous system of controls over the use of living animals for experimental and other scientific research. The controls are enforced by a professional Home Office inspectorate, the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. The inspectorate makes frequent visits to establishments, normally without notice, and keeps a close watch on the use of animals and on standards of care and accommodation. The Act provides for the issue of codes of practice as to the case of protected animals and their use for regulated procedures. A code is being prepared and will be ready later this year.

National Association of Victims Support Schemes

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what support he is giving to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: During the financial year 1986-87 the Home Office is providing a grant of £150,000 to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes, together with £136,000 to assist local schemes which are experiencing financial difficulties. In 1987-88, as well as renewing the grant to NAVSS, the Home Office intends to make £2 million available in further support for local schemes, as the first stage in a new programme of funding totalling £9 million over three years. The primary purpose of this funding is to support full-time salaried co-ordinators.

Drugs (Misuse)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet received the report of the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on the adequacy of current Misuse of Drugs Act controls; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Last year the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs was asked to examine the nature of any risk arising from the cultivation in the United Kingdom of opium poppies and to consider whether existing statutory controls are adequate to deal with it. We expect to receive the council's report very soon.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the operational requirement of the replacement police national computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We expect the Police National Computer Board to agree the operational requirement for the replacement police national computer later this year. I shall place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that records of access to the police national computer are kept according to the nine categories mentioned in the reply of 18 November, Official Report, columns 89-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I explained to the hon. Member in my answer of 18 November, at column 89, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has informed us that records of accesses to the police national computer by the Metropolitan police are kept in terms of the nine categories mentioned. As these records are kept in the form of a manual log at each terminal, they cannot be easily compiled for statistical purposes, but we are satisfied that they are adequate to identify the originator of any PNC inquiry and see no need for any change.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedures and criteria used in sanctioning the manpower levels of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The programme of manpower increases for the Metropolitan police which my right hon. Friend announced last May was based upon a review to assess the force's specific needs for additional manpower. This review sought to establish the proven needs for additional police officers and how the Commissioner would deploy them and with what objectives. It also assessed the extent to which these needs could be met by civilianisation and by the release of police officers as a result of the Commissioner's reorganisation of the force.

As a result it was decided that there should be increases of up to 1,200 in the police establishment and 600 in the civil staff ceiling, phased over four years. As the first step in this programme increases of 300 in the police establishment and 150 in the civil staff ceiling have been authorised for 1986-87. We have made it clear that before authorising further increases over the next three years we shall need to be satisfied that earlier increases have been effectively used in accordance with the agreed objectives, and that satisfactory progress has been made with civilianisation and the force reorganisation. Officials are keeping in close touch with the Metropolitan Police to monitor progress on these matters.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to local authorities on air filtration needed for district and county control centres to protect against chemical weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No guidance has been given. The Government are examining the requirement for, and methods of, protection against chemical agents.

Brewing and Licensed Trade

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet representatives of the brewing and licensed trade.

Mr. Waddington: At present my right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Identity Cards

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a departmental committee, or some other form of inquiry, to establish the advantages and disadvantages of introducing identity cards for the population of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The introduction of identity cards along the lines of those issued in some European countries has been considered from time to time, but we are not persuaded that a sufficiently strong case could be made out for their issue here.

Immigration

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for each of the last 24 months, how many visitors have been recorded in the Home Office computer; and what proportion of those who have reached their due date of departure have not yet departed.

Mr. Waddington: The recording of the entry of visitors on the Home Office computer is selective. Only a minority, those passengers who are subject to special conditions, are recorded on it when they enter. The number of visitors whose arrivals were so recorded for each of the last 24 months is as follows:

|---|---|---|
| | 1985 | 1986 |
| January | 17,900 | 17,700 |
| February | 16,400 | 17,300 |
| March | 21,600 | 23,100 |
| April | 24,000 | 24,000 |
| May | 27,600 | 28,200 |
| June | 34,700 | 34,000 |
| July | 46,100 | 46,200 |
| August | 40,100 | 39,200 |
| September | 31,800 | 31,200 |
| October | 25,400 | 23,000 |
| November | 22,300 | 18,000 |
| December | 24,900 | 20,400 |

It is not possible to produce from the computer a complete record of all departures, but none the less it remains a valuable aid to enforcement of the control.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce visas for visitors coming from Nigeria.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I shall tomorrow lay before Parliament a statement of change in the immigration rules which provides that citizens of Nigeria arriving at a United Kingdom port on or after 1 February 1987 will require visas to enter the United Kingdom unless they are settled here and returning after an absence of less than two years, or they are returning during the period of a limited leave which has been granted for a long-term purpose such as work or study.

Television Licences

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received recently over free or concessionary television licence fees for pensioner households.

Mr. Mellor: Since 16 July 1986, when my hon. Friend the Member for Pudsey (Mr. Shaw) replied to a similar question from the hon. Member at column 508, 101 hon. Members and 198 members of the public have written, and two petitions have been received, about concessionary licences for retirement pensioners.

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of his intentions regarding the High Court decision on 23 January involving concessionary television licences for pensioners who are visited by housing stewards.

Police Widows

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Police Federation and other organisations representing police officers regarding the preserved rate pension for police widows whose former husbands retired before 1956.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received about 180 letters in recent weeks expressing disappointment with his decision not to implement an increase recommended by the Police Negotiating Board. As I indicated in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 19 December, at column 732, my right hon. Friend shared the regret of these correspondents that he was unable to implement the recommendation. To do so would have been a breach of the long-standing principle that entitlement under public service schemes should not be improved retrospectively, and might have had very costly repercussions in other schemes.

Wapping (Disturbances)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press and public relations officers were involved in the preparation and mounting of the Metropolitan police's press conference following the incidents outside the News International plant on 24 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the press conference on the afternoon of Sunday 25 January was organised by the area press and publicity officer alone.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of demonstrators injured outside the News International plant in Wapping on 24 January; and how many received hospital treatment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the police are aware of 40 members of the public being injured, of whom 29 attended hospital. There will have been others whose injuries did not come to police attention.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to who authorised the spraying of indelible dye on demonstrators outside the News International plant in Wapping on 24 January; and how many people stained with dye were subsequently arrested;

(2) what is his policy on the spraying of dye by the Metropolitan police; what guidelines exist covering its use; on how many occasions dye spraying has been used in the past 12 months; where it was used; and how many people stained wih dye were subsequently arrested.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that dye is not sprayed by his force in situations of disorder and never has been. I understand that a tin of red paint was thrown by a demonstrator at Wapping on 24 January.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to who was the officer in direct overall charge of police operations outside the News International plant in Wapping on 24 January; and where the officer in charge was between 7 pm and 9 pm on that evening.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that between 7 pm and 9 pm on 24 January, Deputy Assistant Commissioner Jones, the officer in charge of police operations at Wapping, spent some time in the control room at Leman Street police station and some time at various locations in the vicinity of Virginia Street.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many police officers were present in Wapping in connection with the News International dispute on 24 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 1,018 officers were deployed.

Government Data Network

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the statement of service requirement for the provision of computers for the Government data network.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I am placing a copy of the service requirement in the Library of the House. This is the version being distributed within Government. It is identical to that sent to the potential contractors, save that it does not contain the detailed information on traffic volumes and locations contained in the technical annexes. This information is commercially confidential and is being restricted on a need-to-know basis to minimise any risk to the security of applications planned to run on the network.

TRANSPORT

EC (Shipping Arrangement)

62. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals the Government have to harmonise shipping arrangements with the European Economic Community.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the European Commission to produce such proposals. The final Transport Council of the United Kingdom presidency last month, on which I reported in my reply to the hon. Member for Harwich (Sir J. Ridsdale) on 17 December, welcomed the Commission's programme to this end and invited it to submit appropriate proposals as rapidly as possible.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what efforts he is making to bring about the imposition of higher financial penalties for offences of evasion of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The sentences imposed in individual cases are a matter for the courts. We have made known to the Magistrates Association and other court representatives our concern about the generally low level of penalties imposed for VED offences, and are currently considering what further measures might be taken.

Estuarial Crossings

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) in relation to (i) the Severn bridge, (ii) the Humber bridge and (iii) the Avon bridge what was (a) the length of time between the final grant of planning permission and opening of the bridge, (b) his Department's estimate at the time of the final grant of planning permission, of the date of opening, (c) the actual cost of construction, including all associated costs, (d) the actual cost of construction converted into constant prices at a convenient date close to the final grant of planning permission and (e) the cost of construction estimated by his Department at the time of the final grant of planning permission;

(2) if his Department has prepared an analysis of the difference in construction time (a) of the Humber bridge (b) the Severn bridge and (c) the Avon bridge between that estimated at the time of the final grant of planning permission and outcome;

(3) if his Department has prepared an analysis of the difference in cost (a) of the Humber bridge, (b) the Severn bridge and (c) the Avon bridge between that estimated at the time of the final grant of planning permission, and outcome.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not all the information is readily available. The Department has not prepared analyses in the form requested. The procedures and powers used for authorisation of construction were not the same in all cases. The information that we have is as follows:

(a) Humber Bridge
Constructed under Humber Bridge Act 1972.
1972 estimate of cost of overall project, at then current prices, was £28 million.
Actual cost of construction approximately £97 million (including approach roads), £80 million approximately for the bridge itself.
Construction commenced 1973, bridge opened 1981 (three and a half years later than estimated).

(b) Severn Bridge
Contract for construction of foundations and approach viaducts awarded 1961 and for the superstructure 1962.
Bridge opened 1966.
Estimated cost about £11 million.
Actual cost £9·8 million.

(c) Avonmouth Bridge
Estimated construction time three years from 1969.
Opening date May 1974 (that is two years overrun).
Tender price £4·2 million.
Actual construction costs £10 million.

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport which noxious liquid substances Her Majesty's Government intend to provide reception facilities for, on implementation of MARPOL (international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships), Annex II, on 6 April.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Reception facilities will be required on the entry into force on 6 April 1987 of annex II of the MARPOL convention. The requirement for these facilities is restricted to those chemical cargoes designated in the convention as being of category A and a restricted range of cargoes categories B and C which have high viscosity or low melting points.

The Government policy for complying with these requirements are set out in the Merchant Shipping Prevention of Policy (Reception Facilities) Order 1984. This order imposes the duty to provide these reception facilities upon harbours and terminals at which these substances are unloaded.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what day in April he intends to introduce the requirement to ensure provision of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports for residues and mixtures of noxious liquid substances first proposed within the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Merchant Shipping, Prevention of Pollution (Reception Facilities) Order 1984 contains the requirement to ensure the provision of reception facilities, in relevant harbours or terminals for residues and mixtures for noxious liquid substances. It is the intention that this requirement will take effect from the 6 April 1987.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport at what day in July 1984 the requirement was introduced to ensure provision of reception facilities in United Kingdom ports for oily waste proposed within the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The requirement to provide reception facilities for oily waste from ships in United Kingdom ports, the Prevention of Pollution (Reception Facilities) Order 1984, came into operation on 25 July 1984. That order gave effect to the relevant provisions of annex I of the international convention and the protocol to that convention, known as MARPOL 73/78.

Radioactive Material (Sea Transport)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what research projects his Department has sponsored in the last three years to ensure that the marine transportation of radioactive substances and wastes is carried out in a safe way.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has sponsored a project, which is currently being undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board. This is designed to provide information on radiation doses to crew and passengers, and to review the segregation provisions for radioactive materials transported by sea. The report is expected shortly.

In addition, the Transport Committee on the Safe Transport of Radioactive Materials (ACTRAM), in response to a recommendation from the Environment Select Committee, is currently considering whether changes in practice are needed to ensure the greater control and safety of the transport of radioactive materials through the English channel.

Drunken or Reckless Driving

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the compulsory re-testing of all drivers convicted of drunken or reckless driving.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The possible wider application of retraining programme and driving tests for a range of traffic offences, including drinking and driving and reckless driving, is being considered by the Road Traffic

Law Review, under the independent chairmanship of Dr. Peter North. The review's report is expected within the next few months.

British Airways

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will instruct the British Airways share opportunity office to send full information, including a prospectus, to every member of the British forces posted overseas who requests it.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No problem will arise if they are able to provide a United Kingdom address, but I have no assurance that distribution of such material would be permissible within the relevant foreign legal jurisdictions, and cannot therefore permit distribution there.

Road Schemes

Sir Richard Body asked the Secretary of State for Transport in what circumstances he decides to make a compulsory purchase order in respect of land needed for a road scheme without first negotiating for its purchase with its owner at an agreed price.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This depends on the particular circumstances of cases. We are always willing to negotiate for the purchase of land required for road schemes. Frequently it is found expedient to make a draft compulsory purchase order at an early stage so as to expedite the processing of schemes. This does not in any way prejudice a negotiated settlement. In most cases the land is acquired by agreement. Terms of compensation, on which there is a right of appeal to the Lands Tribunal, are not affected.

Aircraft (Safety)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which civil aircraft have wind-shear warning and safety devices fitted as standard and as to the dates when such safety devices were fitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority has informed me that wind-shear warning and safety devices have only lately become available on the market and that the authority has not yet been asked to approve them for use on UK-registered aircraft. There are therefore no aircraft on the UK-register fitted with these devices.

Speed Limits

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport how frequently his Department agrees to the introduction of speed limits on principal roads in advance of any personal injuries arising from traffic accidents; and what is his policy towards introducing such limits to prevent accidents taking place.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Orders to impose or amend speed limits on principal roads in England require the consent of the Secretary of State for Transport. Each case is judged against the general criteria and considerations set out in the Department's circulars to local authorities numbered Roads 1/80 and Roads 4/83 issued in February 1980 and August 1983 respectively.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what are the specific factors which have led him to reject the application from Leicestershire county council and Essendine parish council for a 40 mph speed limit on the A6121 road in Essendine; and in what ways the application fails to meet departmental criteria.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Accident records and speed readings give measured criteria used in determining right speed limits. At Essendine the measured speeds were just within the recommended criterion for a 40 mph speed limit. Since 1 January 1983 there have been no recorded injury accidents. The accident criterion of more than two all-injury accidents per million vehicle miles was not met.

The Department advised Leicestershire county council against proceeding with a formal application for a 40 mph limit. Imposing a lower speed limit does not necessarily make drivers go more slowly.

It is essential that uniform criteria are applied in all cases to ensure that speed limits command the respect of motorists nationwide.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list the occasions since 1979 when his Department has been approached by Essendine parish council or by Leicestershire county council acting on its behalf, requesting a 40 miles per hour speed limit on the A6121 road in Essendine in the Rutland district of Leicestershire; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department was approached by Leicestershire county council twice—in January 1981 and January 1986. In each case we advised against proceeding with a 40 mph limit.

Essendine parish council approached the Department directly in July 1981 asking for reconsideration of the earlier advice. The Department confirmed our willingness to reconsider if the situation changed and if a fresh request came from the highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the number of requests which his Department has accepted in 1986 for speed limits to be introduced on principal roads running through villages where no limit had existed before; and how many requests were refused.

A52 Bypass

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to announce his decision on the public inquiry into the A52 bypass around Bottesford, Leicestershire; and for how long the report of the inspector has been in his possession.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As I said when I wrote on 7 January, I will announce the decision as soon as possible. We received the inspector's report in July 1986.

Railway Electrification

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of railway track will be electrified when all schemes so far approved are completed.

Mr. David Mitchell: Once the present schemes have been completed, British Rail will have a total of 7,894 electrified track miles, representing some 32 per cent. of the total network. These figures include track for sidings; excluding sidings there will be 7,049 electrified track miles, representing 36 per cent. of the total network.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he was informed during the severe January weather of the state of the roads leading to nuclear power stations in England and Wales; if his Department will now conduct a review of evacuation arrangements in the event of a nuclear accident; and if he will make a statement on the condition of the roads leading to Bradwell nuclear power station during the severe weather.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During bad winter weather the Department receives regular reports on the state of the motorways and trunk roads in England. We are not specifically informed as a matter of course about the state of local roads leading to nuclear power stations. These are the responsibility of the local highway authorities. I understand from Essex county council that emergency access to Bradwell power station was maintained, except when severe drifting of snow caused blockages during the 36 hour period from about 8 pm on 14 January.

Questions on emergency planning at nuclear sites are primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. I would draw attention to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 December 1986 at columns 612-13, on the review of contingency plans following a nuclear accident.

ENERGY

Flotta Piper Pipeline

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how much oil was spilt from the Flotta Piper pipeline on 26 and 27 November 1986 and as to the cause.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The quantity of oil spilt from the Piper-Claymore-Flotta pipelines on the 26 and 27 November 1986 was 20,000 barrels. (ca 2,660 tonnes).

Spillage was caused by a crack in a welded branch connection where the Claymore pipeline joins the Piper-Flotta pipeline. No oil reached shore and the slick was dispersed by the North sea.

North Sea Personnel

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many non-European Economic Community personnel were employed offshore in the United Kingdom sector of the North sea during the last full year foı which figures are available.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The latest figures available are from the Inland Revenue's annual survey of the offshore work force, taken on 30 September 1985. On that day the total number offshore was 15,248, of whom 1,065 were non-European Economic Community personnel. The survey covers construction workers and personnel on fixed installations, mobile drilling rigs, service vessels and support barges. In reporting their survey, the Inland Revenue's practice is to multiply the total counted by 1·9 to allow for shift working and seasonal variations.

Electricity

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the total import of electricity in megawatts from Scotland by the Central Electricity Generating Board in each day of January to the nearest available date; and what was the cost;

(2) how many megawatts of electricity were imported from France in each day of January to the nearest available date; and what was the cost.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall ask the Central Electricity Generating Board to reply to the hon. Member.

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what was the highest total megawattage generated in January from indigenous power stations; and what was the margin of share capacity in each day of January;

(2) how many power stations were out of commission on any dates between 11 January and 18 January, if he will name them; and what is their capacity in megawatts;

(3) how many power stations are at present out of commission; and if he will name them.

Mr. Goodlad: The operation of the integrated power generation and transmission system in England and Wales is the responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have accordingly asked the board chairman to write to the hon. Member. Ministerial responsibility for the Scottish electricity boards and Northern Ireland Electricity rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

North Sea Rigs

Mr. Eadie asked the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the practice of leaving functioning North sea oil rigs unmanned overnight or for longer periods; what assessment has been made of the safety implications of allowing the first helicopter when the rig is reoccupied to land without the benefit of a helicopter landing officer or standby fire fighting cover; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: Unmanned platforms, of which there have been a number in the North sea from the beginning of the production phase in 1968, are designed to operate in that way and safety is taken into account during design. Both equipment and working procedures are considered for each individual platform in accordance with its functions. Such platforms are constantly monitored by telemetry from a nearby installation or from onshore. Those responsible for this monitoring are in communication with any aircraft landing or taking off.

The persons who are first off the helicopter, and last on for the return journey, are trained for this work and will provide the helideck control of the landing officer and will man the fire-fighting equipment.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, for each civil reactor in Britain and Wales, the megawattage supplied by the reactor to the national grid between 1 January and 16 January; and if he will place beside it the megawattage they were first designed to supply.

Mr. Goodlad: The operation of the integrated power generation and transmission system in England and Wales is the responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the board to write to the hon. Member. Ministerial responsibility for the Scottish electricity boards rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Civil Nuclear Power

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds West (Mr. Meadowcroft), Official Report, 19 November 1986, column 233, if he will set out the nature of the sensitivity of information to which he refers; and what are the aspects of the national interest that any revelations of information on the civil nuclear programme are likely to damage.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c. 80]: It is well known that the civil and military nuclear power programmes had common origins. The records in question contain sensitive information concerned with national security, the disclosure of which would be contrary to the public interest.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether there have been any delays in the dispatch of spent nuclear fuel from nuclear plants in the current year due to snow and ice on the rail network.

Mr. Goodlad [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987, c. 653]: I am informed by the CEGB that one flask has been delayed in dispatch from Dungeness and one from Bradwell.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information he possesses on unemployment in Dundee and Tayside by social class.

Mr. Lang: Information by social class is not available, but an analysis by socio-economic group of the usually resident population of Dundee city and Tayside who were economically active but not in employment is given in table 46 of "Census 1981 Scotland: Report for Tayside Region, Volume 2", which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current unemployment rate in the Aberdeen travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: On 11 December 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the unemployment rate in the Aberdeen travel-to-work area was 8·9 per cent.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the net change in the number of people unemployed to date in Greenock and Port Glasgow by district council ward since the present system of unemployment counting came into operation.

Mr. Lang: The change in the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency between 6 March 1986 (the date the current method of compiling the unemployment statistics came into operation) and 11 December 1986 (the latest date for which information is available) was as shown in the table.

Greenock and Port Glasgow Parliamentary Constituency

| Ward Name | Change | Percentage Change |
|---|---|---|
| Bellville | −46 | −8·14 |
| Blairmore | −60 | −12·12 |
| Bow | −46 | −7·38 |
| Broomhill | −18 | −5·17 |
| Clune Brae | 2 | 0·31 |
| Gateside | 5 | 1·50 |
| Gibshill | −92 | −10·09 |
| Greenock East Central | −10 | −1·42 |
| Greenock South | −10 | −1·83 |
| Greenock West Central | 8 | 2·38 |
| Greenock West End | 52 | 26·67 |
| Larkfield | −2 | −0·35 |
| Port Glasgow East | −13 | −1·56 |
| Port Glasgow South | −13 | −2·01 |
| Port Glasgow West | 29 | 7·69 |
| Upper Larkfield | −66 | −8·67 |
| Totals | −280 | −3·15 |

This information is available in the Library.

Students

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total public expenditure on student financial support in Scotland in 1982-83; and what was the figure in 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay: Responsibility for financial support for students who are Scottish residents is divided among the Scottish Education Department, education authorities, research councils and other Government Departments. Information is available only for the students allowances scheme, administered by the Scottish Education Department and for education authority bursaries paid by regional councils, as follows:

Maintenance, and so on allowances and fees paid to or on behalf of Scottish students

|  | Session 1982-83 £ million | Session 1985-86[1] £ million |
|---|---|---|
| Students' Allowances paid by Scottish Education Department | 99·10 | 99·30 |
| Education Authority Bursaries | 19·91 | 28·37 |
|  | 119·01 | 127·67 |

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students studying for the higher national certificate are eligible for bursaries rather than grants but are not eligible for child benefit.

Mr. John MacKay: In session 1985-86, about 1,570 Scottish students were undertaking full-time courses leading to higher national certificates at Scottish educational establishments; some 1,200 of these students received assistance from local authorities. I have no information about how many of these students were eligible for child benefit.

Babies (Congenital Malformations)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to monitor the proportion of congenital malformations among babies born to women living in those parts of Scotland which were subject to rises in radiation levels following the nuclear accident at Chernobyl; and what plans he has to publish the information.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 23 January 1987]: The information services division of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service already maintains information about certain congenital malformations occurring in babies born to women in Scotland. Any significant variation in the number of specific malformations occurring should be identifiable. It is not likely to be possible to determine which individual cases might be associated with increases in radiation levels arising as a result of the Chernobyl incident.

Prison Officers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now make it his policy that, before prison officers are accepted for service in Scottish prisons, they should be in possession of a professional qualification equivalent to a higher national certificate in prison studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: There is at present no higher national certificate in prison studies or any equivalent qualification in Scotland. Consideration is currently being given to the possibility of introducing such a certificate in the Scottish prison service, but this would be for serving personnel, to enhance their career prospects. To make possession of such a certificate a prerequisite for entry to the prison officer grade would debar otherwise well qualified and motivated candidates from pursuing a career in the prison service.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pilkington plc

12. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received calling for the proposed takeover of Pilkingtons to be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Channon: I received a number of representations to that effect. Hon. Members will know that BTR has abandoned its bid. The matter has therefore been determined speedily and effectively by the market.

Northern Region

13. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further proposals he has to attract industry to the northern region.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government's economic policies are promoting jobs and wealth creation nationally, and our regional industrial policy measures positively encourage investment and employment in the assisted areas, including much of the North East region. In addition, creation of UDCs in Tyne and Wear and Teesside will encourage industrial development.

Manufacturing Output

14. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest manufacturing output figures.

22. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest manufacturing output figures.

Mr. Butcher: The latest figures on manufacturing output are very encouraging and the prospects are good. In the three months to November output was 1½ per cent. higher than in the previous three months, 14 per cent. above the trough in 1981 and well on course to meet the Industry Act forecast of 4 per cent. growth in 1987.

34. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of the total output of United Kingdom industry in 1986; what was the comparable figure in real terms in 1982; and what was the percentage difference.

Mr. Butcher: Manufacturing output in the first 11 months of 1986 was 104·1, based on 1980 equal to 100; this compares with 94·2 in 1982, an increase of more than 10 per cent.

Japan (Balance of Trade)

15. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current balance of trade between the United Kingdom and Japan.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1986 the United Kingdom had a visible trade deficit of £3,757 million with Japan.

European Regional Development Fund

16. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those applications, together with the financial amounts involved, that have been made under article 15 of the European regional development fund main regulation and which have been delayed pending a Government decision; and if he will make a statement.

Intended applications by United Kingdom public bodies wholly or mainly under article 15 of the main European Regional Development Fund Regulation (Council Regulation (EEC) No. 1787/84), at present lodged with Government Departments

| Applicant | ERDF (Article 15) aid sought £000 |
|---|---|
| 1 Birmingham City Council | 527·00 |
| 2 Cornwall County Council | 641·25 |
| 3 Cornwall County Council | 298·50 |
| 4 Coventry County Council | 180·00 |
| 5 Sheffield City Council | 3,629·00 |
| 6 Tyne and Wear County Council | 340·00 |
| 7 South Glamorgan County Council | 120·50 |
| 8 Brecknock Borough Council | 35·00 |
| 9 Gwent County Council | 34·50 |
| 10 Gwynedd County Council | 54·00 |
| 11 Gwynedd County Council | 60·00 |
| 12 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 18·30 |
| 13 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 49·30 |
| 14 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 18·60 |

| Applicant | ERDF (Article 15) aid sought £000 |
|---|---|
| 15 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 17·50 |
| 16 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 136·00 |
| 17 Mid Glamorgan County Council | 19·80 |
| 18 Dyfed County Council | 28·90 |
| 19 Dyfed County Council | 65·80 |
| Total | 62,373·95 |

This list does not include applications which are not in an advanced form.

I hope that we shall be able to reach a conclusion on this problem soon.

Power Plant Industry

17. Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on the maintenance of a domestic workload for the United Kingdom power plant industry; and what measures he has taken towards its implementation.

Mr. Butcher: The domestic workload of the power plant industry is substantially dependent on the ordering programme of the electricity boards, which is not within the control of the Department of Trade and Industry; there are therefore no measures directly available to my Department to maintain this workload.

Gin Exports

18. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the impact of a 200 per cent. tariff increase on gin exports to the United States of America on the British gin industry.

56. Mr. Sumberg asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the impact a 200 per cent. tariff increase on gin exports to the United States of America would have on the British gin industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government estimate that a 200 per cent. tariff would have the effect of largely eliminating sales on the United States market of British-bottled gin.

19. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with United States authorities concerning their proposals to impose a 200 per cent. increase on duty on gin from this country.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government take every opportunity to tell the United States Administration how seriously we are seeking a negotiated solution and how important we believe it to be to avoid counter-productive and mutually damaging conflict affecting trade in gin and other goods.

53. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has made to the United States Government concerning their proposed 200 per cent. tariff increase on gin imports.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have taken and will continue to take every opportunity to tell the United States Administration how seriously we are seeking a negotiated solution and how important we believe it to be to avoid counter-productive and mutually damaging conflict affecting trade in gin and other goods.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will raise the United States Government's announcement of a 200 per cent. tariff increase on British gin exports under the terms of the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Community is negotiating with the United States under the terms of GATT about appropriate compensation for the trade consequences of accession of Spain and Portugal. The proposal by the United States Administration to impose prohibitive duties which would affect $400 million worth of Community exports including British gin is excessive and would oblige the Community to take counter-measures against certain United States exports. We fully support the Council's determination to secure a negotiated settlement to this dispute.

United States (Defence Appropriations Policy)

20. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to challenge the Mattingly amendment which incorporates buy America provisions into United States defence appropriations policy.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Commission has made formal representations to the United States Administration, stressing that this measure breaches United States obligations under the GATT Government procurement code and reserving the Community's rights to consultations under the code. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry also made clear our concern when he met the United States trade representative last month.

British Leyland Trucks

21. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding the future of British Leyland Trucks.

44. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the latest position over negotiations for the future of Leyland Trucks Ltd.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend's statement on 2 December 1986. Commercial discussions are continuing with both Paccar and DAF.

Share Dealings

23. Mr. O'Brien asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress on current investigations into share dealings in the City.

48. Mr. George Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress into current investigations into share dealing in the City.

Mr. Howard: All the investigations are being pursued as rapidly as possible, but I cannot estimate how soon they will be completed. It would not be desirable to report on the progress of investigations before they are completed.

The inspectors appointed to investigate certain dealings by Mr. Geoffrey Collier have submitted their report to my right hon. Friend and a summons has been served on Mr.

Collier. As announced on 7 January, Mr. Brooke and Mr. Kennedy have been asked, in the light of the report, to investigate other possible contraventions.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

24. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to expedite decisions from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in cases where companies have been the subject of hostile takeover bids.

Mr. Howard: Collecting and evaluating the evidence is a complex process and it is important that the Commission has sufficient time to do justice to all aspects of a case. I am encouraged, however, to see that the MMC has recently succeeded in shortening the time taken for some of its investigations. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also considers whether there are circumstances in which the Commission might be asked to report in a shorter period. In the case of the Gulf Resources-IC Gas reference, the Commission was asked to report within five months.

36. Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to complete his review of the method of referring matters to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Channon: My Department is still receiving evidence and it will be some time before the review is completed.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has decided to refer the manufacture of upper and lower limb prostheses in the United Kingdom to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Under the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Director General of Fair Trading is empowered to make monopoly references to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

If the hon. Gentleman has any evidence of behaviour which might justify investigation by the competition authorities, he may wish to furnish it to the Director General.

Competition Policy

25. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to conclude his review of competition policy; and if he will make a statement.

43. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to publish the review of competition policy.

Mr. Channon: My Department is still receiving evidence and it will be some time before the review is completed.

Manufacturing Trade

26. Mr. Terry Lewis asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will indicate the nature and size of the current deficit in the balance of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactures was in deficit by £5·9 billion for 1986.

32. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate of the deficit for 1987 in the balance of manufacturing trade.

50. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his current estimate of the deficit for 1987 on the balance of manufactured trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement estimates that the deficit for 1987 in the balance of trade in manufactures will be £7½ billion.

Guinness plc

27. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of the current situation concerning his Department's inspectors' investigation of Guinness plc.

Mr. Howard: The inspectors are getting on with their task as quickly as possible. It would not be in the public interest to give details of their inquiries.

Multi-fibre Arrangement

28. Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will monitor the imports of textiles and clothing into the United Kingdom under the recent multi-fibre arrangement.

35. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements he has made to monitor imports of textiles into the United Kingdom since agreement was reached on the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The MFA bilateral agreements provide for import quotas for sensitive products which are administered by the issue of import licences against valid export certificates issued by the authorities of the country of origin. Import levels for those textile and clothing products not under restraint are regularly monitored through customs import statistics and action in accordance with the arrangement taken where appropriate.

Import Substitution

29. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the pace of development in encouraging import substitution and entry by foreign manufacturers into the United Kingdom economy.

Mr. Alan Clark: The bulk of imported goods procurement is in the hands of the private sector. Our objective is to bring home to retailers and other businesses the advantages of well designed, well made and competitively priced British goods. My Department also operates a number of support schemes designed to help put United Kingdom manufacturers in a position in which they can compete more effectively in the home market as well as overseas.

The available statistics on net capital expenditure in the United Kingdom by foreign companies up until 1983 show no consistent trend. However, the Invest in Britain Bureau within my Department reported three record years from 1983 to 1985 in attracting inward investment into the United Kingdom. During that period, the IBB estimates that more than 280 investment decisions to establish new manufacturing plant were made by foreign-owned companies and many more decided to expand their existing facilities in Britain.

EC (Eighth Directive)

30. Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received in response to his Department's consultative document on the European Economic Community eighth directive; whether he will publish these responses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: To date, my Department has received 68 responses to the consultative document and more are expected before the closing date for comments on 31 January. It is not my Department's practice to publish responses to consultative documents of this kind and I do not propose to do so in this case.

Northumberland

31. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received from local authorities in Northumberland about assisted area status.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Since the beginning of this Session I have received representations on the Alnwick and Amble and Morpeth and Ashington travel-to-work areas from Northumberland county council. The council wrote with the support of five other local authorities. I have also received a submission on the Alnwick and Amble TTWA from Alnwick town council.

British Sugar Corporation

33. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in considering the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission with regard to the British Sugar Corporation, he will make it his policy to consider the implications of any decision for Third world sugar producers.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has discretion to take action following a merger report only if the commission finds that a proposed merger might be expected to operate against the public interest. Until the commission's report is published, I cannot comment on the outcome of the report.

Inward Investment

38. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action his Department is taking to encourage inward investment into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Invest in Britain Bureau in my Department has a promotional budget of £1·142 million for the purpose of encouraging inward investment into all parts of the United Kingdom. This budget is used for a programme of seminars and promotional work backed by advertising and printed publications and for carrying out research into the attitudes and needs of potential investors. In addition, a sum of £2·2 million is available for grant-in-aid to the five English regional development organisations, which carry out programmes of inward investment promotion on behalf of the north east, north west, Yorkshire and Humberside, west midlands and Devon and Cornwall. These programmes, together with those of bodies in other parts of the United Kingdom, have kept this country in the forefront of inward investment. Despite fierce competition, the United Kingdom remains the preferred location for inward investment into Europe.

Rural Postal Deliveries

39. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will discuss the question of rural postal deliveries.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State meets the chairman of the Post Office from time to time to discuss matters of current interest. I am not aware of any developments affecting rural postal deliveries generally which need to be raised with him.

United States Special Trade Representatives

40. Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next proposes to meet the United States special trade representatives.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend plans to visit the United States and to meet his counterparts within the next few months.

Research and Development (Funding)

41. Mr. Eastham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the National Economic Development Council to discuss research and development funding.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to attend the next meeting of NEDC on 4 February 1987. The council has from time to time discussed R and D funding and I anticipate that it will be discussed at future meetings since R and D is an issue which is of great importance to improving the United Kingdom's industrial performance.

59. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the current situation as regards research and development funding from his Department.

Mr. Butcher: My Department expects to spend £383 million on support for research and development in 1986-87 and plans to spend £412 million, £436 million and £445 million in the three succeeding years.

Austin Rover

42. Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about the future of the Austin Rover motor company.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Austin Rover is part of the Rover group, whose corporate plan was received by the Government on 22 December 1986. The plan is now being considered. Once that process of consideration is complete, my right hon. Friend will announce the Government's response. Until then it would be inappropriate to comment on any aspect of the plan's content.

Extraterritoriality

45. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any progress was made towards a common European position on extraterritoriality during the recent period of United Kingdom presidency.

Mr. Alan Clark: The European Community has made clear its objections to attempts by the United States to extend its laws and regulations extraterritorially. During the United Kingdom presidency, the opportunity was taken to reiterate this position in Community representations on fresh United States export control proposals.

British Steel

46. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meeet the chairman of British Steel to discuss the future prospects of the industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman frequently to discuss future prospects.

Imported Goods (Safety)

47. Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value in 1986 of goods imported which come within the scope of the Consumer Safety (Amendment) Act 1986; and if he is in a position to make any estimate for 1987.

Mr. Howard: The scope of the Consumer Safety (Amendment) Act 1986 is restricted to products covered by consumer safety legislation—namely, toys, cosmetics, certain textiles, domestic electrical appliances, and miscellaneous other goods. It would not be possible accurately to discover the total value of goods in these categories imported during 1986 or likely to be imported during 1987. But the provisions in the Act will, if the proposal for a general safety requirement in the Consumer Protection Bill currently before Parliament is enacted, apply to all consumer goods supplied in the United Kingdom with the exception of food and drink, controlled medicines, road vehicles and tobacco. The value of such consumer goods imported annually into this country is approximately £28 billion.

Airbus Programme

49. Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make a decision about Government involvement in the A330 and A340 Airbus programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The Government are at present aiming to reach a decision on British Aerospace's application for launch aid in respect of the proposed Airbus A330 and A340 programme by the end of the first quarter of this year.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the number of jobs currently arising out of the existing Airbus industry projects as related to the United Kingdom and specifically in British Aerospace; and if he proposes to give launch aid to the new Airbus A330/A340 projects.

Mr. Pattie: On the information presently available, it is estimated that the number of jobs in the United Kingdom currently attributable to the existing Airbus Industrie programmes is in the region of 8-9000 of which British Aerospace accounts for some 4,500. British Aerospace's application for A330/A340 launch aid is being carefully considered and the Government are at present aiming to reach a decision by the end of the first quarter of this year.

Japan (Scotch Whisky Exports)

51. Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last discussed with the Japanese Government the question of exports of Scotch whisky to that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry made strong representations to the Japanese Government against their discriminatory treatment of imported alcoholic drinks when he visited Tokyo in November. The proposed reforms announced by Japan in December failed to satisfy Community concerns and action under the GATT continues.

Manufacturing Industry

54. Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next intends to meet the Trades Union Congress to discuss investment in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I meet the TUC regularly at the National Economic Development Council, where matters relevant to improving industrial performance are discussed. I have no plans for a separate meeting on the subject of investment in manufacturing industry.

58. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the comparable figure for the same month seven years ago.

Mr. Butcher: The hon. Member will appreciate that monthly data can be erratic. However, since the trough of the recession in 1981, manufacturing output has increased by 14 per cent. to reach a level of 105·7 in November 1986, based on 1980 equal to 100. This was some 4 per cent. lower than the level of output in November 1979.

United States (Import Taxes)

55. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of the decision by the United States Government to impose import taxes on selected products emanating from the European Economic Community with effect from 30 January.

Mr. Alan Clark: The measures announced by the United States Administration are intended to reduce Community exports to the United States by $400 million. Of the products selected, the additional duty on gin is likely to have highly damaging consequences on United Kingdom manufacturers.

Vehicle Exports

57. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total number of United Kingdom produced vehicles exported to the United States market in 1986; what was their value; and what is his estimate for 1987.

Mr. Butcher: Figures are available for the 11 months to November 1986. For that period it is estimated that the United Kingdom exported 25,700 vehicles to the United States of America valued at £495 millions. Estimates of the proportion of these produced in the United Kingdom are not available. Vehicles have been defined as standard international trade classification revision 2 sub-groups 781.0, 782.1, 782.2, 783.1 and 783.2. No projections of exports for 1987 are available.

English Industrial Estates

60. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review his policy with regard to English Industrial Estates to enable it to become more involved in urban regeneration in inner city areas including inner London, as well as in regional assisted areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I am not contemplating any major change in English Industrial Estates role on behalf of my Department in the foreseeable future. I expect it to continue to operate principally as an instrument of our regional industrial policy (which concentrates on providing support for industry in the assisted areas). These areas, of course, include a number of inner city areas.

Hearing Aid Council

61. Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report his appointment to the Hearing Aid Council of the four persons replacing those due to retire in December 1986.

Dr. D. N. Brooks
Mr. A. J. Douglas
Mr. D. P. Ormerod
Miss A. Spokes

Textile Imports

Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the tonnages of imports of synthetic filament fabric from (a) Korea and (b) Taiwan up to the latest available date in 1986 compared with the respective quotas relating to that category for the full year for each country.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Details are given in the following table:

| | Tonnes '000s |
|---|---|
| South Korea | |
| 1986 United Kingdom quota for goods imported direct from South Korea | 1,421 |
| Quota adjusted by use of flexibility provisions in the EC-South Korea agreement | 1,520 |
| United Kingdom imports direct from South Korea, January to November 1986 | 1,480 |
| United Kingdom import licences issued against 1986 quota, January to December 1986 | 1,403 |
| United Kingdom imports from South Korea on free circulation via other EC countries, January to November 1986, not counted against United Kingdom quota | 449 |
| Taiwan | |
| 1986 United Kingdom quota for goods imported direct from Taiwan | 362 |
| Quota adjusted by use of flexibility provisions | 382 |
| United Kingdom imports direct from Taiwan, January to November 1986 | 512 |
| United Kingdom import licences issued against 1986 quota, January to December 1986 | 344 |
| United Kingdom imports from Taiwan on free circulation via other EC countries, January to November 1986, not counted against the United Kingdom quota | 2,147 |

Note:

1. The quotas relate to goods exported from the supplying country in the year in question, provided they arrive in the United Kingdom before the end of the following March. Import figures for a calendar year therefore include products covered by the previous year's quota.
2. Import figures exclude imports for re-export.

Merchant Shipping

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out in the Official Report the tonnage of merchant ships ordered world wide for United Kingdom registration in each year since 1983, together with the latest available figures for 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following is the information requested in terms of the tonnage of merchant shipping reported to have been for United Kingdom registration when first ordered.

| | [1]Orders Gross Tonnage |
|---|---|
| 1983 | [2]303 |
| 1984 | 149 |
| 1985 | 263 |
| [3]1986 | 65 |

[1] Includes all vessels of over 100 gross tonnes for United Kingdom registration.

[2] For 1983 tonnage refers to gross registered tons; subsequent figures refer to the new measurement system of gross tonnes.

[3] January to September.

Privatisation

Mr. Trotter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which companies with headquarters in Tyne and Wear have been privatised since 1983; what steps he takes to promote (a) their compliance with the terms of the agreement which established them and (b) their commercial performance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A year ago, the Secretary of State gave his consent for British Shipbuilders to sell Swan Hunter Shipbuilders Limited to its management. The purchasers have fully complied with the terms of the sale. I congratulate the company on its first year and wish it a long and successful future.

Other privatisation of Tyne and Wear companies in the Secretary of State's area of responsibility since 1983 were the sales by British Shipbuilders of the following subsidiaries: British Shipbuilders (Training, Education and Safety) Limited, K and L Marine Equipment Limited, Sunderland Forge Limited, Tyne Shiprepair Limited and Wallsend Slipway Engineers Limited. I understand that in some of these cases British Shipbuilders has agreed to variations in the terms of sale where this was in its commercial interest. The greatest assistance to the commercial performance of all these companies is their freedom, now that they are in the private sector, to respond to the market.

Cement Imports

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effect of the decision of the European Commission on phasing out imports of state subsidised cement from Greece on (a) the British cement industry and (b) the British coal industry; what steps he took to attempt to procure a ban on such imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The decision will result in a reduction in the level of subsidy by 1 January 1988 from 17 per cent. of export price to 3·6 per cent. It will also enable safeguard action to be taken if the remaining subsidies threaten to cause market disruption. These arrangements should be of considerable benefit to the British cement industry and its supplier, British Coal. There are no grounds for considering a ban on imports.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs exist in the United Kingdom arising out of the cement industry, what is the tonnage of imports of cement into the United Kingdom and from which countries for each of the years from 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: According to statistics collected by the Department of Employment, about 12,000 people were employed by the British cement industry in September 1986. The information on imports is as follows:

United Kingdom imports of Portland and white Portland cement (000 tonnes) by country

| | 1980 | 1981 | 1982 | 1983 | 1984 | 1985 | Year ended November 1986 |

Trade Descriptions Act

Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the future of the Trade Descriptions Act.

Mr. Howard: The Consumer Protection Bill, which is currently being considered in another place, makes provision for the repeal of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972. The repeal is necessary for reasons of European Community law. The Government are consulting interested parties on the scope for introducing successor arrangements by order under the Trade Descriptions Act 1968. The Consumer Protection Bill also makes new provisions with respect to the giving of price indications and in consequence repeals section 11 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968.

Saudi Arabia (Visit)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Channon: My visit to Saudi Arabia between 16 and 19 January was my third in as many years and my first as Secretary of State.

I had useful talks with Ministers and senior officials on a wide range of trade topics. All my interlocutors agreed that United Kingdom-Saudi relations were excellent. This satisfactory position owes much to exchange visits and other events in recent years culminating in the very successful visit last November of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales and the impending state visit of King Fahd. Saudi Arabia is our largest market outside western Europe and north America. In 1986 our exports to the kingdom were £1,507 million, an all-time record. The latest available figures also suggest that our share of OECD exports to Saudi Arabia has improved dramatically from 8·6 per cent. in 1985 to 14 per cent. in the seven months to July 1986. This encouraging performance, combined with the very positive Saudi reaction to my visit, enables me to commend with confidence the massive opportunities which this market presents, despite reduced oil revenues, for a wide range of British exports.

I urge those companies with an established presence in the market to examine with particular care opportunities for partnership with the Saudi private sector in joint venture operations to serve both the Saudi home market and those of other GCC member states. The strong enthusiasm of the Saudi Government for such partnerships is reflected in the generous incentives available to foreign investors. It is highly desirable, with the prospect of renewed growth within two to three years, that British firms should take an early opportunity to explore these possibilities to safeguard their competitive position. My Department and the commercial staff of our embassy in Riyadh stand ready to assist both exporters and potential British joint venture partners in every possible way.

United States (Balance of Trade)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures on the balance of trade between the European Community and the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to August 1986, there was a surplus of 21 billion ECUs (about £13 billion) on the European Community's visible trade with the United States.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the latest figures for the balance of trade between the European Economic Community and the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to September 1986, there was a surplus of just over 20 billion ecus (or nearly £13 billion) on the European Community's visible trade with the United States.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with progress to resolve the current trade dispute between the European Economic Community and the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Further negotiations have taken place between the Community and the United States Administration during the last few days. On 26 January the Council agreed, with the full support of the United Kingdom Government, that these should continue with the aim of securing early settlement of the dispute.

52. Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures on the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest figures for the balance of trade between the United States of America.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom's trade with the United States for 1986 is estimated to be in surplus by approximately £2 billion on an overseas trade statistics (OTS) basis.

EMPLOYMENT

Yorkshire and Humberside

63. Mr. Patchett asked the Paymaster General what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs in the Yorkshire and Humberside region since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between June 1979 and June 1986 there was a net decrease of 248,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in the Yorkshire and Humberside region. Some of this decrease in the figures will be the result of the reclassification of jobs previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by sub-contractors.

This is a developing feature of our economy, so that the move to sub-contracting activities like industrial cleaning and road haulage is steadily exaggerating the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

YTS

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General what is expected to be the average duration of the second year of YTS training.

Mr. Trippier: We expect that those who complete their full first year of training in YTS will stay for a further 45 weeks on average in their second year.

Restart Programme

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Paymaster General how many restart counsellors are in post; and what is the full planned complement by the end of March 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are currently 1,146 restart counsellors in post. We expect by the end of March 1987 the figure to be 1,156.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General how many people have been called for interview under restart to date; and what percentage have gone on to receive full-time employment as a result.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 11 December 1986, 912,490 people had been called for interview of whom 689,319 had been interviewed. We have no means of knowing what proportion have gone on to full-time employment as a result. Some have been placed directly following their restart interview, but others have found jobs after taking up one or other of the opportunities offered at the restart interview such as jobclubs or training courses.

Information and Technology

Mr. Park asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the information and technology and education centre programme and its current and future financing.

Mr. Trippier: Information technology centres, like other providers of two-year YTS, have been funded by the Manpower Services Commission on a filled-place basis since April 1986. During the two-year period to March 1988 transitional arrangements will enable ITeCs to reduce their dependence on income from YTS and to diversify further into other activities, such as adult training, beneficial to their local communities. ITeCs have responded well to the transitional arrangements during 1986-87: details of the arrangements for 1987-88 were announced in December 1986. The Department of Trade and Industry is contributing to the support of ITeCs through its funding of marketing and technical support services.

Regional Policy

Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the employment measures taken to help the north since June 1983.

Mr. Trippier: All the employment, training and enterprise measures run by my Departmemt and the Manpower Services Commission have benefited the north. The main measures currently operating are:

Community programme
Enterprise allowance scheme
Voluntary projects programme
Community industry
Restart programme
Jobstart allowance
Jobclubs
Job release scheme
Job splitting scheme
New workers scheme
Travel to interview scheme
YTS
Adult training programmes

Those specifically introduced since June 1983 are the enterprise allowance scheme, the new workers scheme, jobclubs, travel to interview scheme and Restart.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people were placed in work by Darlington jobcentre in each year since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: The following table gives the numbers of people placed into employment by the Darlington job centre for each year since 1983. These figures exclude placings made on Government schemes.

| | Placings |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 2,972 |
| 1984 | 3,665 |
| 1985 | 3,719 |
| 1986 | 3,640 |

Mr. Fallon asked the Paymaster General how many people left the unemployment register in Darlington in the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: Between 12 December 1985 and 11 December 1986 the number of claimants who left the unemployment count in the local authority district of Darlington was estimated at 9,323. This figure is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986.

Mr. Cohen asked the Paymaster General if he will give a breakdown of the latest unemployment figures by ward in the constituency of Enfield, North.

| Electoral ward | Number of unemployed claimants |
|---|---|
| Bullsmoor | 436 |
| Bush Hill | 315 |
| Cambridge Road | 343 |
| Chase | 260 |
| Enfield Wash | 408 |
| Green Street | 405 |
| Ordnance | 523 |
| Ponders End | 599 |
| Town | 178 |
| Willow | 224 |

Professional and Executive Recruitment Service

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many staff are currently employed by the professional and executive recruitment service for each Manpower Services Commission region; and how many staff, by region, are planned for 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: The number of staff employed by professional and executive recruitment on 1 January 1987 in each MSC region is as follows:

The provisional staffing levels for 1987-88 and subsequent years are shown in brackets.

| | Number | |
|---|---|---|
| South East | 43 | (38·5) |
| London | 55 | (52) |
| South West | 17·5 | (14·5) |

| Northern | 14 | (13) |
| Wales | 13·5 | (10) |
| Scotland | 19·5 | (16·5) |
| Total | 335·5 | (300) |

[1] Inc. 42 at PER Head Office, Sheffield.

[2] Inc. 14 at PER Head Office Unit, Runcorn.

Community Programme

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many filled places on the community programme are planned for each Manpower Services Commission region for the 12 months from January 1987.

Mr. Trippier: It is not yet possible to give a breakdown of the planned allocation of places for 1987-88 by region since this has not yet been finalised by the Manpower Services Commission.

Training Schemes

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster Ceneral how many people were engaged in the following special employment and training measures: community programme, enterprise allowance scheme, YTS, young workers scheme, community industry, job release scheme and job splitting scheme for each month of June to August 1983, inclusive, and March to October 1984, inclusive; if he will give the same information, with the addition of the new workers scheme, for the end of November 1986 and December 1986; and what were the estimated effects on the numbers of people registered as unemployed for each of the relevant months.

Mr. Trippier: The number of people engaged in these employment and training measures and the estimated effect on unemployment for these dates are:

Employment Measures

Dr. McDonald asked the Paymaster General if he will publish in the Official Report, in respect of (a) the community programme, (b) the enterprise allowance scheme, (c) the restart scheme, (d) the jobclub system, and (e) the jobstart scheme (i) the statistical survey title, (ii) the survey date, (iii) the publication date; and if for each item he will show the distinction between surveys of the pilot, participant or follow-up type.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 20 January 1987, c. 481]: In respect of the community programme, there are three regular statistical surveys carried out for which results are published. These are

(i) Sponsors' Survey
(ii) Participants' Survey
(iii) Follow-up Survey

Dates of fieldwork and publication (by the research organisation) for each of the surveys are as follows:

| Title | Fieldwork | Publication |
|---|---|---|
| (i) Sponsor's Survey I | January 84 | April 84 |
| (ii) Participants' Survey I | Autumn 83 | May 84 |
| Participants' Survey II | Spring 84 | August 84 |
| Participants' Survey III | Autumn 84 | June 85 |
| Participants' Survey IV | Autumn 85 | To be published |
| (iii) Follow-up Survey I | Summer 84 | December 84 |
| Follow-up Survey II | Winter 84/85 | November 85 |

| Title of Statistical Survey | Survey Date (fieldwork) | Publication date | Type of survey |
|---|---|---|---|
| People on the Enterprise Allowance | August/September 1983 | January 1984 | Participant survey of the pilot scheme |
| The Enterprise Allowance Pilot Scheme—18 month Follow-up Survey | Survey of participants who joined between February 1982 and July 1983 eighteen months later | March 1985 | Follow-up survey of the pilot scheme |
| Two years after the Enterprise Allowance | April/June 1985 | December 1985 | Follow-up survey of the pilot scheme |
| Enterprise Allowance Scheme Evaluation first six-month National Survey | March 1984 | May 1984 | Participant survey of National Scheme |
| Enterprise Allowance Scheme Evaluation second six-month National Survey | October 1984 | January 1985 | Participant survey of National Scheme |
| Enterprise Allowance Scheme Evaluation first fifteen-month National Survey | December 1984 | April 1985 | Follow-up survey of National Scheme |
| Enterprise Allowance Scheme Evaluation third six-month National Survey | September 1985 | March 1986 | Participant survey of National Scheme |
| Enterprise Allowance Scheme Evaluation first 18-month National Survey | November/December 1985 | February 1987 | Follow-up survey of National Scheme |

For the jobclub programme, a report entitled "Jobclub Evaluation Report" was produced in March 1986. It studied the pilot jobclubs during the period 5 August 1985 to 7 February 1986. A copy is in the House of Commons Library.

A report on the restart pilots and initial experience of jobstart was made to the MSC on 22 January 1987. A copy is being placed in the House of Commons Library.

Jobcentres

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what was the target date for completion of computerisation at (a) Bolton jobcentre and (b) jobcentres in the north-west region; what stage computerisation has now reached in (i) Bolton and (ii) the north-west region; what are the new target dates for completion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: The Manpower Services Commission's plans for upgrading its computerised system for handling vacancies envisaged installation in Bolton jobcentre by 18 July 1986 and throughout the north-west region by 14 November 1986. The programme has been delayed because of operational problems. The Manpower Services Commission hopes to complete the introduction of the new computerised systems before 1 April 1988 in the north-west region. It is not possible at present, to forecast the completion dates for individual offices.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General how many jobs are likely to be saved by the introduction of computerisation at (a) Bolton jobcentre and (b) jobcentres in the north-west region; if there will be a reduction in staffing levels prior to the coming into full operation of computers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: There will be gains in operational efficiency and a related reduction in the number of staff required following the introduction of SUPERVACS, an enhancement of the Manpower Services Commission's computerised vacancy handling system. The number of jobs likely to be saved by this development are two at Bolton jobcentre and 71 in the Manpower Services Commission's north-west region. The savings in staff, which were to have been achieved by April 1987 have been postponed, and will now be required by April 1988.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Paymaster General what are the latest estimated costs of introducing computers in (a) Bolton jobcentre and (b) north-west region jobcentres; whether these costs will be met from within existing cash limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: The latest estimated costs of introducing the planned enhancement of the employment service's computer system at Bolton jobcentre are £61,320. The estimated costs for the north-west region as a whole are £2·92 million. In addition, there will be an annual running cost of £210,000 for the region. These costs will be met from within existing cash limits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mauritius

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom-Mauritius relations of the threat to the supply of Mauritius sugar to the United Kingdom market; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: If my hon. Friend is referring to proposals relating to the future ownership of British Sugar plc, he will know that those proposals were referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is now considering the commission's report. I cannot therefore comment on the issues involved, but I can assure my hon. Friend that we are well aware of the views of the Government of Mauritius, as of other cane sugar suppliers, which will be taken into account in considering the report.

Miss Elena Gurevich

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will raise the case of Miss Elena Gurevich of Moscow with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have made our view very clear to the Soviet authorities that they should respect the right to leave one's country. I raised this and other human rights issues with the Soviet Government during my talks in Moscow on 14 to 16 January.

Diplomatic Service

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the universities and type of secondary school attended by ambassadors currently serving Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Eggar: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the universities and polytechnics from which staff were recruited into the administrative group of the Diplomatic Service during each of the years 1979 to 1986, inclusive.

Mr. Eggar: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide a breakdown of the universities and polytechnics from which serving staff have been recruited into those grades of the Diplomatic Service broadly equivalent to the administration group of the Home Civil Service.

Mr. Eggar: The breakdown of universities from which serving staff have been recruited into the administrative grades of the Diplomatic Service is given in the list. Similar detailed information for polytechnics is not readily available, and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Visas

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the December 1986 figure for applications and refusals for visitor visas in India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Ghana.

Mr. Eggar: The full information requested is not yet available; I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Immigration (DNA Testing)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on the use of DNA testing as mentioned in his letter to hon. Members of 17 December; and when the results of the pilot scheme will be announced.

Mr. Eggar: We hope soon to invite 40 families to take part in a trial using DNA testing in immigration cases. It may be some months before the results are fully assessed.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 26-27 January.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary and I attended the First Foreign Affairs Council of 1987, which was held in Brussels on 26 and 27 January.

The Commission reported on the continuing negotiations with the United States concerning the trade effects of enlargement under article XXIV.6 of the GATT. The Commission's report showed that the gap between the two sides had been considerably narrowed and that there were hopes of reaching agreement by the end of the month. The Council fully endorsed what the Commission had achieved and gave its strong support to the Commission in its further efforts to bring the negotiations to a fair and successful conclusion. The Council recalled its intention to respond if the United States proceeded with unilateral trade measures on 30 January, but stressed its determination to try to achieve a settlement that would avert the need for such action.

The Council discussed Commission proposals for new financial protocols for some of the Community's Mediterranean preferential partners. Discussion will continue at the February Council.

The Council yesterday approved the text of an implementing regulation for COMPEX (a scheme to compensate non-Lome least developed countries for losses of export earnings on certain agricultural commodities).

The Council had a brief exchange of views on the 1987 budget.

In view of the latest escalation in the Iran-Iraq conflict, Ministers meeting in European Political Co-operation, agreed a statement calling for an immediate ceasefire and the full implementation of Security Council resolutions 582 and 588, and deploring once again the use of chemical weapons. The statement has been transmitted to both sides in the conflict and to the Islamic Conference which has been meeting in Kuwait.

The Council agreed its position in preparation for the Co-operation Council meeting with Israel held on 27 January, at which Israel was represented by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Peres.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider giving financial assistance to those persons who have been in receipt of supplementary benefit but on the death of their spouse do not qualify for a single payment to help with funeral costs by virtue of the immediate receipt of widow's pension.

Mr. Major: At present the receipt of widow's allowance paid at a higher rate for the first six months of widowhood can mean that a widow, formerly dependent on supplementary benefit, temporarily ceases to be so when her husband dies and is therefore ineligible under the current rules to receive a single payment, including help with funeral expenses. This difficulty should be largely overcome in future by two successive changes introduced by the Social Security Act 1986. These are, from April 1987, the extension of help with funeral expenses under the social fund to those receiving housing benefit or family income supplement (as well as those receiving supplementary benefit), and, from April 1988, the restructuring of widows' benefit to divide initial assistance on widowhood between a weekly benefit and a lump sum. This lump sum, probably £1,000, will be disregarded for funeral expenses purposes.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by ward in the constituency of Enfield, North of the number of supplementary benefit claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of supplementary benefit claimants in Enfield, North on 31 December each year since 1979.

Mr. Lyell: The constituency of Enfield, North is covered by the Department's local office at Edmonton but its boundaries are not conterminous with those of the constituency. The table shows the number of people receiving supplementary benefit from that office on 10 December 1986 — the nearest available date — and on comparable dates since 1979.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (a) if he will list for each meteorological station included in the severe weather payments scheme the number of weeks in the past seven winters when the average weekly mean temperature in a seven-day period from Monday to Sunday reached or was lower than (i) 0·0 deg C, (ii) minus 0·5 deg C, (iii) minus 1·0 deg C and (iv) minus 1·5 deg C and (b) if he will list for each meteorological station included in the severe weather payments scheme, the number of weeks in the past seven winters when the average weekly mean temperature in any seven-day period reached or was lower than (i) 0·0 deg C, (ii) minus 0·5 deg C, (iii) minus 1·0 deg C and (iv) minus 1·5 deg C.

Mr. Major: The information requested in the first part of the question appears in the following table. The Department does not hold the equivalent information for any seven day period.

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement as to why the trigger point for severe weather payments to people in Bradford will be determined by a reading taken in a low-lying city centre site in Leeds.

Mr. Major: Leeds weather station was chosen in consultation with the metrological office as being reasonably representative of the climatic conditions in the area.

Occupational Deafness

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the Social Security Industrial Injuries (Prescribed Diseases) Regulations to enable employees who obtain a successful legal settlement against their employer for occupational deafness to be automatically eligible for industrial disablement benefit.

Mr. Major: There are no plans to amend the regulations as suggested. Different criteria govern awards of industrial disablement benefit and damages at common law; the question of negligence, for example, is not relevant to the industrial injuries scheme. The occupational deafness provisions have had to be strictly limited to keep the number of claims within the capacity of the audiological services. On the advice of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council, coverage is therefore restricted to certain very noisy occupations. The scope of the scheme has been widened since its inception but any further extension must depend, among other things, on the availability of audiological resources.

NHS (Surplus Equipment)

Mr. Alfed Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what system exists for identifying equipment which is surplus to National Health Service requirements but which might be of value in other countries; what contacts he has with other countries in this regard; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Local health authorities are responsible for deciding what equipment and supplies are surplus to their requirements and for arranging disposal in accordance with guidance issued by the Department in HN(76)2, a copy of which is available in the Library. The normal channel of disposal to other countries would be through the voluntary organisation Equipment for Charity Hospitals Overseas.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the number of nurses whose annual gross earnings fall within a given income band starting from the lowest such income in bands of £10.

Mr. Newton: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may like to refer to the estimates in tables 18 and 19 in part A of the New Earnings Survey 1986, a copy of which is in the Library, bearing in mind that:

(i) the tables relate to a pay period in April 1986 and therefore do not include the 8 per cent. increase on basic rates from 1 July 1986.

(ii) the definition of full-time is normal basic hours above 30 per week whilst the standard contracted week, exclusive of meal breaks, for National Health Service nursing and midwifery staff is 37·5 hours.

(iii) the tables will include some nursing staff working outside the National Health Service.

Artificial Limbs

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps is he taking to improve the fitting of artificial limbs; and, in particular, if he will ensure that such fittings only take place after the stump has been X-rayed.

Mr. Major: A number of initiatives are under way to improve the fitting of artificial limbs in England and Wales. A review of prosthetic training for the longer term is in progress and, in co-operation with the limb firms, we are seeking to ensure that satisfactory arrangements exist to meet the needs of existing prosthetists for mid-career development and training. The centralisation and standardisation of prosthetic training at the London school for prosthetics since October 1985 has contributed to enhanced standards.

We are seeking to negotiate with the limb firms new contractual arrangements which should help raise the level of prosthetic care. We continue to encourage the local fabrication of limbs, both to reduce delivery times and to ensure better fitting sockets, and new casting techniques. Transparent flexible sockets are increasingly used. We are currently negotiating service trials of the computer aided design and manufacture techniques developed by the bioengineering centre to improve socket design. We are planning revised transport and appointments arrangements which will enable prosthetists to spend more time with patients.

The X-ray of a stump before fitting is appropriate only where there is some abnormality or spur. It is the complete stump, in particular the soft tissues, which must be addressed to secure a well-fitting socket. The process of matching the socket to the stump then continues throughout the patient's active life.

We believe that the steps we are taking will lead to a substantial improvement in that process.

Benefits

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he monitors the speed of response by Department of Health and Social Security offices to supplementary and other benefit claimants.

Mr. Lyell: Yes. The average time taken in local offices to take decisions on claims for benefit is monitored.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures for the number of households in receipt of child benefit in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency.

Mr. Lyell: Child benefit is administered centrally and there is no information specific to Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the incidence of people who are actually living in multiple occupation registering as single tenants for the purpose of claiming a higher level of benefit than they are entitled to; and what steps his Department is taking to eradicate this abuse.

Mr. Lyell: Supplementary benefit claimants are normally eligible for the householder rate of benefit where they are responsible for housing costs. Housing benefit is payable in respect of accommodation which a person occupies as his home. It is for the relevant local authority to decide whether this condition is met in a particular case. Allegations in recent press articles about this type of abuse are being investigated.

Pensioners

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures for the number of pensioners in receipt of the state pension in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency, giving the number of single pensioners and the number of married couples.

Mr. Lyell: Statistics on pensioner numbers are not kept by parliamentary constituency, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Milk Tokens

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will extend the use of milk tokens to the purchase of soya milk for those children who have an adverse reaction to cow's milk or where there are indications that the child may develop an adverse reaction.

Mrs. Currie: No. Where there is a clinical need, soya-based milks are already available free on prescription.

Health Statistics

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures on life expectancy, infant mortality rates, and numbers on sickness benefit as a percentage of working population in the United Kingdom; and what information is available on comparable figures in West Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Denmark, Belgium, and the European Economic Community average.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 15 January 1987, c. 302]: The information requested about life expectancy and infant mortality rates is given in the table. The figures for countries other than the United Kingdom are taken from Eurostat demographic statistics 1986. Life expectancy figures represent estimates of the expectation of life at birth based on mortality rates for the most recent years available. This information is supplied to Eurostat by the countries concerned and differences in method may account for some of the observed variation. The infant mortality rates are 1984 figures except the European Economic Community average which relates to 1983.

[1] Excluding Spain and Portugal. Notes on how these figures are estimated are given in the introduction to the Eurostat publication.

[2] Including Spain and Portugal.

Information about numbers receiving sickness benefit is not available in the form requested. On 31 March 1985, 1,074,550 people in Great Britain were receiving sickness or invalidity benefit. This figure does not include those receiving statutory sick pay, about who comparable information is not available. The working population of Great Britain in March 1985 was 26,802,000 (Source: Department of Employment Gazette. Information about recipients of sickness benefit in other European countries is not available.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical information is collected by his Department regarding the incidence of cot deaths; for how many years information has been collected; what has been the annual number of cot deaths recorded; what information there is on the incidence of cot deaths following vaccination; how many cot deaths have been noted as occurring within (a) 24, (b) 48, (c) 72 and (d) seven days following vaccination; and over what period these deaths occurred.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 27 January 1987]: Since 1971 the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has identified deaths in the first year of life registered in England and Wales where the term "sudden unexpected death in infancy" or "cot death" or similar term was mentioned on the death certificate, or was given as the underlying cause of death. Very few sudden infant deaths occur after one year of age. The number of such mentions each year since 1971 is given in the table.

No information is collected centrally linking sudden infant deaths with vaccinations.

WALES

Housing

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many habitable dwellings will be available in Wales in April 1987; and what was the corresponding figure for April 1985.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Reliable estimates of the numbers of habitable dwellings in April 1985 and April 1987 are not available.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of total expenditure in Wales was represented by capital expenditure on housing in each of the past 10 years; and what was, in real terms, the capital expenditure on housing in Wales for each of the past 10 years.

Net capital public expenditure on housing as a proportion of total net public expenditure within the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1977-78 | 8·2 |
| 1978-79 | 7·2 |
| 1979-80 | 7·4 |

| 1981-82 | 2·8 |
| 1982-83 | 3·9 |
| 1983-84 | 6·8 |
| 1984-85 | 4·5 |
| 1985-86 | 3·8 |
| [1]1986-87 | 4·4 |

[1] Estimated

Because total public expenditure is measured net of receipts and other income, no account has been taken in the calculation of that element of housing capital expenditure which has been financed by receipts.

| | £ million |
|---|---|

| 1984-85 | 126 |
| 1985-86 | 105 |
| 1986-87 | 130 |

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information there is as to the proportion of homes in Wales in need of repairs exceeding £7,000 in cost; and whether the Welsh housing survey identifies those occupied by pensioners, unemployed persons, single parent families, disabled people and people with low incomes, respectively.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The available information from the "Welsh House Condition Survey 1981" is given in the following table:

Dwellings needing repairs exceeding £7,000

| | Percentage |
|---|---|
| Wales total | 5 |
| Pensioner households | 8 |
| Head of household seeking work | 6 |
| Head of household permanently sick/disabled | 6 |

No information relating to single-parent families or income was collected in the 1981 survey. When the results are available the analysis in the 1986 survey should, however, make it possible to provide this information for all the sectors requested.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table giving, by quarter since their inception, for Wales the numbers of dwellings insulated under local authorities energy conservation programmes, and the number of dwellings insulated under the homes insulation scheme.

Marine Nature Reserve

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the proposed Menai Straits marine nature reserve.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Nature Conservancy Council's consideration of some issues identified in its informal consultations with interested parties is taking longer than anticipated. We understand that the council's formal consultation document is now at an advanced stage of preparation and it is hoped that it will issue in the next few months.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to designate Skomer as a marine nature reserve.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend is considering an application from the Nature Conservancy Council for the designation of a marine nature reserve around Skomer Island.

Overseas Companies

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many overseas companies were established in Wales between 1970 and 1975, 1975 and 1980 and 1980 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive information is not available for all types of developments in Wales by overseas companies. However, estimates of the number of new manufacturing plants opened by overseas companies are as follows:

Number of new plants opened by overseas companies

| Periods | Number |
|---|---|
| 1970 to 1975 | 54 |
| 1976 to 1980 | 55 |
| 1981 to 1985 | 58 |

Roads

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure on new roads in Wales between 1965 and 1970, 1970 and 1975, 1975 and 1980 and 1980 and 1985; and if he will make a statement.

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1965-66 to 1969-70 | 45,849 |
| 1970-71 to 1974-75 | 101,388 |
| 1975-76 to 1979-80 | 261,440 |
| 1980-81 to 1984-85 | 483,729 |

It is not possible separately to identify expenditure by local authorities on road improvements, but this is the main element of their capital expenditure on roads. Over the period their gross capital expenditure on roads was:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1965-66 to 1969-70 | 27,414 |
| 1970-71 to 1974-75 | 94,791 |
| 1975-76 to 1979-80 | 148,988 |
| 1980-81 to 1984-85 | 267,928 |

Higher Education

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales were attending (a) higher education, (b) universities and (c) polytechnics between 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980, 1980 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The readily available information is given in the following table:

| Academic year[1] | University of Wales[2] | Advanced courses in establishments outside the university sector[3] Total | (of which Polytechnic of Wales) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1976-77 | 18,784 | 13,425 | n.a. |
| 1977-78 | 19,692 | 12,885 | n.a. |
| 1978-79 | 20,508 | 12,959 | (3,307) |
| 1979-80 | 20,789 | 13,142 | (3,466) |
| 1980-81 | 21,667 | 13,890 | (3,993) |
| 1981-82 | 21,300 | 15,135 | (4,245) |
| 1982-83 | 20,888 | 15,824 | (4,482) |
| 1983-84 | 20,050 | 17,617 | (4,923) |
| 1984-85 | 20,486 | 18,181 | (5,255) |
| 1985-86 | 21,316 | 19,240 | (5,465) |

[1] Numbers as at December of each year for the University of Wales and November for other establishments.

[2] Number of full-time, sandwich and part-time students at the University of Wales.

[3] Number of full-time, sandwich, part-time day and evening only enrolements on advanced courses at further and higher education establishments outside the University sector.

Beach Pollution

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the number of polluted beaches at seaside resorts in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he intends to take to clear the polluted beaches in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The quality of bathing waters in Wales has been regularly monitored by the Welsh water authority and the results are incorporated in the authority's annual reports and were summarised in the first report of the Committee on Welsh Affairs, Session 1985-86, vol. II (101-II 92(i)-(iii) session 1984-85) (pages 61-84).

Action to improve the quality of Welsh bathing waters, and thereby improve beaches at seaside resorts, is primarily a matter for the Welsh water authority and the authority's plan 86 noted the need for the spending of some £70 million in a 15-year programme to ensure water standards compliance with the directive's requirements in respect of the 40 waters listed in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Local Government on 18 December 1985, at columns 223-28.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the capital allocation per pupil in Wales between 1970 to 1975, 1975 to 1980 and 1980 to 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Details of education capital allocations per pupil for the years 1981-82 to 1984-85 are as follows. The arrangements were different for years prior to 1981-82 and comparable information is therefore not available.

|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 55·04 |
| 1982-83 | 62·17 |
| 1983-84 | 64·26 |
| 1984-85 | 51·56 |

[1] Pupil numbers include full-time equivalent pupils and students in maintained schools, higher and further education establishments, adult education and youth centres.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of Welsh Development Agency money has been spent in Preseli district since 1 January 1986; what were the corresponding figures for the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Forestry

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his policy for forestry in Wales.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The Government's forestry policy for the whole of Great Britain remains as set out in statements by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger), on 10 December 1980, at columns 927-28 and, as far as the sale of Forestry Commission land is concerned, on 8 November 1984, at columns 6-7.

Regional Aid

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to monitor the effects on inward investment of the reduction in regional aid in Wales since 1983.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I refer to the levels of expenditure shown in the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Industry to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Thomas) on 15 January at columns 258-59. All aspects of regional policy are kept under review. Wales continues to be an attractive location for inward investment.

Radiation

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales further to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 15 January, Official Report, columns 282-3, containing tables of public radiation doses, if he can explain why the dose in 1985 was lower than in 1975; whether the dose in 1986 is expected to be lower than in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The differences in dose to the critical group between 1975 and 1985 reflects the greater proportion of hatchery reared rainbow trout now caught and consumed by anglers compared with 10 years ago, when the lake stock was predominantly the brown trout variety. As levels of radioactivity in fish in the lake are derived from the power station's liquid effluent, rainbow trout have a lower concentration compared with brown trout, owing to their different feeding habits. Shorter residence time is also a factor.

It is too early to assess the dose to the critical group for 1986 since all the analytical data are not yet available. The results will be published later this year in the MAFF report "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles 1986", copies of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 15 January, Official Report, column 283, concerning changes expected to take place concerning maximum exposure to radiation of members of the public, what proportion of the maximum exposure in each recent year is attributable to discharges made in preceding years; what calculations have been made on the likely maximum exposure in each of the three years following a cessation of all discharges, in the case that this was to occur immediately; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Critical group exposure to radiation from consumption of fish from Lake Trawsfynydd includes an element attributable to past discharges from the power station. In the case of radiocaesium, the principal type of activity in terms of dose to the critical group, research has shown a time lag from discharge to uptake in fish of about three to six months. In the event of all discharges ceasing concentrations in fish would decline accordingly.

Research Expenditure

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his annual expenditure on research for his Department; what percentage this is of his Department's total expenditure for each year since 1980; how much his Department has spent on research concerning industry in the years since 1980 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Homeless People

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate for the number of homeless people in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information on the number of people who are currently homeless is not held centrally. The number of people who were accepted as homeless by local authorities in Wales during 1986 is estimated provisionally to be 15,900.

Sports Council for Wales

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what grant he is to make to the Sports Council for Wales 1987-88; what grants he has made in each year since 1979; and what the increase for 1987-88 is in real terms.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Subject to parliamentary approval, the 1987-88 grant-in-aid for the Sports Council for Wales will be £3,867,000. Grants-in-aid since 1979 are as follows:

| | £000 |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 1,825 |
| 1980-81 | 2,274 |
| 1981-82 | 2,566 |
| 1982-83 | 2,867 |
| 1983-84 | 2,773 |
| 1984-85 | 2,852 |
| 1985-86 | 3,359 |
| 1986-87 | 3,767 |
| 1987-88 | 3,867 |

The 1987-88 figure is an increase of 23 per cent. over the 1979-80 grant-in-aid in real terms as measured by the GDP deflator at market prices.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers recently given to similar questions by my right hon. Friends, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the Secretary of State for the Environment.

I was associated with the introduction of the legislation and the subordinate legislation referred to in those answers apart from the subordinate legislation referred to in the answer of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and the second statutory instrument referred to in the answer of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

In addition to the legislation and subordinate legislation with which I was associated, I made, together with the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Heather and Grass Burning (England and Wales) (Amendment) Regulations 1983 (SI 1984/1439) which amended the Heather and Grass Burning (England and Wales) Regulations 1983 (SI 1983/425). It was considered that the original regulations did not correctly describe some of the areas of land. The amendment regulations remedied the situation by describing the areas of reference to maps.

I also made the Block Grant (Education Adjustments) (Wales) Regulations 1986 (SI 1986/314) which included a new formula for calculating the contributions of local authorities in relation to expenditure on advanced further education, following the decision of the Divisional Court in R v. Secretary of State for Education and Science ex parte Inner London Education Authority (1985) The Times 20 June. This instrument superseded the Block Grant (Education Adjustments) (Wales) Regulations 1984 (SI 1984/284).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Overseas Investments

64. Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about current profits from overseas investments.

Mr. MacGregor: United Kingdom residents received gross earnings (net of tax) of £6·7 billion from direct investment in subsidiaries and branches abroad, and £6·3 billion from portfolio investment in overseas securities, in the year ending September 1986.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates would be the cost to the Exchequer if husband and wife were to be able to be assessed separately for the purposes of capital gains tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: If husband and wife were each entitled to an annual exempt amount of £6,300, and if unused amounts were transferable to the other spouse, the cost would be of the order of £50-100 million.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many individuals paid capital gains tax on the sale of shares for the year 1985-86; and what was the total yield in capital gains tax for 1985-86 from such sales of shares;

(2) how many individuals paid £750 or more capital gains tax on the sale of shares for 1985-86; and what was the total yield in capital gains tax from such individuals.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987]: It is estimated that about 80,000 to 90,000 individuals will pay capital gains tax on chargeable gains from disposals of shares in 1985-86, with some 50,000 to 60,000 paying more than £750 on such disposables. In both cases, the total amount of capital gains tax paid on disposal of shares is estimated to fall within the range £500-£600 million.

European Community

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of exchange between the European currency unit and the United States dollar has been assumed for the 1987 European Economic Community budget; and how this compares with (i) the rate assumed for the 1986 budget, (ii) the average realised rate in 1986 and (iii) the current rate.

Mr. Brooke: The rate of exchange for the United States dollar to the European Currency Unit (ecu) assumed in the 1987 European Communities draft budget was 1 dollar to 1·1 ecus. The rate assumed in the draft 1986 budget was 1 dollar to 1·2 ecus. This was subsequently amended to 1 dollar to 1·1 ecus. The average outturn rate for 1986 was 1 dollar to 1 ecu and the rate on 23 January 1987 was 1 dollar to 0·9 ecus.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the proportion of the European Commission budget spent on (a) all agriculture support, (b) social fund and (c) regional fund.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987]: The figures from the 1986 budget as adopted, the latest available, are:

| | per cent. |
|---|---|
| (a) agricultural support | 65·1 |
| (of which) guarantee (titles 1 and 2) | 62·9 |
| guidance (title 3) | 2·2 |
| (b) social fund (chapters 60 and 61) | 7·2 |
| (c) regional fund (chapters 50 and 51 | 6·7 |

The Community has not yet adopted a budget for 1987.

Anonymous Payments

Mr. Robert Sheldon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been the annual amount of "conscience money" paid in 1957, 1965, 1975 and at the latest date to the Inland Revenue anonymously by taxpayers who had not declared their full tax liabilities.

Mr. Lawson: The earliest information available is in respect of the financial year 1977-78. In that year £6,700·38 was paid anonymously to the Inland Revenue. The amount paid anonymously in 1985-86 was £40,971·49.

Mortgage Tax Relief

Mr. McCrindle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received recommending the increase in the ceiling for mortgage tax relief to (a) £35,000 or (b) £40,000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A number of representations have been received. The ceiling for mortgage interest relief has to be fixed each year and will be considered in framing the budget proposals.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the value of mortgage interest tax relief per private dwelling in Wales for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87 in outturn terms and at 1986-87 prices;

(2) what has been the value of mortgage interest tax relief per mortgagor in Wales for each year from 1978-79 to 1986-87 in outturn terms and at 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his replies, 22 January 1987, c. 708]: The latest estimates are given in the table below. Estimates for years up to 1982-83 have been derived from the results of the survey of personal incomes. Following the introduction of MIRAS in April 1983, regional information on the cost of mortgage interest relief cannot be extracted from Inland Revenue records and the estimates give for 1983-84 onwards are therefore subject to wide margins of error.

Value of mortgage interest relief in Wales (£)

|---|---|---|---|---|
| Year | outturn prices | 1986-87 prices[2] | outturn prices | 1986-87 prices[2] |
| 1978-79 | 65 | 125 | 175 | 335 |
| 1979-80 | 80 | 130 | 215 | 360 |
| 1980-81 | 100 | 145 | 290 | 415 |
| 1981-82 | 115 | 145 | 315 | 410 |

[1] Including option mortgages which were subsumed in the MIRAS scheme from 1983-84 onwards.

[2] Expressed in 1986-87 prices using the retail prices index.

Personal Wealth

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of personal wealth was represented by the top 2, 10 and 20 per cent., respectively, of the British population in 1982, 1983, 1984 and 1985.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987]: Estimates for 1985 are not yet available but figures for the years 1982 to 1984 are published, on various bases, in tables 4.7, 4.8 and appendix D2 of Inland Revenue Statistics 1986, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Valuations of Assets

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many valuations of assets at 6 April 1965 prices, for the purposes of capital gains tax and corportion tax on capital gains, were carried out in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will estimate the costs incurred by the Inland Revenue in connection with those valuations.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987]: I regret that information is not available on which to base a satisfactory answer.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Shooting Incidents (Investigations)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will now make a statement on the killing of Michael Tighe and the wounding of Martin McCauley at Ballyneery on 24 November 1982;

(2) what evidence the Royal Ulster Constabulary has of Michael Tighe's connections with the Irish Republican Army; and when the report claiming such a link was first noted in his Royal Ulster Constabulary file;

(3) what listening devices were in use at the hayshed where Michael Tighe was killed on 24 November 1982; what warnings were given to him before shots were fired; and why the tape recording was never made available to the courts or to Mr. John Stalker during his inquiry;

(4) at what level in the Royal Ulster Constabulary approval was given for issuing the Royal Ulster Constabulary press release on the shooting of Seamus Grew and Roderick Carroll on 12 December 1982 at Mullacreevie Park and on the shooting of Eugene Toman, Gervasie McKerr and Sean Burns at Tullygally Road, Lurgan, on 11 November 1982;

(5) if he will now make a statement on the shooting of Eugene Toman in November 1982;

(6) what report he has received on the forensic evidence in the Grew and Carroll shootings in December 1982.

Mr. Tom King: The facts concerning the incidents to which the hon. Member refers are the subject of investigation by Mr. Colin Sampson. The first part of his report was submitted to the Chief Constable of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on 22 October and covers the incident of 24 November 1982 in which Mr. Michael Tighe was shot dead. A copy was also submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions for Northern Ireland. The second part is expected to be completed shortly.

As I have told the House before, I shall at the earliest appropriate time make a statement on any matters arising from the report that fall within my responsibility. I do not yet know how soon that will be.

Mobile Support Units

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what training is received by headquarters mobile support units in the Royal Ulster Constabulary;

(2) what training and instructions are given to Royal Ulster Constabulary headquarters mobile support units on how to shoot at targets.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Informers

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the use of informers and their application by the Northern Ireland special branch;

(2) what instructions have been given to Royal Ulster Constabulary officers concerning the use of informers; and to whom the Home Office guide lines have been circulated in the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Infant Deaths

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list for all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland which were conducted by (a) caesarian section and (b) instrumental delivery the number and rate per 100 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths, and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1500 g, 1500 to 1999 g, 2000 to 2499 g, 2500 to 2999 g, 3000 to 3499 g, 3500 to 3999 g, 4000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(2) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1500 g, 1500 to 1999 g, 2000 to 2499 g, 2500 to 2999 g, 3000 to 3499 g, 3500 to 3999 g, 4000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(3) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1500 g, 1500 to 1999 g, 2000 to 2499 g, 2500 to 2999 g, 3000 to 3499 g, 3500 to 3999 g, 4000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(4) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births and the number and rate per 1000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(5) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories, under 1500 g, 1500 to 1999 g, 2000 to 2499 g, 2500 to 2999 g, 3000 to 3499 g, 3500 to 3999 g, 4000 plus and unstated birthweight;

(6) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births and the number and rate per 1000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(7) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(8) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(9) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(10) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(11) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(12) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(13) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(14) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(15) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(16) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of births an the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(17) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Northern Ireland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths ad infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

TRANSPORT

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list which annexes of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships Her Majesty's Government has not yet ratified; and i. he will make a statement as to the reasons for not ratifying in each particular case.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In common with many other countries, Her Majesty's Government have not ratified annex IV of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships 1973. There are some major areas of concern for many countries which will need detailed discussion at the International Maritime Organisation. Ratification will be considered when the review of this annex is complete.

M4-A4 (West London)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive his consultants' report on provision of increased capacity in the M4-A4 corridor in west London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Consultants were appointed last March to look at options for improving travel by all modes, including road, between Heathrow and Central London over the next 20 years. We expect to receive their report in the spring.

Severe Weather (Road Clearance)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the relative effectiveness of individual London boroughs in acting as his agents in clearing roads for traffic during the recent cold spell.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have congratulated London boroughs, and local authorities generally, on coping well in extremely difficult conditions. We shall be taking stock with them of any lessons from the recent experience.

Acid Spillage (Prosecutions)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of acid spillage on the public highways, sufficient to warrant prosecution, have occured over the last three years for which records are available; and if he will make a statement.

I understand that one or two recent cases have led to police prosecution.

Air Service Agreements (Contravention)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to curb the activities of foreign airlines which increase frequencies of flights to the United Kingdom in contravention of air service agreements.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Our normal practice is to include in the operating permit issued to a foreign airline any specific limitations on the frequency or capacity of its services for which provision is made in the relevant bilateral arrangements with the other country concerned.

Driving Tests (Delays)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the reasons for the delays experienced by persons in the Banff and Buchan constituency wishing to take a driving test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Waiting times for driving tests throughout Scotland are too long. We have reduced queues on average in Scotland from 19 weeks to 14 weeks and we aim by continuing recruitment to bring them down to 11 weeks during this year. The waiting list at Banff had shown the same downward trend until very recently. A sharp increase occurred this month, because one of the two examiners covering Banff from Peterhead was expected to be unavailable to conduct tests for three weeks of next month. The traffic area office has since arranged a temporary replacement examiner. Tests initially postponed until April have been advanced to February-March.

Climatic Variability

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to implement the recommendations relating to his responsibilities in the Report, "Social and Economic Responses to Climatic Variability" in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987]: My Department is considering the report, and I shall write to the hon. Member in due course.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the last available figure in the fall in employment in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The latest available estimate of employees in employment in Wales shows an increase of 6,000 between March 1986 and June 1986, following a fall of 23,000 between June 1985 and March 1986. In making such comparisons it should be borne in mind that employment is affected by seasonal factors.

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales by how much unemployment has increased in Ceredigion since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the number of people unemployed in the district of Ceridigion in May 1979 is not available. A close approximation is the aggregate total of 1,875 unemployed registrants in the three travel-to-work areas, as they were defined at the time, of Aberystwyth, Cardigan and Lampeter. Comparisons between 1979 and the present are difficult to make because of changes in the method of collection and compilation of the data and changes to the boundaries of the travel-to-work areas. The aggregate total of unemployed claimants in the travel-to-work areas of Lampeter and Aberaeron, Aberystwyth and Cardigan, as currently defined, was 4,260 in December 1986.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will increase the expenditure on roads in Wales in the next five years to allow for more motorway construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The plans for motorway construction up to the end of 1990 are set out in "Roads in Wales 1985". The programme for the 1990s is under consideration.

M4 (Parking Areas and Facilities)

Sir Raymond Gower asked the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in providing parking areas and facilities along the M4 in Wales; and what plans he has for the next five years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Parking areas and other facilities are provided at the motorway service areas at Sarn Park and Pont Abraham. It is our policy to encourage the provision of such areas at 25 to 30-mile intervals on the M4 in Wales. Where any proposed service area requires direct access to or from the motorway it is for intending developers to put forward proposals for consideration. There are no plans to provide parking and other facilities outside motorway service areas.

New Homes

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what policies he has to protect Welsh people, who buy new homes, from defective workmanship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The National House-Building Council, an independent non-profit making body approved by successive Governments, has successfully encouraged high standards in the house-building industry and offers considerable protection to purchasers through its 10-year structural warranty scheme. It would be prudent for any purchaser buying a new house not covered by a NHBC warranty to seek professional advice.

Empty Council Houses

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many empty council homes there are in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: There were 2,804 vacant council dwellings in Wales on 1 April 1986. Our programme of priority estates projects has shown that efficient, locally-based housing management can eliminate the problem of long-term empty dwellings on council estates, and lead to quicker re-letting of newly-vacated properties.

Education Act 1980

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those voluntary projects, organisations and bodies he has funded in Wales since 1979 along with the amount allocated, other than those which he has financed under section 21 of the Education Act 1980, listing those Welsh language projects, organisations and bodies separately.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to the reply, 22 January 1987, c. 684]: Those voluntary bodies, organisations and projects in receipt of financial assistance in 1985-86 along with the amounts allocated, are listed in the following table (table 1). For the years 1979-80 to 1984-85 I refer the hon. Gentleman to earlier replies given in the Official Report on 14 July 1980, 22 December 1982, 13 March 1984, 22 December 1985 and 6 February 1986.

Grants given to voluntary bodies, organisations and projects for Welsh language purposes since 1979, other than those financed under section 21 of the Education Act 1980, are listed in the following table (table 2).

ENVIRONMENT

Common Land

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the future of common land.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend and the Secretary of State for Wales received the report of the Common Land Forum last September. It set out more than 100 recommendations, including detailed proposals for further legislation on common land. The report is agreed by a wide range of various organisations covering a multitude of different interests. We warmly congratulate the chairman and members of the forum both on the comprehensiveness of their suggested reform and on the breadth of the consensus they have achieved.

The Government accept the case for future legislation based broadly on the forum's report and intend to introduce a Commons Bill at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits. A consultation paper has accordingly been published today so that all those interested in common land matters should be given an early opportunity to express their views on the forum's report. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library. The responses, which should be submitted by 1 May, will then be taken into account in the preparation of the legislation.

Environmental Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all private, corporate or governmental sources of polychlorinated biphenyls presently being discharged into any of the United Kingdom's freshwater, estuarine or marine ecosystems; and if such a practice is prohibited.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no authorised discharges of polychlorinated biphenyls to water in the United Kingdom. There has been a ban on all unconfined uses of these materials since 1980 and there is now a ban on any new uses.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the projects funded by his Department in 1983, 1984 and 1985 to research and develop waste and emission treatment technologies to reduce wastes and emissions to the environment in general;

(2) if he will list the projects funded by his Department in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 to research and develop waste and emission treatment technologies to reduce wastes and emissions to the aqueous environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is currently funding some 70 research and development projects on waste and emission treatment technologies to reduce wastes and emissions to the environment in general. The bulk of these are concerned with radioactive waste management; other work is undertaken on the treatment of land wastes and air pollution. I will write to the hon. Member listing these projects and those undertaken additionally in 1983-84 and 1984-85, and will indicate which projects cover the reduction of wastes and emissions to the aqueous environment.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much was spent in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 on research designed to examine and improve knowledge on sedimentation processes and accumulation, as well as on remobilisation of hazardous substances in the aquatic environment.

Mr. Waldegrave: Research expenditure by my Department in this subject area was as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 556,000 |
| 1984-85 | 567,000 |
| 1985-86 | 542,000 |

North Sea

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in research terms, are the main priority areas being tackled by Her Majesty's Government to improve scientific knowledge of the North sea.

Mr. Waldegrave: Much of the ongoing research undertaken by the Fisheries Departments and the marine science programmes of the research councils is relevant.

Examples of some areas of particular relevance to the North sea are: monitoring coastal discharges, dumping sites and North sea oil and gas installations; monitoring plankton productivity and studying factors that influence it; modelling water sediment movements to gain an understanding of nutrient and pollutant transfer.

The outcome of the North sea conference next November will influence future priorities.

Environmental Research

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what, in research terms, are the main priority areas being tackled by Her Majesty's Government to improve knowledge of aquatic ecosystems.

Mr. Waldegrave: The priority areas of research being tackled by my Department to improve knowledge of aquatic ecosystems are:

1. Effects of pollutants in water.
2. Sediment processes and heavy metals in estuaries.
3. Disposal of sewage sludge to sea and its effects.
4. Nitrate processes in water.
5. Eutrophication processes.
6. The role of acid deposition in freshwater quality.

I understand that the Agriculture Departments' research priority areas in this field are:

1. Benthic populations and their relationship to environmental quality.
2. The origins, fate and effects of contaminants, particularly heavy metals.

3. The role of sediments in understanding the effects of contaminants.
4. Marine food-chains in relation to the productivity of Fisheries.

The NERC and high education institutes undertake much of this research on behalf of my and the other Departments and undertake additionally, related basic research both on freshwater and marine ecosystems, particularly on studies of deep ocean ecosystems.

Rates

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Environment (1) if he will show for each year since 1979 what was the rate poundage for Brighton borough council and East Sussex county council;

(2) what has been the rate level in each year since 1974 for Brighton borough council and East Sussex county council; and what has been the Brighton share of the county council rate in each year;

(3) what proportion of East Sussex county council revenue has been raised from Brighton ratepayers in each year since 1974; and what proportion of the county's expenditure in each year has been spent on services for Brighton residents.

Mr. Chope: The following is the available information on rate poundages in Brighton and East Sussex from 1974-75, and Brighton's percentage of East Sussex's precept income. No information is held centrally on the proportion of county council expenditure on services in individual districts.

Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the rate support grant for Bradford metropolitan district council in 1986-87 and 1987-88, showing the percentage increase; and if he will also make a statement on the effects of this on the 1987-88 rate.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend announced on 13 January his firm intentions for the 1987-88 rate support grant settlement, and for the first supplementary rate support grant report for 1986-87. On the basis of these intentions, if Bradford metropolitan district council increases its current expenditure next year by 5¼ per cent. it stands to receive £137·706 million block grant, which is £10·426 million (8·2 per cent.) more than in 1986-87. If the council raises its spending in line with the rate of inflation, it stands to receive £138·414 million block grant, an increase of £11·133 million (8·7 per cent.) on 1986-87. These increases could enable Bradford to reduce the local rate by 7·3 per cent. or by 12 per cent. respectively. On the basis of the Secretary of State for Education and Science's proposals on teachers' pay, Bradford could receive a further £3·4 million in grant and the rate reductions would be about 2 per cent. less.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what effect his recent statements on the rate support grant and rate limitation will have upon ratepayers in the London borough of Camden in the coming financial year.

Mr. Chope: The Local Government Finance Bill will allow the London borough of Camden to levy a local rate for 1987-88 of no more than 120·7p in the pound, an increase of 1·5 per cent. on 1986-87. The second largest element in Camden rate bills, the ILEA precept, will be limited to an increase of no more than 3·2 per cent.

NB Due to changes in the distribution of the Rate Support Grant between 1979-80 and 1981-82, the rate poundages for the later years are not comparable with the earlier figures.

Local Authorities (Senior Posts)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to intervene to help those local authorities in London and the south-east which are at present unable to fill a large number of vacant senior posts.

Sports Council

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a detailed breakdown of income over the last 10 years for each of the national sports centres funded by the Sports Council.

Mr. Tracey: The following is the information:

[1] Fees

[2] Local Authority Contribution

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the current asset values of the premises and equipment of the national sports centres; and what were those values in 1971.

Mr. Tracey: This information is not available in the form requested. A note to the audited accounts of the Sports Council for the year ending 31 March 1986 observed:

> "Market values of the Sports Council Trust's land and buildings have not been determined, as the valuation could not be provided on any recognised meaningful basis".

On a historic cost basis, the figure appearing in the accounts apportioned to exclude assets outside the national centres is £22,398,154 gross before depreciation is accounted for. The equivalent figure at 31 March 1971 was £1,147,449.

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the performance of the Central Council for Physical Recreation of its duties under the 1971 agreement with his Department and the Sports Council.

Mr. Tracey: The Department is not a party to the heads of agreement of 1972 under which the Sports Council funds the CCPR.

It is for the council to discuss with the CCPR each year its objectives and performance to ensure that the CCPR is using public funds efficiently and effectively.

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the financial controls applied to the staging of international sporting events at the national sports centres funded by the Sports Council.

Mr. Tracey: In any international event which is grant-aided by the Sports Council, the council's standard grant conditions apply. These involve proper budgetary control and audit checks where these are considered necessary.

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the terms of reference and results to date of work undertaken by Mr. David Teesdale since his appointment to the Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: This is a matter for the Sports Council.

Nitrates

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will bring before the House legislation to reduce nitrogen emissions by 50 per cent. over a three-year period giving special attention to nitrogen-based fertilisers.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the publication of the nitrate co-ordination group report in December I am considering how nitrate concentrations in water may be limited. This includes examination of the practicality and suitability of powers available under existing legislation.

Loft Insulation Grants

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to make new schemes for loft insulation grants.

Greenwich (Industrial Improvement Area)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received an application from the London borough of Greenwich for the designation of a 111-acre site at Northon Way, SE28, as an industrial improvement area; and when he expects to announce his decision.

Mr. Tracey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no locus in the declaration of this improvement area. I understand that a resolution to declare this site at Nathan way, SE28 an industrial improvement area has been passed by the London borough of Greenwich. It takes effect on 4 March.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the future of the homes insulation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction announced proposed changes to the homes insulation scheme on 19 December in response to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Devon North (Vol. 107 Col. 756). The new scheme to be laid before Parliament would withdraw the general rate of grant at 66 per cent., but would extend the availability of the 90 per cent. grant to all householders in receipt of housing benefit or supplementary benefit (provided the other conditions of the scheme were fulfilled).

Planning Applications

Mr. Macfarlane asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy towards calling in planning applications to develop facilities in excess of 10,000 square feet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The policy of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is to be very selective about calling in applications for his decision, and in general he will do so only if planning issues of more than local importance are involved. In that context the size of the particular development might be a relevant factor, depending on the circumstances.

Reema Houses

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has yet received a report from the Building Research Establishment on Reema Conclad houses; and if he will make a statement.

(2) whether he will establish an inquiry into the structural safety of Reema high-rise blocks of flats; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: The building research establishment is undertaking a major study of large panel system flats and houses, including Reema flats and houses. A number of papers have already been published and BRE's major report, on the structural integrity and durability of large panel buildings, should be available later this year.

BMA (Request for Meeting)

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, why the Parliamentary Under-Secretary responsible for sports sponsorship refused to meet the secretary and senior officials of the British Medical Association to discuss this matter.

Mr. Tracey: As part of the consultation on the new voluntary agreement on tobacco sponsorship in sport, my predecessor met the British Medical Association in February 1985. In response to its request late in 1986 I agreed to a further meeting but it proved impossible to find a mutually convenient date before publication of the agreement. This was explained to the association, which was invited instead to submit any further representations in writing, to which it agreed.

National Parks

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exempt (a) Exmoor and (b) other areas where management agreements exist from the provisions of the Town and Country Planning (Agriculture and Forestry Development in National Parks etc.) Special Development Order 1986.

Mr. Tracey: No. The Government consider that these discretionary controls should apply in all national parks in England and Wales.

Council House Sales

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate for sales of council houses under the Housing Act 1980 during 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: About 82,500 English local authority dwellings are currently forecast to be sold in 1986-87 and a further 72,500 in 1987-88 under the right-to-buy provisions of the Housing Act 1980 and subsequent legislation. Further details about the forecasts of local authority capital receipts from sales of their stock are shown in paragraph 25 of the housing chapter of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90 Volume II" (Cmnd. 56-II).

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total United Kingdom stock of council houses; and how many have been sold to date.

Mr. Tracey: More than 1 million local authority, new town and housing association dwellings have been sold in Great Britain since this Government took office and the remaining stock is under 6·5 million.

Housing Investment Programme

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will rank in descending order the individual housing investment programme allocations for 1987-88 made to all districts and boroughs in England.

Mr. Ridley: The initial investment programme allocations for 1987-88 for authorities in England are given in the following table. Some authorities vill also receive special allocations for schemes devised in conjunction with Estate Action, or to help them meet their obligations under housing defects legislation.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he plans to alter the prescribed expenditure amounts in respect of improved dwellings to be let under assured tenancies.

Mr. John Patten: An order will shortly be made altering the minimum levels of expenditure which must have been incurred on an existing dwelling before it can be let under an assured tenancy. These will be set at £7,000 in Greater London and £5,000 elsewhere in England and Wales. This will replace the existing thresholds of £5,000 in Greater London and £4,000 elsewhere, which were set out in the Assured Tenancies (Prescribed Amount) Order 1986.

Rating (Rural Communities)

Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek powers to institute a differential rating scheme for small shops and post offices in rural communities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1987, c. 369]: No. But the revaluation of non domestic properties, which is intended to come into effect from 1990, should ensure that these valuable local amenities then have rateable values which reflect up-to-date rental values.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Telephone Logging

Mr. Cohen asked the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to the answer of 23 January, for what reason the Serjeant at Arms' Department requested printouts from telephone logging equipment on 17 October and 19 November; and to whom the printouts were made available.

Mr. Biffen: The printout provided from the telephone logging equipment on 17 October was requested for system management purposes to monitor the use of Palace of Westminster telephone extensions in public places.

The printout provided on 19 November was requested to enable the use of the telephone booths under the staircase leading from the Lower Waiting Hall to the Centre Curtain to be monitored. This was in order to establish the use made of these telephones in the context of an accommodation matter which was being discussed by the Catering and the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committees of the Services Committee.

In both the above cases the printouts contained information on telephone extensions in public places only. They were made available only to the Serjeant at Arms' office and were destroyed after use.

Ministerial Telephone Numbers

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will arrange for the compilation of a special up-to-date edition of the ministerial section of the House of Commons telephone directory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Higgins asked the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to his answer of 20 January to the right hon. Member for Worthing, Official Report, column 467, if he will print the pages of the Palace of Westminster telephone directory covering Ministers in both Houses' telephone numbers.

Mr. Biffen: I refer to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 26 January 1987, at column 17, in which it is confirmed that new sections of the Palace of Westminster directory will be available in approximately two weeks' time.

ENERGY

Solar Energy

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on current research into solar energy utilisation and investment in solar energy.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is supporting a comprehensive research and development programme aimed at providing detailed advice on passive solar design for both domestic and non-domestic buildings in the United Kingdom. The programme has already established that considerable reductions in energy consumption can be achieved by utilising passive solar features in both new and existing houses in the United Kingdom.

An expanded programme is now under way, with expenditure expected to increase from £500,000 in 1985-86 to £2·5 million a year by 1988-89. A number of United Kingdom companies are collaborating with my Department in this work and are making substantial investments in both the research and development and product development. This expanded programme has four main elements:

—dissemination of research and development results including evaluation of new techniques to improve technical transfer.

—a broadly based programme of design studies.

—a continuing programme of assessment studies and generic development work to support these activities.

The Department's renewables R and D programme has also examined both active solar water heating and photovoltaics but despite substantial R and D work, particularly on active solar systems these were proved to be convincingly uneconomic for United Kingdom conditions. A number of United Kingdom companies have however invested in these solar energy technologies with a view to their export potential. Copies of the final report on the Department's active solar programme are in the Libraries of the House.

North Sea (Pollution)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of the results of monitoring of waste discharged from oil production and drilling platforms under the United Kingdom jurisdiction reported to Her Majesty's Government in 1984-85 and 1985-86 contained more than 40 mg of oil per litre as a monthly average.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The target standard of 40 mg of oil per litre of water, as a monthly average, applies to water discharged offshore after separation from the produced oil. In 1984, 1985 and 1986 the percentage of reports recording discharges which exceed 40 mg per litre of oil in water on a monthly average were 24 per cent., 25 per cent. and 22 per cent. respectively.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many offshore installations are within his jurisdiction in the North sea; and how many have informed him that they have appointed an offshore installations manager.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: There are 317 offshore installations registered in the register of offshore installations kept in accordance with the Offshore Installations (Registration) Regulations 1972 (S.I. 1972/707).

The number of installations within the Secretary of State's jurisdiction varies since some of them are mobile and operate, from time to time, outside controlled waters. For the period 14 January 1987 to 21 January 1987 the total number of offshore installations within his jurisdiction was 163 (95 fixed and 68 mobile).

The owner of each offshore installation which is in controlled waters is required, by section 4 of the Mineral Workings (Offshore Installations) Act 1971, to appoint a manager to the installation and to inform the Secretary of State of the appointment. All owners have done so.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many inspectors are employed to ensure compliance with regulations for the prevention and reduction of oil pollution at present; and if he will give details of the last five years of any fluctuations in the number of personnel so employed.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: There are at present two inspectors employed by my Department to ensure compliance with regulations for the prevention and reduction of oil pollution.

From January 1982 to June 1982 there were two inspectors, from June 1982 to April 1983 one, from April 1983 to October 1985 two, and from October 1985 to January 1986 one.

Nuclear Accidents (Compensation)

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Energy what arrangements exist to compensate those who suffer loss as a result of an accident in any nuclear reactor; and what is the extent of that compensation.

Mr. Goodlad: The Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended) makes the operator of a nuclear installation liable to pay compensation up to specified limits (usually £20 million) in respect of injury or damage arising from a nuclear accident. The operator must provide financial security, by insurance or otherwise, to meet such claims. Claims in excess of the operator's liability and up to the sterling equivalent of 300 million SDR (currently about £250 million) would be met from public funds. Beyond that, the Act provides that claims shall be satisfied to such extent and out of funds provided by such means as Parliament may determine.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) of 17 July 1986, Official Report, column 567, if he will estimate the cost of provision of the information on nuclear materials which he states could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my previous answer.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East, (Mr. Strang) on 10 December 1986, Official Report, column 196, if he will now make it his policy to publish all papers connected with emergency plans for nuclear installations.

Mr. Goodlad: No. However, the detailed emergency plans for each civil nuclear site have been, or are about to be, published by the operators.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply of 12 December 1986 to the hon. Member for Yeovil, (Mr. Ashdown) Official Report, columns 245-246, if he will list those areas of information on civil plutonium arising from Magnox reactors on which it is current policy not to provide information on grounds of (a) commercial confidentiality and (b) national security.

Mr. Goodlad: The reprocessing and storage of spent nuclear fuel from Magnox reactors is subject to contractual agreements between commercial partners. In common with the practice in other areas of business, confidential information arising under such agreements is not disclosed without the agreement of the partners.

Information is not provided on national security grounds where to do so would permit inferences to be drawn about classified information on, for example, non-civil operations. In this connection, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 28 January 1987.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy why he will not place in the Library copies of the account records on the accident at Sellafield on 23 January 1986 to which he referred in his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy of 23 July 1986, Official Report, column 283.

Mr. Goodlad: A detailed analysis of the incident in question was published in the Health and Safety Executive's safety audit of BNFL Sellafield 1986, volume 2, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. As I said in my reply to the hon. Member on 18 December 1986, at column 620, the nuclear installations inspectorate has access to any information relevant to nuclear safety. However, detailed information on reprocessing operations is not made publicly available for reasons of commercial sensitivity and national security.

Companies (Annual Reports)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy how many limited companies make annual reports to his Department; and if he will list them.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: As a shareholder my right hon. Friend currently receives the annual reports of Amersham International Ltd., British Gas plc, British Nuclear Fuels plc, and UK NIREX Ltd.

Under an accounts direction given by my right hon. Friend to British Coal he receives the annual reports of NCB (Ancillaries) Ltd. and Coal Products Ltd.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether there are any currently active consents in force for the development of coal-fired power stations in Wales and England.

Mr. Goodlad: Consent under section 2 of the Electric Lighting Act 1909, as amended, was given in 1973 for a 2,000 MW coal-fired power station at West Burton B. This station has not been built and the associated planning permission has since lapsed.

Hartlepool Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if, in relation to Hartlepool nuclear power station, his Department will conduct an inquiry into (a) measures to ensure that in the event of an accident in severe weather conditions, emergency service personnel do not spend sufficient time within the disaster area to receive a fatal radiation dose and (b) the effects of such weather conditions on the mobility of fire engines; and if he will make a statement on the adequacy of current arrangements for a nuclear accident;

(2) what assessment has been made as to whether, under severe weather conditions, the emergency plan for Hartlepool nuclear power station could be successfully extended beyond the immediate area for which a detailed plan exists in the event of a worst case reactor accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: In view of the numerous protective measures and safeguards embodied in the design, construction and operation of nuclear plant in the United Kingdom the likelihood of an accident of such severity that significant doses of radiation would be received by any onsite personnel is extremely remote.

It is for the relevant emergency services themselves to ensure their capability for responding to any civil contingency within the added difficulties which severe weather conditions would impose.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the replies to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) of 2 May 1986, Official Report, columns 502-503, and to the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) of 12 January, Official Report, column 505, if he will now make it his policy to inform the Governments of Italy and Japan that despite there being no contractual agreement at present it is intended that all of the low-level radioactive waste arising (a) from imported spent Magnox fuel from the Italian Latina reactor and the Japanese Tokai Mura reactor and (b) indirectly from contaminated material arising from the reprocessing of this spent Magnox fuel at Sellafield, will be returned in full to the respective countries for disposal.

Mr. Goodlad: I have nothing to add to my previous answers on this subject.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Power Stations

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the country's capacity to produce any kind of power station exclusively in the United Kingdom

Mr. Giles Shaw: The United Kingdom power generation equipment industry has a comprehensive manufacturing capability which has in the past been able to meet the electricity supply industry's requirements for power stations and will, I am sure, continue to do so in the future.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Welsh asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on the balance of payments in relation to manufactured goods.

Mr. Alan Clark: The balance of trade in manufactures was in deficit by £5·9 billion in 1986.

Gerald Ronson (Share Dealing)

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he received in 1985 or 1986 recommending an inquiry into share-dealing by Gerald Ronson or his companies.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend does not disclose individuals or companies mentioned in reports of this nature unless he decides to appoint inspectors under sections 432, 442 or 446 of the Companies Act (in which case their report will normally be published); or unless criminal proceedings are instituted.

Palestinian Produce

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the volume of Palestinian produce that has left the West Bank and Gaza for Europe subsequent to the recent concession; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: Council regulation (EEC) No. 3363/86 of 27 October 1986 on the tariff arrangements applicable to imports into the Community of products originating in the occupied territories entered into force on 16 November 1986. Information on subsequent trade is not available.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to introduce amending legislation to (a) legislation introduced since June 1979 because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 82]: Of approximately 60 public Acts and 1,100 statutory instruments within the field of responsibility of my Department and its predecessors which have been passed or have come into effect since June 1979, I am aware of only four items of legislation which may be considered to fall within the terms of the hon. Member's question. The details are as follows.

As a result of the judgment of the European Court of Justice in case 207/83 (Commission v. United Kingdom), when the Commission of the European Communities successfully challenged the United Kingdom Trade Descriptions (Origin Marking) (Miscellaneous Goods) Order 1981 (S.I. 1981/121) on the grounds that it had equivalent effect to a quantitative restriction on imports contrary to article 30 of the treaty of Rome, that order was revoked on 8 March 1986. Also, in the light of a reasoned opinion of the Commission to the effect that maintenance in force of the Trade Descriptions Act 1972 (which imposes requirements as to origin marking for certain categories of goods) is a breach of article 30, the Government by what is now clause 48(2)(a) of the Consumer Protection Bill intends to provide for the repeal of that Act.

Secondly, the Insurance Companies (Advertisements) (Amendment) Regulations 1983 (S.I. 1983/48) contained a defective and inoperable definition of the advertisements to which the Regulations were to apply. This was drawn to my Department's attention by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments. The regulations were therefore revoked (without ever coming into effect) on 12 April 1983 by the Insurance Companies (Advertisements) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1983 (S.I. 1983/396), and replaced by new provisions which came into force on 1 May 1983.

Lastly, the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments reported in February 1986 (eleventh report, Session 1985-86) that there was doubt about the vires of the Consumer Credit (Exempt Agreements) (No. 2) (Amendment No. 2) Order 1985 (S.I. 1985/1918). As a result of that report, the enabling powers in section 16(1) of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 were amended by section 22 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Project Zircon

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date he asked the Metropolitan police to carry out an investigation into matters arising from information given to Mr. Duncan Campbell about project Zircon; and what precise lines of inquiry he suggested to the police.

The Attorney-General: On Friday 23 January 1987 the Director of Public Prosecutions, at the request of the Attorney-General, asked the Metropolitan police to investigate possible breaches of the Official Secrets Act 1911 arising out of the publication in the New Statesman magazine of a report entitled "The Parliamentary bypass operation". It is the policy of both the Attorney-General and the Director of Public Prosecutions not to give details of advice provided to police about the conduct of current investigations.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total level of local authority expenditure on education in each year since 1978-79 in 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The table shows actual outturn expenditure (both current and capital) by local education authorities in England from 1978-79 to 1984-85, provisional outturn for 1985-86, and estimated outturn for 1986-87. The figures have been revalued to 1986-87 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

| Financial Years | £ million at 1986-87 prices |
|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 12,872 |
| 1979-80 | 12,563 |
| 1980-81 | 12,885 |
| 1981-82 | 12,791 |
| 1982-83 | 12,706 |
| 1983-84 | 12,820 |
| 1984-85 | 12,766 |
| 1985-86 | 12,472 |
| 1986-87 | 13,479 |

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total level of his Department's expenditure in each year since 1978-79 in 1986-87 prices.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The table shows actual outturn expenditure by the Department of Education and Science from 1978-79 to 1985-86 and estimated outturn for 1986-87. The figures have been revalued to 1986-87 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

| Financial Years | £ million at 1986-87 prices |
|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 2,194 |
| 1979-80 | 2,309 |
| 1980-81 | 2,391 |
| 1981-82 | 2,314 |
| 1982-83 | 2,463 |
| 1983-84 | 2,475 |
| 1984-85 | 2,466 |
| 1985-86 | 2,441 |
| 1986-87 | 2,474 |

School Closures

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools which were closed in January in each of Cambridgeshire, Suffolk, Norfolk and Lincolnshire; and how many school days were lost in each sector in each of the listed counties.

Mr. Dunn: This information is not collected centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

West Winds Primary School

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the permanent toilets in West Winds primary school, Newtownards became inoperative; how many days this school has been closed due to lack of toilet facilities; whether a report has been received about the subsidence of the grounds in the school precincts; whether the foul sewage system at the school has been fractured; when a permanent toilet facility will be restored at the school; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The permanent toilets became inoperative on 6 October 1986. The school has been closed for seven days in all—five days in October 1986 and two in January 1987. A consultant's report on the subsidence was received by the South-Eastern education and library board on 15 January 1987. Some of the connections to the main drains at the school site have been fractured. A precise date for the restoration of the permanent toilet facility cannot be given at present, but the board is urgently drawing up a schedule of works with a view to determining what remedial action can be taken. In the meantime 20 per cent. of the permanent toilet block has been restored to use and the board has made additional provision in the form of temporary toilets to ensure that sufficient facilities are available for the staff and pupils.

Local Councils (Powers)

Sir Philip Goodhart asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what additional powers have been given to local councils in Northern Ireland since may 1979.

Mr. Needham: Since May 1979 district councils in Northern Ireland have been given the additional powers described in column 1 of the table and contained in legislation listed in column 2.

|  | Column 1 | Column 2 |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Control over the use of certain building materials | Building Regulations (1970 Order) (Commencement No. 1) Order (Northern Ireland) 1979 |
| 2. | Control over the use of premises for the purposes of a food business | The control of Food Premises (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 |
| 3. | Preparation and revision of waste disposal plans | Pollution Control and Local Government (Northern Ireland) (1978 Order) (Commencement No. 2) Order (Northern Ireland) 1980 |
| 4. | Granting of waste disposal licences |  |
| 5. | Control of disposal of hazardous waste |  |
| 6. | Provision for waste reclamation |  |
| 7. | Production and disposal of heat and electricity from waste |  |

| 25. | Power to sell advertising space on council property | |
| 26. | Power to sell surplus computer capacity | |
| 27. | Erection of bus shelters | |
| 28. | Determination of registration fees for sellers of poisons under the Poisons (Northern Ireland) Order 1976 | |
| 29. | Ancillary powers | |

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many former senior civil servants in Hong Kong, in receipt of Government pensions have taken employment in the private sector (a) in Hong Kong, or (b) elsewhere with companies involved in commerce with Hong Kong in each of the last 10 years; and what advice is given in this subject to retiring Hong Kong senior civil servants.

Mr. Renton: Former Hong Kong civil servants in receipt of Government pensions are required under section 16 of the Hong Kong pensions ordinance to seek prior approval from the governor before taking up post-retirement employment or business, if the principal part of the employment or business is in Hong Kong. Failure to comply with this requirement may result in the cessation of their pensions.

The general criteria for considering such applications are that the officer should not have unfair advantage over competitors, or be in a position either to use official information improperly or to exert influence over his former department. Retiring officers are advised of these criteria which are stipulated in the Hong Kong Civil Service Regulations.

The records available show that in the last 10 years the numbers of approved applications in respect of former senior officers (branch secretaries and heads of departments) wishing to accept post-retirement employment while on pension were:

Test Ban Treaty

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply of 20 January by the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) Official Report, column 524, whether, on his visit to Moscow, in addition to the emphasis on the importance of verification in arms control, his hon. Friend also exchanged views on the detailed outstanding problems that hold up the verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: The main focus of my talks on arms control in Moscow was the prospects for reductions in nuclear weapons and for strategic defences.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have made available to the appropriate technical authorities within the United States Government their current views on outstanding problems of verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: We are in regular contact with the United States authorities on the full range of nuclear testing issues.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what detailed information he has on the joint plans of the Australian and Swedish Governments to set up a network of seismic stations to monitor compliance with a verifiable comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Renton: We are aware only of a press report on this subject.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to prepare any new technical policy papers on new developments in verification measures for the ad hoc group of scientific experts on nuclear test ban verification which meets in March under the auspices of the United Nations conference on disarmament.

Mr. Renton: The value of producing a further paper is kept under review. But so far there has been only one technical paper directly responding to the United Kingdom's paper CD/610 of July 1985. Meanwhile we look forward to participating fully in the work of the ad hoc group of scientific experts in Geneva.

Five Continents Peace Initiative

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the reply of 20 January by the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, column 524, on the five continents peace initiative, whether Her Majesty's Government have formally replied to messages from the President and Foreign Minister of Mexico.

Mr. Renton: Yes.

Project Zircon

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the Answer of 26 January if he will now specify the precise dates on which (a) investigations were first initiated to identify the source or sources of information given to Mr. Duncan Campbell about Project Zircon and (b) these investigations were intensified.

Mr. Renton: Initial inquiries were begun by GCHQ in the summer when the Government first became aware of the BBC's plans for one or more programmes. More detailed investigations were initiated by GCHQ in the week beginning 6 October, when the intention to include specific material on a secret defence project in the BBC series "The Secret Society" became known. These investigations were intensified as further details became available about what information Mr. Campbell might have obtained, and in particular in the week beginning 19 January. Since the police investigation began, GCHQ has handed over responsibility to them and is providing them with full assistance.

Nigeria

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Govenment are taking to bring pressure to bear on the Nigerian Government in order that they cease to delay the repatriation of funds by British companies to the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Chalker: Even in normal circumstances, the procedures for foreign companies to repatriate funds from Nigeria can take time to complete owing to stringent Nigerian exchange control regulations. But where undue delays arise, we are prepared to make representations to the Nigerian authorities on behalf of British companies. This was one of the subjects which I raised with Nigerian Ministers during my recent visit to Lagos.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

West Germany

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will publish in the Official Report (i) a table showing a total trade in food, drink and tobacco between the United Kingdom and West Germany in the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available and (ii) a table showing trade with West Germany in common agricultural policy products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information on total trade in food, drink and tobacco between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany is given in the following table. It would involve disproportionate cost to extract the data required for the many commodities covered by the common agricultural policy.

Total trade in food, drink and tobacco between the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany—December 1985 to November 1986

| Commodity | United Kingdom Imports | | United Kingdom Exports | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Tonnes | £ '000 | Tonnes | £ '000 |
| Food[1] | 598,090 | 426,214 | 1,273,340 | 405,446 |
| Drink | 251,572 | 166,512 | 24,060 | 44,093 |
| Tobacco[2] | 13,668 | 61,269 | 1,154 | 9,901 |

EC (Food Surplus)

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the financial cost to Britain for maintaining EEC food surpluses in the last three years.

Mr. Jopling: The United Kingdom contributes to the EC budget as a whole (rather than to specific schemes) at approximately 20 per cent., abated by the Fontainebleau mechanism. Community expenditure on public intervention storage has been:

| | MECU |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 1,056 |
| 1985 | 1,342 |
| 1986 | 1,424 |

The cost of storing products in public intervention in the United Kingdom, not including financing costs, and related receipts from the EAGGF, is:

(£ million)

| | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 |
|---|---|---|---|
| IBAP expenditure | 58 | 125 | 129 |
| Receipts from EAGGF (including notional financing costs) | 82 | 157 | 221 |

Battery Hen Cages

Mr. Hancock asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why an action is being taken against the European Council in the European Court, case 131/86, as regards Directive 86/133/EEC on battery hen cages.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government are taking this action against the Council of Ministers because it considers that the directive was not adopted on the correct legal base in the treaty of Rome and in view of procedural irregularities in its adoption. The case has nothing to do with the animal welfare merits of the directive.

Milk Quotas

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action will be taken to deal with the knock-on effect of milk quotas on the beef market.

Mr. Jopling: In taking decisions on milk in December the Agriculture Council acknowledged that the consequences for the beef sector were likely to be significant. The decisions on beef as a whole were reached with this in mind and in particular the Commission has allocated a sum of 435 mecu (£290 million) to meet extra beef market management costs which might arise. In the United Kingdom, the retention of the beef variable premium, the green pound devaluation, and the harmonisation of steer and young bull intervention buying-in prices will do much to encourage stable market conditions. We shall, of course, continue to monitor the situation carefully.

Green Pound

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to negotiate a further devaluation of the green pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The level of the green pound is kept under review. The recent devaluations for beef and sheepmeat show that we do not hesitate to act when necessary. It is too early to predict what further action may be appropriate at the price fixing.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek a further substantial increase in the suckler cow premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: The maximum rate for the suckler cow subsidy was considered in the course of the discussions on beef support arrangements in the Agriculture Council which concluded on 16 December, 1986. The United Kingdom pressed for a substanital increase, and the Council's agreement included a 10 ecu increase in Community funding for the suckler cow premium. The current rate of suckler cow premium in the United Kingdom is £24·74. Following the December agreement it would be possible to raise this by 35 per cent. to £33·40 in 1987-88. I hope to announce shortly the actual rate which will be paid.

New Zealand (Import Quota)

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to negotiate a substantial reduction in the import quota for lamb and dairy products from New Zealand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: No. Imports of butter at reduced levy from New Zealand now stand at 76,500 tonnes, less than half of their level in 1973 when the United Kingdom joined the Community. This figure compares with surplus butter stocks in the Community of 1·3 million tonnes.

New Zealand has voluntarily restricted its sendings of lamb to the Community to levels which reflect traditional levels.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowance

Mr. Speller asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why hill livestock compensatory allowance payments have not been increased for the current year; if he will now index these scales for inflation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: I explained in the written reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 17 December 1986, at column 598, why we decided that the rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances would not be increased for 1987. Many factors are taken into account in our annual autumn review of economic conditions in the hills and uplands, in the light of which we determine the level of HLCA rates, and it would be inappropriate simply to take account of movements in the inflation indices. This Government's commitment to the hill livestock sector is well illustrated by the fact that HLCA payments in this country have almost doubled since 1979.

Food Aid

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what organisations have been recognised for the purpose of the food aid from European Community intervention stocks; what arrangements have been made for the distribution to individual elderly and needy people in their own homes; and what is the estimated value of food to be distributed in the United Kingdom, the cost of distribution and the extent and duration of the scheme.

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what method is being used to allocate European Economic Community food charity.

Mr. Jopling: The relevant Community legislation provides for distribution of certain foods to the most needy through charitable organisations. In the United Kingdom the following organisations have agreed to co-operate:

Age Concern.
British Red Cross Society.
Church Army.
Help the Aged.
National Council of Voluntary Child Care Organisations.
Royal Association of Disability and Rehabilitation.
Royal British Legion.
Salvation Army.
Social and Pastoral Action (RC Diocese of Westminster).
Catholic Bishops' Conference, England and Wales.
Women's Royal Voluntary Service.
Church of Scotland Board of Social Responsibility.
National Catholic Social Care Commission.
Society of St. Vincent de Paul (Belfast).
Bryson House (Belfast).

These organisations are themselves arranging distribution to the most needy, whether in their own homes or at other locations. The arrangements will last until the end of March 1987. I am not in a position to estimate the value of the food to be distributed or the total cost of distribution until the likely uptake by charitable organisations becomes clear.

Oslo Convention

Mr. Gregory asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the protection afforded to the marine environment of the north-east Atlantic and North sea by the Oslo convention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Oslo convention, which the United Kingdom joined as a founder member in 1972, continues to provide an invaluable and highly effective international framework, underpinned by expert scientific advice, on which its members can base their policies for the protection of the marine environment from the harm that might otherwise be caused by the unregulated dumping of waste. We set great store by the commission set up by the convention, in which we continue to play an active part, and give effect to its recommendations by means of the licensing system operated under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. However, the convention does not at present extend to dumping activities carried out in the internal waters of its members, that is, maritime waters to landward of their base lines. Nor is it covered by other international agreements. Such activities are liable to affect the marine environment adversely unless they are closely regulated, as they are in the United Kingdom. The Government have therefore taken the lead in seeking the agreement of our partners that the convention should be extended to cover internal waters. Legal experts from the convention countries met on 7 and 8 January to prepare proposals for the extension of the scope of the convention in this respect which will be considered by the Oslo commission at its next session in Cardiff in June.

PRIME MINISTER

Perthshire

Q122. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Perthshire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 January.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 January.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 January.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 29 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I attended a presentation about the Government's programme for action for jobs. I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Moscow (Visit)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to raise specific outstanding problems of verification of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty during her visit to Moscow in the spring.

The Prime Minister: I look forward to discussing a wide range of issues, including arms control subjects.

Diplomatic Missions (Electronic Surveillance)

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister if she will refer to the Security Commission the matter of the policy of Her Majesty's Government on conducting electronic surveillance on the diplomatic missions in London of European Community states.

The Prime Minister: In accordance with long-established practice, I am not prepared to comment on intelligence matters.

Republic of Ireland (Embassy)

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister what representations Her Majesty's Government have received from the Government of the Republic of Ireland about the facilities and conditions of the Irish embassy in London.

The Prime Minister: The only recent representation received was a letter from the Irish ambassador in July 1986 about the embassy's parking facilities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan police have considered adopting the local authority management information system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police have a computerised financial information system which is due for replacement in the 1990s. It is too early to say which system would best suit the needs of the force when the time for replacement becomes due.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how he exercises budgetary control over the Metropolitan police; how he ensures that the objectives and priorities agreed with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis are implemented most cost-effectively; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make a statement on the procedures and criteria used in fixing the cash limit for the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Descriptions of the responsibilities for planning and controlling Metropolitan police resources and the rules and procedures which govern expenditure at all levels are contained in the finance and manpower code. A copy of the code is in the Library.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those occasions since 1984 when the Metropolitan police have received assistance from other police forces (a) within the United Kingdom and (b) outside the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list the occasions since 1984 when the Metropolitan police have seconded or otherwise provided officers to assist other police forces (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) outside the United Kingdom;

(3) if he will list those occasions since 1984 when the Metropolitan police have provided mutual aid to other police forces in the United Kingdom; stating the numbers and ranks of officers involved and the reason given for each occasion, naming the aided force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Parkhurst Prison (Incidents)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what incidents of violence between prisoners have occurred at Parkhurst prison since 31 December; if any racial element was involved in any of these incidents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Between 1 and 25 January, there were three incidents of violence between prisoners at Parkhurst prison:

1. On 4 January, there was fighting among a group of black inmates, in which no white prisoner was involved.
2. On 6 January, three Israeli and one Turkish prisoners were involved in a fight with a number of other inmates.
3. On 21 January, there was a fight between two white prisoners.

I understand that there is no evidence to suggest that any of these incidents had a racial basis.

Prisons

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce proposals for minimum standards in prisons.

Mr. Mellor: No. We do not consider that a code of minimum standards for prisons would contribute to the programme the Government have in hand for improving prison conditions.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the ratio of prison officers to prisoners for each of the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The ratio of prison officers to prisoners in England and Wales on 1 January each year was as follows:

| | Ratio |
|---|---|
| 1982 | 1 : 2·56 |
| 1983 | 1 : 2·51 |
| 1984 | 1 : 2·41 |
| 1985 | 1 : 2·51 |
| 1986 | 1 : 2·51 |

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that training in protection against chemical weapons is given in special courses at the Civil Defence college, Easingwold.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This subject is already covered in several of the courses available at the college. The college programme is kept under review, but at the present time there are no proposals for change.

Street Violence (Books)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to restrict the publication or sale of books teaching the techniques of street violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is an offence to solicit or incite another to commit a crime, whether or not the solicitation or incitement has any effect. A person who publishes a book inciting the use of violence against people in the streets is thus liable to be charged with a criminal offence. We have no plans to introduce any further form of restriction.

Community Radio

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to publish the Government Green Paper on community radio.

Mr. Mellor: We hope to do so shortly.

Terrorism

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will seek the renewal of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: A draft order was laid on 27 January under section 14(10) of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984. If the draft order is approved by Parliament, the Act will continue in force for a further 12 months. I have received the report from Lord Colville of Culross on the operation of the Act in 1986, and copies have been placed in the Library. The Act continues to play an important part in our defences against acts of terrorism in this country and I shall study carefully Lord Colville's comments on its operation from this point of view.

Life Sentences

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving life sentences in Her Majesty's prisons for a conviction of two or more murders.

Mr. Mellor: I shall reply as soon as possible.

Wapping Dispute

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state the number of persons prosecuted by the Metropolitan police in connection with the Wapping dispute where offences were alleged to have taken place (a) in the immediate proximity of the plant, (b) elsewhere in east London and (c) in other locations; and, in respect of (b) above, if he will indicate the nature of the charges made.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that up to 27 January 1987 1,337 persons had been charged with offences in connection with the dispute following arrests in the Leman street division. Information about offences committed in other areas of London in connection with the dispute is not centrally available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Racial Incidents (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures showing the number of racial incidents in the Metropolitan police district, by borough, for each year since 1983 by offence providing a clear-up rate and number of arrests for each category and for each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 4 December 1986, at columns 711-14, which set out the available information.

Female Prisoners

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what facilities are available for those female prisoners who are held in police cells, who would otherwise have been remanded in prison;

(2) if he will list the number of female prisoners held in police cells, in each of the last six months, who would otherwise have been remanded in prison; which police stations they were held in; and for how long.

Mr. Mellor: The number of female prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales on each Friday since 1 August was as follows. Full details of where each was held and for how long and of the facilities available at each location are not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. We are conscious that prisoners in police cells do not receive the full range of entitlements that would apply were they in prison custody; nevertheless, the police are doing their best to provide whatever facilities they can under very difficult circumstances.

| Date | Number |

Fresh Start Programme

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any intention of imposing the fresh start programme upon prison staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend explained his position fully when he addressed chief officers in the prison service on 23 September last year. A copy of these remarks is being sent to the hon. Member and we are placing another in the Library. We very much hope that the current discussions with the Prison Officers' Association will lead to an agreed basis for the implementation of fresh start, and our officials are continuing to work to this end.

AIDS

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has now issued the Government leaflet on AIDS to all prisoners currently serving a sentence in England, Wales and Northern Ireland; and whether he plans to make available any other advice to prisoners on the dangers and risks of AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: The leaflet "AIDS: Don't Die of Ignorance" will be distributed to prison service establishments in England and Wales in the course of the next few days for issue to all prisoners currently on the nominal roll. Governors and medical officers are being asked to continue to make the leaflet and other suitable educational material available to prisoners by displaying copies in the reception area, the prison hospital and other appropriate locations. A prisoner who wishes to receive personal advice may consult the medical officer in confidence.

Practice in Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Police Widows

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons are in receipt of the police widows' preserved rate pension in each county of the United Kingdom; what is the average age of the recipients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when the last increase in benefits was paid to recipients of the police widows' preserved rate pension; what was the value of the increase; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the present weekly payment to recipients of the police widows preserved rate pension; and if he will make a statement.

| Rank | Rate per week (£) |
|---|---|
| Below Inspector | 14·04 |
| Inspector | 18·29 |

In common with all state and public service pensions the rates were last increased by 1·1 per cent. from 28 July 1986. The next increase is due in April.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what additional revenue was gained by the police widows' preserved rate pension fund in each of the years since 1982 when the contribution from male police officers was increased from 7 per cent. to 11 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no such fund either for the preserved rate widows or for the police service generally. The net costs of the police pension scheme—estimated in 1985-86 at £186 million for England and Wales—are met from general rate fund revenue.

Customs Clearance (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provision exists for immigration control and customs clearance for individuals arriving aboard ship at Dundee and subsequently leaving their ship;

(2) if he will make a statement on the discovery of four people who arrived by ship at Dundee on or about 20 January and came ashore without immigration control or customs clearance.

Mr. Waddington: I will shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Blood Tests)

Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether any prisoners on remand or sentenced are required to submit to blood tests during the course of a medical or other examination.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 16 January 1987, c. 337]: Blood tests are carried out only for medical purposes and then only where such a course is clinically indicated and the prisoner gives informed consent. There is no class of case for which the Director of Prison Medical Services has recommended testing as a matter of routine.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what percentage of those available for work in 1979 in the north-west had been previously employed in manufacturing industries; and what is the latest comparable figure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information from the labour force survey indicates that 42 per cent. of those without a job who were available for work in the north-west region in the spring of 1979 and whose previous industry could be identified had previously left a job in manufacturing industry. The latest labour force survey estimate, for spring 1985 was 30 per cent. although this is not fully comparable.

European Community

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General how many European Economic Community nationals are currently employed in Britain; and how many British nationals are employed in other European Economic Community nations.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the labour force survey that there were 362,000 European Community nationals, excluding United Kingdom nationals, in employment resident in Great Britain in the spring of 1985. The latest readily available estimates from the labour force surveys conducted in other countries of the European Community refer to 1984. It is estimated that at that time about 95,000 United Kingdom nationals were employed in other countries of the European Community.

Earnings

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the proportion of full-time employees in Great Britain who, in the new earnings survey 1986, are paid less than £50, £60, £70, £80, £90, £100, £110, £120, £130, £150 and £200, respectively, when overtime earnings are excluded, for (a) all adults, (b) all males and (c) all females, and sub-divided into (i) manual and (ii) non-manual males and females.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is published in table 39 of part B of the report on the new earnings survey 1986, a copy of which is in the Library. The data relates to full-time adults working a full week whose pay was not affected by absence.

Mr. Prescott asked the Paymaster General if he will publish (a) the latest estimates of the number of part-time female and male workers and (b) the estimated proportion of part-time male workers being paid less than (i) £2·00, (ii) £3·00, (iii) £3·20, and (iv) £3·40 an hour in April 1985 and April 1986.

(a) Numbers of part-time employees

Great Britain thousand

| | Males | Females |
|---|---|---|
| March 1985 | 792 | 3,899 |
| March 1986 | 819 | 3,866 |
| September 1986 | 868 | 3,973 |

(b) Percentage of part-time adult male employees earning specified amounts

April Great Britain

| | 1985 Percentage | 1986 Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| With earning less than: | | |
| (i) £2·00 per hour | 26 | 17 |
| (ii) £3·00 per hour | 68 | 69 |
| (iii) £3·20 per hour | 71 | 73 |
| (iv) £3·40 per hour | 73 | 75 |

Power Industry

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Paymaster General if, following the announcement on Sizewell B, he will estimate the effect of that decision on jobs in the power industry.

Mr. Lee: I will await my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Energy's decision on the development of Sizewell B before making any comment on the matter.

Enterprise Allowance

Mr. William Powell asked how many persons in Northamptonshire are in receipt of the enterprise allowance to the latest convenient date.

Mr. Trippier: On 27 January 1987, 538 people were receiving the enterprise allowance in Northamptonshire.

Greenock (Earnings)

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General what information he has concerning the number of workers in the Greenock travel-to-work area who now earn less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold.

Mr. Lee: Information on earnings is not available for individual travel-to-work areas.

Scott Lithgow

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General what discussions his Department has had with the Scott Lithgow company concerning its future plans in the light of the effect on the services provided by his Department of the redundancies now taking place in its Port Glasgow yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Discussions have taken place between the local jobcentre staff and management of Scott Lithgow about the best ways of letting those being made redundant know of the full range of help and assistance available to them through the Government Action for Jobs programme. This includes job placing services, information about jobs available locally and in other districts; advice on a wide range of employment matters and Manpower Services Commission schemes; and advice on and assistance with training and retraining. The Manpower Services Commission has increased training provision and made available special local courses to increase the versatility of those made redundant and to improve their prospects of re-employment. Recruitment to the courses is currently under way.

Underpayment

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General what action is being taken to enforce legislation against underpayment.

Mr. Trippier: Wages inspectors investigate all complaints and check compliance with the wages orders issued by the wages councils by making routine checks at a proportion of establishments on the wages inspectorate's register each year. Prosecution action is considered in cases where there is evidence of deliberate or repeated underpayment of workers.

Low Pay

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General if he has taken steps to monitor the effects of the Wages Act on low pay; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. The most significant determinant of low pay is poor economic performance. The Wages Act will improve economic performance by increasing pay flexibility, but it is unlikely that its particular contribution can be identified.

British Telecom (Dispute)

Mr. Bendall asked the Paymaster General if he has received any request from the National Communications Union for public funds for a postal ballot in connection with the current strike of British Telecom engineers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Neither I nor the certification officer has received such a request.

Regional Fraud Teams

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the sum of money saved as a result of the visit to Hove unemployment benefit office of his Department's regional fraud team between 30 June 1986 and 15 August 1986, for each week of the team's visit, the numbers of claimants directly and indirectly affected by the visit, the number of home visits and office visits by week, and the cost to his Department of staffing, transport, accommodation and expenses for the regional fraud team between those dates.

Mr. Lee: Details of the weekly amount of public money saved and the number of claimants who were interviewed at their home or in the unemployment benefit office at Hove during the regional fraud team exercise are only available at disproportionate cost. Information about the numbers of claimants indirectly affected by the visit is not available as there is no way to determine why some claimants cease to sign. However, I can confirm that 359 people had their claims to benefit investigated during the exercise and 76 claimants subsequently withdrew their claims. The savings resulting from the exercise at Hove amounted to £79,249·94 and the total cost of the exercise was £11,450·46—ie, a net saving of £67,799·48.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General if he will provide details of his Department's evaluation and value for money studies of the activities of regional fraud teams and show their effectiveness region by region.

Mr. Lee: The work of regional fraud teams is monitored in detail including their cost effectiveness in achieving benefit savings. The following figures show the net benefit savings of regional fraud teams for the six months between 1.4.86 and 30.9.86, having taken into account the costs incurred in regional fraud team work.

| Region | Net Benefit Savings £ |
|---|---|
| Northern | 246,679 |
| Yorks and Humberside | 393,260 |
| Eastern | 900,173 |
| Southern | 1,495,809 |
| South West | 916,804 |
| Wales | 643,559 |
| Midlands | 1,016,761 |
| North West | 242,061 |
| Scotland | 313,565 |

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General if he will detail the number of claimants who have left the unemployment register voluntarily in each region as a result of the regional fraud teams investigations; and if he will provide details of the number of claimants who left the register who subsequently re-registered within (a) one month, (b) two months, (c) three months, (d) four months and (e) five months.

Mr. Lee: The following figures show how many claimants withdrew their benefit claims voluntarily as a result of regional fraud teams' investigations, for the six months between 1 April 1986 and 30 September 1986. There are no figures available to show the number of claimants who subsequently re-registered.

Number of Claims Withdrawn

| Regions | Number |
|---|---|
| Northern | 344 |
| Yorks and Humberside | 521 |
| Eastern | 1,102 |

| Regions | Number |
|---|---|
| Southern | 1,721 |
| South West | 1,185 |
| Wales | 1,003 |
| Midlands | 1,286 |
| North West | 470 |

Community Programme

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General (1) pursuant to the answer of 23 January regarding the community programme plans in 1987-88, if he will list the areas considered to be most in need; how he anticipates the allocation in these areas will compare with those in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how the total provision of community programme places in 1987-88 compares with that for 1986-87; what is the percentage change; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General what has been the gross and net cost of the enterprise allowance scheme in each year of its operation and as a total to the most recent date.

Mr. Trippier: Gross and net costs of the enterprise allowance scheme in each year of its operation since its introduction nationally in August 1983 are as follows:

| | Gross million | Net million |
|---|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 25·0 | 7·8 |
| 1984-85 | 79·6 | 23·9 |
| 1985-86 | 108·6 | 33·8 |
| 1986-87[1] | 105·3 | 33·5 |
| Total | 318·5 | 99·0 |

[1] To December.

Youth Training

Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General what was the number of school leavers entering youth training schemes in 1986 from each education authority; and if he will express these figures as a proportion of the number of students in secondary education in each authority.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information is not readily available in the form requested and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

SCOTLAND

Housing

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of completion of units of accommodation by Inverclyde district council in (a) 1981, (b) 1982, (c) 1983, (d) 1984, (e) 1985 and (f) 1986.

Mr. Ancram: Inverclyde district council completed 26 houses during 1982. No houses were completed by the district council in any of the other years concerned.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of completions of privately owned units of accommodation in the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency in (a) 1981, (b) 1982, (c) 1983, (d) 1984, (e) 1985 and (f) 1986.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 16 December 1986 at column 506. Provisional information shows 242 private dwellings completed in Inverclyde district during 1986.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of units of accommodation owned by Inverclyde district council between 1981 and 1986.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table.

| Year | Number of dwellings (at 30 September) |
|---|---|
| 1981 | 19,716 |
| 1982 | 19,690 |
| 1983 | 19,471 |
| 1984 | 19,355 |
| 1985 | 18,990 |
| 1986 | 18,623 |

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of units of accommodation sold by Inverclyde district council in (a) 1980, *(b)*1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984, (f) 1985 and (g) 1986.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the table:

Inverclyde District Council house sales

| Year | Number of dwellings sold |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 63 |
| 1981 | 94 |
| 1982 | 97 |
| 1983 | 182 |
| 1984 | 104 |
| 1985 | 316 |
| 1986 | 224 |

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of Wednesday 14 January, Official Report, column 250, he will provide a detailed breakdown of his estimate of the number of jobs provided by the forestry industry in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The figure of 40,000 which I gave in reply to the right hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Stewart) on Wednesday 14 January 1987; Vol. 108, column 250, in fact related to Great Britain, and not to Scotland alone. I have apologised to the right hon. Member for this error. The estimated figures for Scotland are as follows:

|---|---|
| Forestry Commission | 3,600 |
| Private Estates | 3,300 |

|---|---|
| Forestry Management Companies | 1,950 |
| Timber Merchants | 850 |
| Wood Processing Industries | 2,600 |
| Total | 12,300 |

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement on the outcome of the Forestry Commission's review of its regional advisory committees.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to receive the recommendations of the Forestry Commissioners fairly soon.

Home Improvements and Repairs

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he is taking to promote home improvements and repairs in the Strathclyde region; and how much is planned to be spent in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Ancram: In the private sector, home improvement and repair work, in Strathclyde region as elsewhere in Scotland, may be eligible for mandatory or discretionary grant assistance from district and islands councils, met from their non-HRA allocations. Non-HRA allocations of £60·7 million were issued to the Strathclyde authorities for 1986-87. The proportion which is spent on home improvement and repair grants is for individual authorities to decide. The provisional non-HRA allocations issued to the Strathclyde authorities for 1987-88 amount to £69·8 million.

Homeless Persons

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the number of homeless persons in the Inverclyde district.

Mr. Ancram: Estimates of the numbers of homeless persons are not available. Twelve households were housed in temporary accommodation at 30 September 1986 under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the pamphlet on AIDS is being distributed to prisoners in Scottish prisons and to those serving sentences in young offenders institutions.

Mr. Lang: Yes.

Local Government Expenditure

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of expenditure by Inverclyde district council and Strathclyde Regional council, respectively, has been provided by rate support grant in each year since 1975.

Mr. Ancram: The figures below show the proportion of relevant expenditure including loan charges, provided by rate support grant for Inverclyde district council and Strathclyde regional council in each year since 1975. The grant figures for 1986-87 are based on the Rate Support Grant (Scotland) (No. 4) Order 1985. No adjustment has been made for grant penalties since they will be restored if authorities bring their expenditure down to guideline on outturn.

|---|---|---|
| 1975-76 | 64·6 | 46·7 |
| 1976-77 | 67·3 | 52·5 |
| 1977-78 | 67·2 | 53·5 |
| 1978-79 | 65·4 | 48·1 |
| 1979-80 | 63·8 | 48·5 |
| 1980-81 | 62·2 | 47·1 |
| 1981-82 | 59·7 | 40·2 |
| 1982-83 | 59·1 | 39·8 |
| 1983-84 | 59·0 | 40·8 |
| 1984-85 | 55·0 | 39·9 |
| 1985-86 | 55·3 | 26·1 |
| 1986-87 | 53·1 | 27·4 |

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each local authority in Scotland the average weekly expenditure on the provision of meals for each resident in its homes for the elderly.

Sheltered Accommodation

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many units of sheltered accommodation have been built by each district council in Strathclyde region, both directly and in co-operation with housing associations or trusts, in each year since 1979; and what are the projected figures for each council until 1987-88.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not readily available and could not be extracted except at disproportionate cost.

Scott Lithgow

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his office has had with the Scott Lithgow company concerning its future plans in the light of the redundancies now taking place at the Port Glasgow yard; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The Industry Department for Scotland has frequent contacts with Scott Lithgow on a variety of matters, and these have continued since the announcement of the redundancies which are currently being implemented.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were placed in employment by the jobcentres in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each year since 1982.

Mr. Lang: The numbers of people placed in employment by the Greenock and Port Glasgow jobcentres in each year since 1982 were as shown in the table.

| Year (to March) | Numbers placed in employment |
|---|---|
| 1982-83 | 4,240 |
| 1983-84 | 4,752 |
| 1984-85 | 4,887 |
| 1985-86 | 4,056 |
| 1986-87 (1 April 1986 to 9 January 1987) | 3,212 |

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the percentage change in the level of unemployment in the district of East Lothian, using the most convenient figures available, since April 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of unemployed claimants in East Lothian district on 9 June 1983 and on 11 December 1986 (the earliest and most recent dates for which such information can be provided) was 3,621 and 4,156 respectively. As a result of the change in the timing of the count in March 1986, these figures are not comparable and no meaningful percentage change can therefore be calculated.

This information is available in the Library.

Conservation

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures his Department is pursuing to ensure that uplands in the Highlands due to be ploughed for the purposes of the afforestation are fully surveyed for the purposes of protecting the local archaeological heritage prior to such activity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The principal role in archaeological survey in Scotland lies with the Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland. In certain instances of imminent threats to sites the Scottish Development Department may also commission surveys. Archaeological sites of national importance may be afforded protection through scheduling under the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979. The Scottish Development Department maintains close liaison with the Forestry Commission in relation to proposals for afforestation.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce legislation to extend the provisions of part 2 of the Ancient Monuments and Archaeological Areas Act 1979 to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has no proposals at present to bring part II of the Act into force in Scotland.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail and define the respective functions and responsibilities within his Department as they affect the interface between conservation and afforestation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Within the Scottish Office, the main responsibility for advising my right hon. and learned Friend and myself on conservation matters rests with the Scottish Development Department. Regular contact is maintained between the Department and the Forestry Commission about the interaction between forestry and conservation.

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now reply to the letter sent to him on 19 December 1986 by the hon. Member for East Lothian on the subject of safety precautions at Torness power station.

Mr. Lang: I replied to the hon. Gentleman in a letter dated 27 January.

Personal and Property Registers

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the future of the section of the department of the registers of Scotland concerned with the searching of personal and property registers; and what will be the effect on services to house buyers.

Mr. Lang: From 31 January the Department of the Registers of Scotland will accept requests for departmental searches of the Register of Sasines and the Personal Register only in those areas to which the Land Register has been extended. In the remaining areas searches of the Sasines and Personal Registers will be carried out by the private search firms which already cater for more than 90 per cent. of the market. The other search activities of the Department, including the free provision of reports from the Land Register, will not be affected. The staffing and other resources released by this change will be redeployed to property registration, expanding the Department's capacity to extend the Land Register. This extension will lead to reduced registration charges from which house buyers have more to gain than they have from continuation of the Department's searches.

Kymmene-Stromberg

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place with the Kymmene-Stromberg company about grants for building its new paper mill in Irvine; what value of grants is estimated to be available; if any undertakings have been given that the principal machinery will be manufactured in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Extensive discussions took place between my officials and representatives of Kymmene-Stromberg leading to an offer of grant under the Government's regional policy to assist in the building of a pulp and paper mill at Irvine. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not normal practice to disclose the amounts of grant offered although the amounts paid are published in "British Businesss" in the quarter after payment is made. As part of that offer of regional support Kymmene-Stromberg has agreed to give United Kingdom equipment suppliers full and fair opportunity to bid for the supply of capital equipment for the project.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about grants by the Finnish Government to the Kymmene-Stromberg company for the purchase of Finnish-made machinery for the new paper mill in Irvine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I am assured by the company that it is not in receipt of any grants from the Finnish Government for the purchase of Finnish-made machinery for its new pulp and paper mill in Irvine.

Golden Wonder

Mr. Robin Cook asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what development grants have been paid in the most recent 10 years to Golden Wonder, or its parent companies, in respect of its Broxburn plant; and whether any parallel payments have been made from European Community funds.

Mr. Lang: It is a long-standing practice that, in the interests of preserving commercial confidentiality, comprehensive information on grant payments is not made public. Details of individual payments in excess of £25,000 are published quarterly in "British Business" and I would refer the hon. Gentleman to that publication.

I am not aware of any recent payments to the firm from EC funds but I will look further into that matter and write to the hon. Member.

Urban Motorways (Litter)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the amount of debris and litter on urban motorways in Scotland; and what he intends to do about it.

Mr. Ancram: Scotland's only urban motorways are in Glasgow. They are the responsibility of Strathclyde regional council, and not of my right hon. and learned Friend.

Sexual Assault (Report)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the second report of his Department's research on sexual assault will be published.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Home and Health Department has today published the second report of a research study into the processing of sexual assault cases in the Scottish criminal justice system. The first report, "Investigating Sexual Assault", concentrated on the police investigation of such cases. This second volume covers the prosecution and trial stages and examines the final outcome. Copies have been placed in the library. The report has been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and is available through Her Majesty's Stationery Office bookshops.

DEFENCE

Ammunition

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what increases in rates of ammunition usage and attrition are now anticipated compared to those anticipated prior to Arab-Israeli wars; what corresponding increases of ammunition stock holdings have already been introduced and will be introduced over the next five years; and what is the need for additional equipment to transport this.

Mr. Stanley: Information on assumed rates of ammunition usage and stockholdings is classified. Since 1979-80, Army stocks of anti-tank and air defence missiles have have increased considerably, some threefold in the anti-tank case. Increases have also been made in other essential stocks, such as artillery and main small arms ammunition, and fuel stocks. Over the next few years, we will be increasing the number of Rapier fire units for BAOR, as well as making further increases in our stocks of Javelin missiles. The Army has a requirement for additional ammunition movement capability in BAOR, to which the procurement of the demountable rack offloading and pickup system will contribute.

Firearms (Accidental Discharge)

Sir George Young asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents were recorded in each of the last three years in which soldiers accidentally discharged firearms.

AIDS and Venereal Diseases

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the handout on health hazards referred to in the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 22 January, Official Report, column 731.

Mr. Freeman: Yes.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the handout on health hazards referred to in the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 22 January, Official Report, column 731, was distributed throughout the 1st Battalion Queen's Own Highlanders; and if each private soldier received a copy.

Mr. Freeman: The main party of the 1st Battalion Queen's Own Highlanders flew out to Kenya between 21 and 25 October. Each soldier was given a copy of the handout as he embarked. A pre-advance party which had flown out on 11 October had not received copies on embarkation and every effort was subsequently made to give them the same instruction whilst in Kenya. All members of the battalion had received the oral pre-exercise briefing, which is standard procedure for all service men going overseas (not just to Kenya) which covered health hazards, including sexually transmitted diseases.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the nature of the instructions on AIDS as a health hazard given to the 1st Battalion Queen's Own Highlanders before it went to Kenya.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 22 January 1987 at column 731.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Defence in what way the advice given to the Parachute Regiment before it went to Kenya differed from that given to the Queen's Own Highlanders.

Mr. Freeman: It is normal practice for visiting units to brief the staff officers of a subsequent exercising unit. The information given to the Parachute Regiment before it went to Kenya included the same written material, and the oral briefing was based on the same principles as that used for the Queen's Own Highlanders.

Approved Dealers

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) Mr. Brian Bird of King Edward road, Douglas, (b) Alsation Ltd. of Church road, Onken, Isle of Man and (c) any other company of which Mr. Bird is known to be a director are, or have been, on his Department's list of approved dealers.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Alsation Limited, Church road, Onken, Isle of Man, is not registered on the defence contractors list, nor has any application been received.

The Department is unaware of any other directorships held by Mr. Bird.

Anthrax

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Defence if parts of the United Kingdom other than Gruinard were used for testing anthrax in connection with weapon research.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1987, c. 307]: Apart from work carried out within the then chemical defence experimental station, Porton Down, a device containing anthrax was tested on the beach at Penclawdd, South Wales, in 1942. Investigations subsequent to this trial revealed no evidence of any residual contamination.

THE ARTS

British Library Building

Dr. Blackburn asked the Minister for the Arts what is the latest estimate of the cost of stage 1A of the new British Library building at St. Pancras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The Government have reviewed the future of the first two stages (1AA and 1AB) of this project. Their main features will be air-conditioned storage for the Library's collections, three reading rooms for rare books (including music and fine arts), western manuscripts, and oriental materials; and open access reading rooms for the science reference and information service. The costs of constructing these stages were originally estimated at £116 million in 1979 (the 1986 equivalent using the RPI is £193 million). These estimates, and others made in the intervening period, have proved to make insufficient provision for inflation. The revised estimates, which also cover increases due to changes in VAT regulations, the need to build in a higher risk contingency, and other minor changes, now stand at £218 million at 1986 prices. The Government are reviewing the arrangements for the management of the project, and improved arrangements will be introduced as soon as possible.

In view of the advantages to be gained from these stages of the project in bringing readers, books and staff together in a modern environment, the Government have decided to keep to the present plans for them, and the necessary financial provision is accordingly being made for this purpose. In the three years covered by the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56), the additional provision will be £4·1 million in 1987-88, £6·2 million in 1988-89 and £9·2 million in 1989-90. These increases will be met by additions to the arts and libraries programme within unchanged overall public expenditure totals since, although the sums had been anticipated at the time of the 1986 public expenditure survey, they had not been finally agreed pending the outcome of the review.

Royal Opera House (Land)

Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Arts (1) what valuation he has received on the land acquired by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Royal Opera house;

(2) whether he has received a valuation of the land acquired by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Royal Opera house in the last 12 months.

Mr. Luce: I have received no valuation. The Arts Council purchased the site in 1975 out of voted funds; joint ownership is currently vested in the council and the Royal Opera house, and valuation is a matter for them.

Mr. Fisher: asked the Minister for the Arts whether he will make public the terms of the trust deed covering the land acquired by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Royal Opera house in 1974.

Mr. Luce: The parties to the trust deed are the Arts Council and the Royal Opera house. I will consult them and write to the hon. Member.

Royal Court Theatre ("Perdition" Production)

Mr. Marlow asked the Minister for the Arts if he will investigate the circumstances leading to the cancellation by the Royal Court theatre of its production of "Perdition"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce The decision to cancel the performance of this play was taken by the board of the Royal Court theatre, which has responsibility for its artistic programme.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Lawrence asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the countries in which British pensioners can be resident and receive uprated state pensions in full (a) from the United Kingdom Government and (b) from the Government of the host country.

Mr. Lyell: British pensions are payable at the same rates as in the United Kingdom to pensioners in European Community member States and to pensioners in the following countries:

Austria.
Cyprus.
Finland.
Iceland.
Isle of Man.
Israel.
Jersey.
Guernsey.
Malta.
Sark.
Switzerland.
Turkey.
Yugoslavia.

The most recent information readily available on the rates of pension, under other countries' schemes, to which British residents in countries overseas might be entitled is contained in the following publications which are available in the Library: Section III-V of the Department's publication, "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1986)", and "Social Security Programms Throughout The World—1983", published by the United States Department of Health and Human Services.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he has as to how many local authorities' social services departments take responsibility for the adaptation of premises for disabled persons;

(2) what information he has about differences in practice between local authorities as regards the use of housing department funds, on the one hand, and social service department funds, on the other, to support the adaptation of premises for disabled people; and what is his assessment of the implications of such differences for the achievement of a consistent national policy in this field.

Mr. Major: Social services authorities have a duty, under section 2(1)(e) of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970, to make arrangements for the provision of assistance with, or arranging for the carrying out of, works of adaptation to the home of any disabled person who is ordinarily resident in their area, when they are satisfied that this is necessary in order to meet that person's needs.

Local housing authorities have powers under existing housing legislation, notably the Housing Act 1985, to improve or adapt properties in their own housing stock. They also have powers under the same legislation to make home improvement grants to owner-occupiers, landlords and tenants to help meet the cost of such adaptations.

In the light of these provisions, it is for the local authorities concerned to decide how in practice housing adaptations for disabled people should be funded in their area. The responsibility for such funding, both for local authority and non-local authority housing, will vary from area to area. The most recent available annual figures show that 102 out of 107 local social services authorities had assisted with adaptations to non-local authority property and 47 had also assisted with adaptations to local authority property.

We have no reason to believe that different arrangements in different local authority areas constitute, in themselves, any impediment to the provision of assistance to disabled people.

Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to lay the commencement order for the Disabled Persons (Services Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Major: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) and for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 26 November 1986 at column 289.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes, other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(2) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(3) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(4) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(5) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(6) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(7) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(8) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740 to 759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(9) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(10) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(11) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(12) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated

according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and the unstated gestational age;

(13) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congential malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(14) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(15) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b ) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congential malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(16) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(17) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales in the total number of births and number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congential malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(18) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congential malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(19) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(20) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths, with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759), tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Period of gestation is not collected at the registration of live births.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(2) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(3) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformation (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(4) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(5) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(6) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(7) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(8) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(9) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740 to 759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 weeks plus and with unstated gestational age;

(10) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 weeks plus and with unstated gestational age;

(11) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740 to 759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 weeks plus and with unstated gestational age;

(12) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740 to 759) as their underlyirg cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages; 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and with unstated gestational age;

(13) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages; 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, and 42-plus weeks, and with unstated gestational age;

(14) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories; under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(15) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories; under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 g to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(16) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories; under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(17) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths tabulated to the following gestational ages; 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks, and unstated gestational age;

(18) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postnenatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759): and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(19) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postnenatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause: and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(20) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postnenatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(21) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(22) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(23) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age;

(24) if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) second twins born in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of births and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births and perinatal deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759), tabulated according to the following gestational ages: 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available. The data held on computer records of births do not distinguish between first and second twins.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Foulkes: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why he has not answered the question about severe weather payments tabled by the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley for written priority answer on 26 January.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him and to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 26 January 1987 at columns 88-89.

Mr. Foulkes: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost of advertising of the £5 cold climate allowance; what is the estimated cost of administration of the scheme (a) in the current year and (b) in January 1987; and what other expenditure has been incurred, apart from the cost of the payments themselves.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Meadowcroft: asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) on what date leaflets on the system of severe weather payments in force prior to the statement to the House on 13 January, were to be available in benefit offices in Leeds;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that those entitled to severe weather payments receive them;

(3) by what method claimants for severe weather payments are to initiate their claims;

(4) what information was available at benefit offices on severe weather payments following the statements to the House on 13 and 20 January.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 15 January, at columns 297-98, which contained details of publicity arrangements for extra help with heating costs because of the exceptionally cold weather.

Standing instructions about the operation of the scheme were issued to the Department's local offices in November 1986. Draft leaflets, which could be reproduced locally if necessary, were included with those instructions. Supplies of the leaflets proper and posters were issued to local offices during the week commencing 12 January 1987.

Leaflets and advertisements in the press include a simple claim form to be taken or sent to the local office. Offices were also instructed to accept claims other than on the special claim form. Offices are taking all steps available to ensure that potential claimants are aware of their entitlement and are giving priority to making payments as quickly as possible.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra resources he has made available to benefit offices to enable them to process severe weather payment claims without detriment to other work.

Mr. Major: An addition equivalent to 300 overtime man-years has been allocated to local offices of the Department to process cold weather payment claims, at a cost of some £4 million. This should also ensure that other work is not affected.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications have now been received for the £5 severe weather payments for the week 12 to 18 January; how many had been paid by 26 January; and what is each figure as a percentage of the estimated number of people eligible.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him and to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 26 January 1987 at columns 88-89.

Local Offices have been asked to give priority to making exceptionally cold weather payments. Because they are concentrating their efforts on this rather than on the statistical records, the further information requested is still not available. Details of the number of applications received and payments made will be provided in due course.

Benefits

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of supplementary benefit in Greenock and Port Glasgow in (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984 and (f) 1985 were one-parent families.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that this information would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Local Offices (Staff)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many staff are currently employed in local offices of his Department in (a) England and Wales, (b) Scotland, (c) Strathclyde region and (d) Greenock and Port Glasgow; and how many staff in each off these are planned for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Lyell: The latest comprehensive information on the number of staff in post in local offices of the Department relates to 1 January 1987 and is as follows:

| | Number |

ILO = Integrated Local Office

The number of staff planned for 1987-88 and 1988-89 for each of these areas is not yet determined. A review of staffing levels in local offices has just been completed.

Complements will be revised in the light of this review and of the review which is examining all social security tasks to identify further scope for reducing work loads.

Supplementary Benefit

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by district council ward in the constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow of the number of supplementary benefit claimants.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information is readily available to show the total number of people receiving supplementary benefit from each of the Department's offices covering the constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow. On 10 December 1986 — the latest figures available — the position was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Greenock | 12,195 |
| Port Glasgow | 5,285 |

Wheelchairs

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what would be the estimated cost of providing dual purpose indoor and outdoor powered wheelchairs for all those who would benefit from them;

(2) how many people currently have a Department of Health and Social Security powered indoor wheelchair; what is his estimate of the number who would benefit from a dual purpose chair that could also be used for short distances outside; and how many of these are children.

Mr. Major: On 31 December 1986 there were 11,864 powered indoor wheelchairs on issue through the Department's wheelchair service. There are no central records of how many wheelcharis are on issue to different age groups. In total there are over 480,000 powered and non-powered wheelchairs on issue. It is estimated that a considerable number of these users could benefit in varying degrees form a dual purpose powered chair which could be used indoors and outdoors, but there are no reliable figures of how many, nor the likely cost of such provision. In its report the McColl working party suggested that the cost of providing dual purpose powered chairs for 24,000 of those with the greatest need would be over £30 million. This is more than the total annual expenditure on the entire wheelchair service.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to announce his decisions regarding the recommendations of the McColl committee on dual purpose powered wheelchairs.

Mr. Major: We are still considering this major issue in the context of decisions on other important aspects of the artificial limb appliance centre services raised by the McColl report. We will announce our conclusions as soon as possible.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients in the Brighton health authority area were on the waiting list for each year since 1979; and of those how many had to wait (a) more than one month, (b) more than three months, (c) more than six months and (d) more than one year, before receiving treatment.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks in precisely the form requested. The information available centrally is given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the Brighton district health authority for the more detailed information requested.

Perivale Hospital, Greenford

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated current value of Perivale hospital, Greenford; what is the estimated cost of building a hospital facility of similar proportions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: With the agreement of the district valuer, a contract has been signed to sell the bulk of the site of Perivale hospital to Ealing council for £6·19 million. The remainder of the site would probably have a market value of about £1·25 million, but is being retained for health service use. On medical advice, our policy is to provide maternity units as part of district general hospitals, thus no current estimates of the cost of building a free standing maternity hospital are available.

Asbestos

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates are available to him of the likely number of asbestos-induced deaths over the next 30 years.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available on which to base such a forecast.

Social and Community Planning Research (Survey)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department commissioned Social and Community Planning Research to carry out a survey into how people manage when they are unemployed; when the survey started; how many people have been interviewed to date; when the survey is to be completed; what is to be the total sample; in what regions of the United Kingdom people are being interviewed; how long an average interview takes; how many people have been invited to participate; how many have refused, either prior to being interviewed, or when the interviewer called; how many interviewers are employed on the survey and how are they recruited; what is the total cost of the survey; and if he will place a copy of the survey questionnaire in the Library.

Mr. Major: Social and Community Planning research (SCPR) was commissioned on 4 July 1986 to carry out interviews on behalf of the Department in connection with a study designed to find out about the incomes and experiences of people while employed and unemployed. The sample for the survey will be taken from people who become unemployed over a four-week period in March 1987, drawn from a representative sample of about one in 10 unemployment benefit offices in all regions in Great Britain, and interviews will take place in May. It is hoped to achieve completed interviews for about 1,800 men and 1,250 women. The study will be very similar to an earlier DHSS study which looked at a sample of men becoming unemployed in 1978. The report of that study ("For Richer for Poorer", HMSO 1984) is available in the Library, as are several working papers.

Participation by those selected for interview will be voluntary and they will be given written assurances that whatever they say will be anonymous and that whether they take part or not will have no effect on any claim to benefit they may make. SCPR has carried out a pilot exercise to test the questionnaire and the sampling mechanisms and the questionnaire will be amended as a result. As the study is still in its formative stages, I am unable to be more specific in response to the hon. Member's other points.

Midwives

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what method his department uses to obtain figures relating to midwives employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Computer tapes are received quarterly from regional payroll systems. Those data for midwives are then extracted by using the particular pay scale and occupation code.

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many midwives were employed by the National Health Service in each year since 1976, expressing the figures both in terms of whole-time equivalents and of the total number of employees, and adjusted to take account of the change in the working week.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I am unable to provide all the information the hon. Member requires. Numbers (head count) of midwives for the years 1976 to 1979 were not provided for staff working in primary health care, and therefore total numbers cannot be produced on a comparable basis with those from 1980 onwards. Such information as is available centrally is shown in the table.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received proposing the payment of mobility allowance to deaf-blind people; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Some deaf-blind people already receive mobility allowance. We have, however, had recent representations in support of proposals by the Disability Alliance to widen the eligibility criteria for mobility allowance, specifically to assist deaf-blind people among others. These proposals are still under consideration whilst the detailed implications are being clarified in discussion with representatives of the Disability Alliance.

National Insurance

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the revenue effect of the national insurance contribution ceiling for employees being abolished for 1987-88.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that if the upper earnings limit for employees' class 1 national insurance contributions were abolished in 1987-88, but retained for the contracted out rebate, the additional contribution for the full year would be £930 million.

This figure is based on the assumptions used in the "Report by the Government Actuary on the drafts of the Social Security Benefits Up-rating (No. 2) Order 1986 and the Social Security (Contributions, Re-rating) (No. 2) Order 1986".

Post-operative Infection

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the rate of post-operative infection in each health region in 1978 and each year since.

The figures given are taken from the hospital in-patient inquiry, a 10 per cent. sample of discharges records held centrally by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. In any information of this kind which relies on local involvement and interpretation there is room for variation in recording practice and this may explain some of the variation between regions in recorded infection rates.

The Department is aware of the apparent higher incidence of post-operative infection in the South-Western regional health authority which has recently examined its data on 100 per cent. of discharges and deaths for 1982 to 1985 and found similar (though slightly lower) numbers of post-operative infection cases. However, over the four-year period the number of cases has been declining.

The South-Western regional health authority can find no ready explanation for the comparatively high level of post-operative infection recorded. It is mounting a detailed study of case notes to try to determine the reasons. The study is not yet complete, but we shall be following up the results with the RHA when they are known.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Monetary Policy

6. Mr. Cunliffe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress with the Government's monetary policy.

Mr. Lawson: The Government continue to maintain monetary conditions designed to exert steady downward pressure on inflation.

Unemployment Costs

14. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in East Anglia and the north-west.

15. Mr. Boyes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in the northern region.

Mr. Randall asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in Humberside.

42. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in Wales.

44. Mr. Fatchett asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in Yorkshire.

45. Mr. Haynes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in the east midlands.

47. Mr. Ron Davies asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in south Wales.

49. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimates of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment (a) in the south-east and (b) Greater London.

50. Mr. O'Neill asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in Scotland.

59. Mr. Fisher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in the west midlands.

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any estimate of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment in (a) the Greenock and Port Glasgow constituency, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Public Expenditure

16. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the macro-economic effects of the levels of public spending set out in the White Paper on public expenditure.

Mr. Lawson: The White Paper provides for a rise in public expenditure less than the prospective rise in gross domestic product, and thus contribute to continued steady growth with low inflation.

19. Mr. Sumberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

20. Mr. Couchman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

21. Mr. Wood asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

26. Mr. Watts asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

30. Mr. Allan Stewart asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

33. Mr. Soames asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

36. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

54. Mr. Michael Forsyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties in favour of increased public expenditure.

57. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increasing public expenditure.

73. Mr. Proctor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties for increased public expenditure.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Lawler).

31. Mr. Wareing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the increased public expenditure announced in his autumn statement is likely to be invested in the north-west of England.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not practicable to estimate the percentage of increased public expenditure likely to be spent in particular regions.

Balance of Payments

17. Mr. Straw asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his latest projections for the balance of payments in 1986-87.

Mr. MacGregor: First estimates are consistent with the autumn statement view that the current account in 1986 will be in broad balance.

Take-home Pay

18. Mr. Squire asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net take-home pay of a married man with two children on average earnings in 1978-79; and what was the comparable figure after adjusting for inflation in the current tax year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Net take-home pay for a married man on average earnings with two children is £166·83 per week in the current tax year, nearly 18 per cent. higher in real terms than in 1978-79.

Tax Revenue

22. Mr. Freud asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent the contribution from higher than expected value added tax receipts has contributed to the recent growth of tax revenues.

Mr. Brooke: About one third of the upward revision to the forecast of non-oil receipts shown in the autumn statement was due to value added tax.

23. Mr. Sackville asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of total income tax revenue was contributed by the top 10 per cent. of taxpayers in (a) 1978-79 and (b) 1985-86.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures are 34·5 per cent. and 37 per cent. respectively.

Corporation Tax

24. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the yield of corporation tax in 1978-79; and what is his estimate of the yield in the current year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figure is £3·9 billion in 1978-79. For the autumn statement, receipts in 1986-87 were forecast to be about £12·5 billion.

European Monetary System

25. Mr. Knox asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next proposes to have discussions with the European Community Council of Ministers about the monetary system.

38. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning Britain joining the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

70. Mr. Dykes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to hold further discussions with his European Economic Community counterparts on developments in the European monetary system, following the currency realignments of 12 January.

Money Supply

27. Mr. Hunter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the most recent statistics concerning money supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the 12 months to end-December MO grew by 5·2 per cent. and £M3 by 18·1 per cent.

Personal Equity Plans

28. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has received about the personal equity plan scheme since its introduction.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave earlier to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence).

39. Mr. Stevens asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the operation of the personal equity plan scheme since its introduction.

62. Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the operation of the personal equity plan scheme since its introduction.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave on 22 January 1987 at column 706 to my hon. Friend the Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Hirst).

52. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the introduction of personal equity plans.

64. Mr. Cash asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the effectiveness of the personal equity plan scheme in attracting new shareholders.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received numerous representations, most of which welcome the incentives the personal equity plan scheme provides for those buying shares for the first time.

Mr. James Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the introduction of person a equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The personal equity plan scheme has been widely welcomed.

68. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the growth of individual share ownership since the introduction of the personal equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Early indications reinforce my confidence that the personal equity plan scheme will make a significant contribution to the growth of individual share ownership.

Economic Measures

29. Mr. Hoyle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what economic measures he proposes to take in order to lessen the gulf between the north and south of the country.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government's economic policies, which have brought inflation down to the lowest levels for 20 years and a sixth successive year of economic growth, provide the best foundation for sustaining this growth in all regions of the country. Unemployment has fallen fastest over the last 12 months in Wales, the north, north-west and west midlands.

Listed Buildings

32. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the treatment of repairs and alterations to listed buildings for value added tax purposes.

Mr. Brooke: The repair and maintenance of buildings, listed or otherwise, has always been liable to VAT at the standard rate. On 1 June 1984 alteration work, previously liable at the zero rate, became standard-rated, but zero-rating was retained for approved alterations to listed buildings and scheduled monuments. This concession was widely welcomed by those concerned with the preservation of our national heritage.

Interest Rates

34. Mr. Wrigglesworth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the current level of United Kingdom short-term interest rates exceeds the average for the other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Three month interbank rates in London are about 11 per cent. The average of the three-month money market rates in other member states is around 10½ per cent., on latest data.

35. Mr. Alton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received on the levels of interest rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have received a number of representations on this subject.

40. Mr. Marland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the present level of interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton).

46. Mr. Rogers asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

66. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any proposals for seeking to reduce interest rates.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Short-term interest rates will be held at whatever levels are necessary to keep steady downward pressure on inflation.

76. Mr. Livsey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give information available to him on the average level of real interest rates for the United States of America, Germany, Japan, France and the United Kingdom for the period from January 1984 to the present.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the article in last September's Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin which discussed the difficulties involved in measuring real rates of interest, and considered recent trends.

Mortgage Interest Rates

37. Mr. Ashton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the extra cost to the Exchequer of each 1 per cent. rise in mortgage interest rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A one percentage point increase in gross mortgage interest rates would increase the cost of mortgage interest tax relief by about £400 million in a full year at 1986-87 levels. If other interest rates were also to change by a similar amount (in gross terms), the increased cost would be broadly offset by an increase in composite rate tax receipts in a full year. There would also be other effects on Government revenues.

Strip Searches

41. Mr. Madden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the strip searching of passengers by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officials at United Kingdom ports of entry.

Mr. Brooke: There have been very few representations: a small number of letters from other hon. Members during 1986 referring to particular individual cases and more recently representations from the hon. Member. I refer him to my reply to his previous questions on 16 December at columns 499 and 510.

Value Added Tax

43. Mr. Heddle asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects that the European Court's decision in respect of European Economic Community sixth directive on value added tax will be known; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The position has not changed since my answer to my hon. Friend on 4 November at column 335.

51. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of his negotiations with the European Commission on the value added tax threshold.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission has proposed a new directive on VAT and small and medium enterprises which makes reference to the VAT threshold. Discussion on this directive started in the financial questions group of the Council in November and will continue under the Belgian presidency. It is not yet possible to forecast when and in what form the directive will be agreed.

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost of extending value added tax bad debts relief (a) to all debts eligible for relief under section 130(i) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 and (b) to all unsatisfied judgment debts, indicating in each case the extent to which the cost would be affected by the proposals in his consultative document, "Value-added Tax: Small Business review", to permit smaller traders to account for value-added tax on a cash basis;

(2) what information he has concerning the increase in value added tax revenue which would occur if the standard method of reckoning gross takings were abolished as proposed in his consultative document, "Value-added Tax: Small Business Review"; and what is the number and size of traders who would be affected.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his replies, 26 January 1987, c. 185]: There is no reliable basis for accurately forecasting the cost of comprehensive relief for bad and doubtful VAT debts. The best projection that can be made suggests an additional revenue cost well in excess of £100 million a year. In addition it is estimated that up to 200 extra Customs and Excise staff would be necessary to provide a reasonable security against abuse and fraud.

Representations received from respondents to the recent consultation document suggest that, if the proposal to abolish the standard method of reckoning gross takings for users of the VAT special retail schemes were to be implemented, the benefit to the revenue could be in excess of £25 million a year. The proposal would affect only those, mainly large, traders who provide self-financed credit facilities. It would not affect the wholly cash-dealing business.

The consultative document proposal to allow certain small traders to account for VAT on a cash basis would have only a minimal effect on the revenue cost of bad debt relief.

Personal Income

48. Mr. Fallon asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers earn less than £7,000 per year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information is readily available only in respect of total income for income tax purposes. In 1986-87 it is estimated that about 7·4 million single people and married couples will pay tax on incomes under £7,000.

Consumer Spending

53. Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current levels of consumer spending.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Figures published on 22 January 1987, which include a preliminary estimate for the fourth quarter of 1986, show a real increase of about 4½ cent. in consumer expenditure in 1986 compared with the previous year.

Taxation

55. Mr. Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from political parties in favour of higher taxes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received no formal representations from such parties in favour of higher taxes.

58. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received urging an increase in the level of taxation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received some representations proposing increases in particular taxes, but, very few, if any, proposing an increase in overall tax burdens.

Tobacco Duty

56. Mr. Roger King asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue he expects to receive from tobacco duty during the current financial year; and what was the total duty received in 1985-86.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to table 9 on page 34 of the report of the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise for the year ended 31 March 1986. There is a copy in the Library of the House.

69. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the revenue yield from tobacco products in each of the years 1955-56, 1965-66, 1975-76 and 1985-86, both as a figure and as a percentage of total revenue.

Mr. Brooke: The information is as follows:

| | Tobacco revenue | Tobacco revenue as percentage of central Government taxation |
|---|---|---|
| | £ million | percentage |
| 1955-56 | 669 | 14·4 |
| 1965-66 | 1,014 | 12·2 |
| 1975-76 | [1]1,884 | 6·7 |
| 1985-86 | [1]5,374 | 5·6 |

Note:

[1] Including an estimate of VAT on sales of tobacco products.

Scotch Whisky

60. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the value of the revenue received from the sale of Scotch whisky in the years 1984, 1985 and 1986, respectively.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that the available figures for Scotch whisky do not provide the information requested. However, it is estimated that the revenue from excise duty and VAT on all spirits in 1984, 1985 and 1986 was about £1,850 million, £1,965 million and £2,025 million respectively, and that about half of this came from the sale of Scotch whisky.

Customs and Excise

61. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is satisfied that Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are able to operate and maintain its customs posts in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: Yes.

Taxation Revenue

63. Mr. Howarth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies his Department has conducted into the effect of top rate of income tax on revenue yields.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Compared with 1978-79, top taxpayers in the United Kingdom are now paying a higher proportion of the total income tax yield. The links between top tax rates and yields can now be analysed in various ways, but I am not aware of any studies in the United Kingdom that have established a quantitative relationship between them.

Small Businesses

65. Mr. Colvin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what responses have been received so far to the consultation paper on value-added tax and small businesses.

Mr. Brooke: Customs and Excise has received about 170 representations from trade and professional bodies and individual traders. In addition, over 1,200 responses have been received to the simplified question and answer leaflet sent to a random selection of 5,000 traders with annual turnovers not exceeding £100,000.

Charities

67. Mr. Ottaway asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his most recent information on the growth of giving to charities.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that no comprehensive informaton on giving to charities is available. However the available information shows that in real terms covenanted giving increased by nearly 60 per cent. from 1978 to 1985 and bequests to charities increased by 140 per cent.

Inflation

71. Mr. Amess asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the present level of inflation and the outlook on inflation for the rest of the year.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The increase in retail prices for the 12 months ending December 1986 was 3·7 per cent., an increase of 0·3 per cent. over November. The outlook for inflation to the fourth quarter of 1987 was described in the autumn statement forecast, which showed retail price inflation rising somewhat in the middle of 1987 before resuming a downward path.

Privatisation

72. Mr. Nellist asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what have been the total revenues to the Exchequer to date from the Government's privatisation programme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron).

Banking System

74. Mr. Loyden asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to change the present regulations governing the banking system.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The present regulations for the banking system are governed by the Banking Act 1979. Because of developments in banking supervision, markets and technology the Government are taking steps to ensure that the law relating to banking and banking supervision is kept up to date and strengthened where necessary. A Banking Bill covering supervisory matters is before the House at present and on 14 November 1986 I announced that there would be a review of banking services law. Regulations made under the Banking Act 1979 are also reviewed from time to time and revised where appropriate.

Income Tax

75. Mrs. Roe asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current yield of 1p on the standard rate of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue effect of a 1p change in the basic rate of income tax would be about £1·1 billion in 1987-88 and £1·45 billion in 1988-89 .

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost in the 1987-88 financial year of introducing a reduced rate band of 25p of income tax on (i) the first £750 of taxable income, (ii) the first £1,000 of taxable income and (iii) the first £1,500 of taxable income; and in each case, what would be the impact on the net income of a married man on half average earnings, three quarters average earnings, average earnings, twice average earnings, five times average earnings and 10 times average earnings;

(2) if he will report the number of taxpayers and total income tax due from each range of £1,000 between £2,000 and £12,000 and for the following ranges: £12,000 to £16,000, £16,000 to £20,000, £20,000 to £30,000 and £30,000 plus for the latest year available.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits (Revenue Gain)

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest estimates of the average revenue gain which accrues to the Exchequer when (a) a person claiming benefit gains paid work and (b) a person not claiming benefit gains paid work, giving a gross figure and indicating the amount due to the tax gained, national insurance contributions gained, reductions in benefit expenditure and any other relevant factors.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Revenue

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if, in the manner of his reply of 20 January 1986, Official Report, column 84, he will publish and update the table showing the real changes in revenue sources between 1978-79 and 1986-87;

(2) if, in the manner of his reply of 20 January 1986, Official Report, columns 83-84, he will publish and update the table on total estimated tax revenue, broken down into the headings shown for 1986-87;

(3) what was the percentage and amount of national income derived from taxation for each year since 1979, in total and broken down between taxes on income and expenditure, national insurance and rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax Relief

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the manner of his reply of 17 February 1986, Official Report, column 54, he will publish and update the tax relief figures for 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the estimated cost of providing mortgage interest tax relief in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, at 1985-86 prices, showing separately the estimated cost of mortgages previously under the option mortgage scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Currency Controls (Nigeria)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what help he has made available to British companies adversely affected by policies of the Nigerian Government relating to currency exchange controls.

Mr. John MacGregor: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

ENVIRONMENT

EC (Environmental)

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all the EC directives and sub-directives relating to environmental improvement applicable in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following is a list of the main environmental measures which have been adopted by the European Community. Information on those that are applicable in the United Kingdom can be found in "EEC Environmental Policy and Britain" by Nigel Haigh (ENDS 1984). As one of its contributions to European Year of the Environment, my Department has commissioned Mr. Haigh to bring his handbook up to date.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on student grants.

Mr. Walden: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Rhodes James).

Mr. Rhodes James asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about levels of students' grants and parental contributions for 1987-88.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Subject to Parliament's approval of the necessary regulations the main rates of student grant will be increased by 3·75 per cent., in line with the forecast rise in the retail price index. The new rates for England and Wales will be as follows (rates for 1986-87 are shown in brackets):

| | Undergraduate £ | Postgraduate £ |
|---|---|---|
| Hall or lodgings | | |
| (i) London | 2,330 (2,246) | 3,492 (3,366) |
| (ii) Elsewhere | 1,972 (1,901) | 2,859 (2,756) |
| Parental home | 1,567 (1,510) | 2,075 (2,000) |

The threshold for parental contribution, and the transitional scale points, will be raised on average by about 6·75 per cent. Parents earning a residual income of less than £9,300 will no longer be assessed for a contribution. The minimum parental contribution will be raised from £20 to £40, and the maximum for parents with more than one child in receipt of grant, from £4,300 to £4,600. The full scale is as follows:

Parental contribution scale 1987-88

| Residual income £ | Contribution £ |
|---|---|
| 9,300 | 40 |
| 9,400 | 54 |
| 9,500 | 68 |
| 10,000 | 140 |
| 11,000 | 282 |
| 11,800 | 397 |
| 11,900 | 417 |
| 12,000 | 437 |
| 13,000 | 637 |
| 14,000 | 837 |
| 15,000 | 1,037 |
| 16,000 | 1,237 |
| 17,000 | 1,437 |
| 17,300 | 1,497 |
| 17,400 | 1,522 |
| 17,500 | 1,547 |
| 18,000 | 1,672 |
| 19,000 | 1,922 |
| 20,000 | 2,172 |
| 21,000 | 2,422 |
| 22,000 | 2,672 |
| 23,000 | 2,922 |
| 24,000 | 3,172 |
| 25,000 | 3,422 |
| 26,000 | 3,672 |
| 27,000 | 3,922 |
| 28,000 | 4,172 |
| 29,000 | 4,422 |
| 29,712 | [1]4,600 |

[1] Maximun.

Notes:

1. For 1987-88 the rate of contribution is assessed at £1 in £7 for residual incomes from £9,300 to £11,800; then £1 in £5 to £17,300; then £1 in £4 in £4 thereafter. (In 1986-87 the rate of contribution was assessed at £1 in £7 from £8,700 to £11,100; then £1 in £5 to £16,200; then £1 in £4 thereafter.
2. The contribution payable may be less then the amounts shown on the scale, particularly at its top end. This will depend on the amount of grant against which the contribution has to be set and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowance for other dependent children.

Calderstones Comprehensive School, Liverpool

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will direct the Liverpool education authority under section 68 of the Education Act 1944 to consult the governors, parents and staff, in accordance with the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 before completion of the sale of the Morrison wing of Calderstones comprehensive school to a private developer.

Mr. Dunn: There is no provision in the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 requiring a local education authority to consult the governors, parents or staff of a school before parts of the school premises are taken out of use.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the sale of the Morrison wing of Calderstones comprehensive school, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received two letters from the hon. Member enclosing letters from his constituents. Calderstones comprehensive school is at present operating on a split site and I understand that the Liverpool education authority is considering the disposal of the Morrison wing in order to rationalise on to one site.

PRIME MINISTER

Primary Health Care

Mr. Dubs asked the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government will reduce inequalities in the allocation of primary health care financing by moving resources from areas such as Scotland and Northern Ireland to England.

The Prime Minister: The amount of resources provided for primary health care depends on demand for the family practitioner services and the need to develop community health services. Therefore, resources cannot be switched in the way the hon. Member suggests.

North Sea

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the division of responsibility between Departments concerning the environment of the North sea.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for co-ordinating policy on issues affecting the marine environment, including the North sea. His Department, as well as the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Transport, the Department of Energy, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Scottish Office and the Welsh Office, also have responsibility, where appropriate, for various specific aspects of the marine environment.

National Security

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report, Her Majesty's Government's definition of national security in the context of its use by Ministers.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon, Gentleman to the reply by my right hon. Friend the then Home Secretary to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 2 April 1985 at column 569.

ENERGY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Energy if contingency plans exist for the closure or running down of nuclear power stations in wartime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Contingency plans exist governing the operation of nuclear power stations in wartime. It would not be appropriate for me to reveal the details.

Babcock Power Limited

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a visit to Paisley, North to inspect power station manufacturing equipment at Babcock Power Limited.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend and I would be pleased to consider such a visit, should we receive an invitation.

Wylfa Power Station

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the current spare storage capacity of the irradiated fuel storage vaults at Wylfa, and the date by which these vaults will be filled presuming normal operation of the station;

(2) why repairs to the damaged flask-handling crane at Wylfa nuclear power station have not been completed; when it was decided to obtain a replacement crane; and when this replacement crane must be operational in order to prevent closure of the station.

Mr. Goodlad: I have asked the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to write to the hon. Member.

Irradiated Fuel Stores

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Energy what is the volume of the spare storage capacity of the irradiated fuel stores at a nuclear facility at which the nuclear installations inspectorate considers that it will be necessary to close down the station.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive that it expects sufficient storage capacity to be kept available at a nuclear power station so that an irradiated defective channel of fuel could be discharged immediately from a reactor.

Sizewell

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if, in the light of recommendation 4(f) of the report on the Sizewell public inquiry by Sir Frank Layfield, concerning the production of a consultative document as a matter of high priority, he will state his policy on waiting for the outcome of any such consultative initiatives before making a decision on the Sizewell consent application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has a quasi-judicial role in respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board's application to construct Sizewell B. It would not be proper for him to comment on the inspector's report, including the recommendations, before he has taken his decision.

Sellafield

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether the new regime at Sellafield foreshadowed in June 1986 has now been instituted.

Mr. Goodlad: The new regime was instituted last month though, as I stated in June, Euratom inspectors have had access to all civil material at Sellafield since March last year. Under the new regime, it will be necessary for a time for certain quantities of residues containing plutonium to be removed temporarily from safeguards for treatment by specialised equipment in non-civil plant. These are purely technical movements which are necessary for safety reasons. All of the material will be returned to safeguards after treatment.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

International Year of Shelter for the Homeless

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department has considered an application for an exhibition relating to the United Nations International Year of Shelter for the Homeless to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Chris Patten: Yes. My hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) will be opening the exhibition on 9 February.

Overseas Development Administration

Mr. Whitney asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any change has been agreed in provision for the Overseas Development Administration in 1986-87.

Mr. Chris Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the spring supplementary estimate, the cash limit for the overseas aid vote (class II, vote 5) will be increased to £1,064,998,000. The change allows for agreed carry-over of aid programme underspending in 1985-86 and other adjustments. Subject to parliamentary approval, the cash limit on the overseas aid administration vote (class II, vote 6) will also be increased, to £27,312,000, to meet necessary capital expenditure on a computerised management information system. The increases do not add to the planned total of public expenditure in 1986-87.

WALES

Service Sector

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the net gain or loss of jobs in the service sector in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales since 1983 to the latest date for which such figures are available.

Mr. Edwards: The latest estimates by the Department of Employment of the number of employees in employment indicate a net gain of 2,000 jobs in the service sector in Wales between June 1983 and June 1986. These estimates are not available below the Wales level.

Manufacturing Job Losses

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been lost in the manufacturing sector in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales since (i) 1979 and (ii) 1983.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Comprehensive information regarding the latest number of jobs lost in the manufacturing sector is not available. The latest Department of Employment estimates for employees in employment in Wales indicate that there were 112,000 fewer jobs in June 1986 than in June 1979. The comparable loss between June 1983 and June 1986 is 11,000.

Although equivalent information is not available for Clwyd, results of my Department's regional data system (which largely relate to the previous, 1968, definition of manufacturing and to companies of more than 10 employees) indicate that there was a fall of about 11,000 in the numbers employed in the establishments covered between 1979 and 1983, and a rise of over 1,500 in the period 1983 to the latest available date, which may vary a little because of the timing of reports from the establishments concerned.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the most recent figure for output in the Welsh manufacturing industry; and what was the comparable figure for the same month seven years ago.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Changes in the levels of output of Welsh manufacturing industry are measured by the "Index of Production and Construction for Wales", (1980 = 100), which is published in a quarterly press notice and is available in the Library. The most recent results available indicate that in the third quarter of 1986 the manufacturing index stood at 107·0, compared with 110·0 on a comparable basis in the third quarter of 1979.

In-Service Teacher Training

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has yet determined the allocations of specific grant to the local authorities in Wales for in-service teacher training in 1987-88; and what improvements he expects as a result of the new arrangements which he is introducing.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In September 1986 the local education authorities in Wales were invited to submit details of their programmes of in-service teacher training for 1986-87. At the same time the authorities were given indicative allocations of grant ceilings against which to bid. All the authorities have submitted proposals for in-service training involving expenditure equalling or exceeding the indicative allocations. After considering these proposals, and in the light of advice from Her Majesty's inspectorate, I have decided that grant should be provided on the basis of the indicative allocation of £11·86 million aided expenditure for the scheme. I intend to confirm the allocations to each authority after regulations have been laid before Parliament and come into force.

This is a major new scheme for the professional development of teachers, leading to a more effective and properly planned system of training for the education service. The aided expenditure for 1987-88 represents and increse of 19 per cent. over the estimated expenditure on in-service training in the current year. I am pleased that local authorities have responded positively: they intend to spend £13·5 million on in-service training next year compared with £9·96 million this year. This is a major step towards ensuring that teachers' access to training will no longer depend on the part of the country in which they work.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General whether the Director of Public Prosecutions will initiate a prosecution under the terms of the Data Protection Act for the unauthorised disclosure of personal data from the Police National Computer to private detectives by a police officer in Essex constabulary, discovered during the police investigation of the bugging of the director of Comet Electricals in November 1986; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Inquiries are continuing into allegations of unauthorised disclosure of personal data from the police national computer. A decision as to the institution of criminal proceedings will be made when the inquiries are complete.

Prosecution Policy

Mr. Cohen asked the Attorney-General what is his policy towards prosecutions under the Official Secrets Acts as opposed to the Data Protection Act in cases where a prosecution under either Act appears justified; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions will consider each case on its own facts and merits, and he will institute criminal proceedings whenever they are justified under the provision which is most appropriate in the circumstances.

Immigration (Electronic Data System Limited)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions proposes to take in the case of alleged infringement of immigration rules by Electronic Data System Limited.

The Attorney-General: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wales (Crime Statistics)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing for each year from 1979 to 1986 inclusive, the number of incidents of crime reported within the north Wales police area, the average number of police constables working in this area for those years and the number of incidents per police constable arising from these figures for each year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of offences recorded by the police in the north Wales police force area is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.4 of the 1985 edition, Cmnd. 10.) The number of police officers working in the north Wales police force area is published in the annual report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, appendix 7 of the edition for 1985.

Burial

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any recent representations from local authorities in support of amending the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1926 to permit under certain circumstances the burial of bodies without the delivery of a registration certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received a letter from my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill), together with a letter from Bournemouth borough council and a local maternity service manager. The possibility of amending the legislation which controls the disposal of human remains which are not at present registrable will be considered further depending on the parliamentary progress of the Infant Life Preservation Bill.

Police Discipline (Access to Witnesses)

Sir Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he is taking to draw to the attention of chief police officers the judgment of the High Court in the case of R. v. the Chief Constable of North Wales ex parte Connah, that it was contrary to natural justice that this accused police sergeant and his representatives were denied access to police witnesses who might assist in the preparation of his defence against discipline charges unless a senior officer was also present;

(2) if he will place in the Library a transcript of the 17 November 1986 judgment of Lord Justice Johnson and Mr. Justice Peter Pain in the case of R. v. Chief Constable of North Wales ex parte Connah; and when and how he proposes to amend his guidance regarding police discipline regulations so as to incorporate the findings of the judicial review.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have today placed a copy of the judgment in the Library. The court limited the effect of their judgment to the facts of the case of Sergeant Connah. We shall, however consider whether the judgment needs to be brought to the attention of all chief constables through an amendment to the guidance to chief officers on complaints and discipline procedures.

Crime

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further proposals he has for seeking to combat crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall continue to combat crime by a range of measures to promote the involvement of the community in crime prevention, to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the criminal justice system and to increase the resources available to the police. The Home Office standing conference on crime prevention has recently established working groups to consider juvenile crime, publicity on child abuse, and young people and alcohol. Demonstration projects to tackle the problem of alcohol-related crime in city centres are being set up. The Criminal Justice Bill includes measures to strengthen investigatory powers in major fraud cases and to increase the powers of the courts to confiscate the proceeds of crime. Further details of the Government's strategy may be found in the revised edition of "Criminal Justice: A Working Paper", a copy of which is in the Library.

Non-custodial Sentences

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the initiatives being taken to strengthen the range of non-custodial options available for dealing with offenders.

Mr. Mellor: The maintenance and development of a wide range of non-custodial options is a fundamental part of the Government's criminal justice strategy. Since 1979 we have taken a number of steps to increase the range of alternatives to imprisonment and their value to the courts: for example, by extending community service orders to 16-year-olds and by strengthening the probation order. Our main aim is to increase the courts' confidence in and use of existing measures, including the fine.

Crimes of Violence

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of crimes of violence against the person in Wales in the 12 months ended March 1979 and the most recent 12 months for which such figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: Numbers of notifiable offences recorded in police force areas are published each year in the Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.5 of the issue for 1985). Police in Wales recorded 4,810 offences of violence against the person in the 12 months ending March 1979, compared with 6,910 in the 12 months ending September 1986.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of the penalties exacted by wheel-clamping is retained by the Metropolitan police; how many clamps were imposed in London during the month of December 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All receipts from charges for wheel-clamping are retained by the Metropolitan police and used to offset the costs of clamping, including the payment of contractors and staff costs. A total of 8,187 vehicles were wheel-clamped during December 1986.

Dundee (Immigration)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officials are employed in connection with duties at the port of Dundee; and what steps he is taking to ensure they are equipped to deal with increased activity at the port.

Mr. Waddington: Customs officers stationed at Dundee act as immigration officers and are able to call upon the assistance of five immigration officers at Edinburgh airport as required. Operational requirements are regularly reviewed.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether officials from his Department have been in touch with Dundee district council's environmental health convener, or environmental health department officials at Dundee regarding the stowaways on board the jute vessel "Banglar Robi"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: No. Immigration officers did not go on board the "Banglar Robi" until some time after the suspected stowaways were detained ashore.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on current work being undertaken for his Department by Electronic Data Systems.

Mr. Hurd: No work is at present being undertaken for the Home Office by Electronic Data Systems.

Nuclear Safety

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Avon and Somerset as to what items of equipment relevant to an incident involving radioactivity are available from stores located in Avon and Somerset for use by police and the Avon and Somerset constabulary: what number of (a) personal dosimeters, (b) other radiation meters, (c) sets of protective clothing and (d) breathing units, are available from such stores; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Avon and Somerset as to what training facilities are used by the Avon and Somerset constabulary for courses in dealing with incidents involving radioactivity; what number of officers have attended such courses in each of the last five years; what training is given in the use of relevant equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1987, c. 358]: Officers of Avon and Somerset constabulary are trained in the effects of radiation during initial training. Further training is given to senior officers. The force plan for major incidents covers a wide range of civil emergencies, including those involving radioactivity. It is exercised at least once a year. Avon and Somerset constabulary holds some 12 dosimeters and 694 radiac survey meters (PDRM 82s); protective equipment and breathing apparatus is held by Avon and Somerset fire brigade. Further equipment and professional advice is available as set out in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities (a copy is in the Library).

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of north Wales on the items of equipment available for police use in an accident involving radioactive contamination at (a) A division (Caernarfon), (b) B division (Llandudno), (c) C division (Prestatyn) and (d) D division (Wrexham) of the north Wales police, listing in each case the number of (i) dosimeters, (ii) radiac survey meters, (iii) sets of protective clothing, (iv) breathing units and (v) decontamination units;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of north Wales on what training the police in (a) A division (Caernarfon), (b) B division (Llandudno), (c) C division (Prestatyn) and (d) D division (Wrexham) of the north Wales police have received to deal with accidents involving radioactivity; what regular exercises the division carries out to deal with such accidents; and at what intervals such exercises take place;

(3) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of North Wales on what exercises have taken place over the past five years to prepare the police of the north Wales constabulary for (a) an accident involving radioactive contamination and (b) evacuation of the population in the event of the worst case of nuclear reactor disaster under adverse meteorological conditions; and if he will list in each case which units participated.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [pursuant to his reply, 13 January 1987, c. 148-49]: Officers of the north Wales police are trained in the effects of radioactivity during initial training. Officers of A and B divisions take part in exercises with the CEGB at Trawsfynydd and Wylfa. In the last five years there have been five annual exercises at each site and two broader exercises. All exercise scenarios include radioactive contamination. The force reviews annually plans for evacuation of areas around the sites. North Wales police hold centrally 12 dosimeters and 780 radiac survey meters (PDRM 82s). A division holds 30 breathing units and B division 40. Further equipment and professional advice is available as set out in the emergency planning guidance to local authorities (a copy is in the Library).

Income Tax

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost in terms of revenue forgone if the maximum annual amount of income tax payable by any individual taxpayer, counting husbands and wives separately, were £100,000 or 40 per cent. of gross taxable income.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost would be about £450 million at 1986-87 income levels. This estimate makes no allowance for possible behavioural changes.

Mr. Pike asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the cost to the Treasury of a cut in income tax basic rate of one penny.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue cost would be about £1·1 billion in 1987-88 and £1·45 billion in 1988-89.

Mr. Chapman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the loss of revenue in 1987-88 if (a) the basic rate of income tax was to be reduced by 2 per cent. and (b) the threshold for income tax liability was increased by 10 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue costs in 1987-88 would be about £2·2 billion and £1·8 billion, respectively.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 19 December 1986, Official Report, column 740, to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury, in relation to the table of tax units receiving mortgage interest relief in 1986-87, he will account for (a) the increase from 1985-86 in those with total income of under £4,000 p.a. receiving mortgage relief from 500,000 to 690,000, and the increase in the average value of this relief from £110 to £350, (b) the increase from 1985[illegible]those with total income over £20,000 p.a. receiving mortgage relief from 900,000 to 1,100,000, whilst the total cost of such relief has fallen from £1 billion to £970 million and (c) the factors involved in the fall in the total cost of relief from £4·75 billion to £4·5 billion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I assume that the hon. Member is comparing the information supplied in my answer to him of 19 December 1986, at column 740, with that given to the hon. Members for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald), for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) and Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 9 April 1986, at columns 125-26.

The information provided for 1985-86 in April 1986 was based on projections of the 1983 family expenditure survey and the 1983-84 survey of personal incomes. The estimates were therefore subject to a considerable amount of error. Also, I regret that the analysis incorrectly allocated the small proportion of mortgage interest relief received by non-taxpayers; this mainly affected the estimates for the lowest ranges of income.

Revised estimates for 1985-86, based on the 1985 family expenditure survey and projections from the 1984-85 survey of personal incomes are given in the table. These estimates are consistent with those for 1986-87, supplied on 19 December 1986. But they, like those [illegible] 1986-87, remain provisional.

Compared with the information supplied in the answer of 19 December 1986:

a. the average relief per mortgagor for those tax units with total incomes under £4,000 per year remained almost unchanged between 1985-86 and 1986-87, being estimated at £360 in 1985-86 and £350 in 1986-87.

b. the numbers with total incomes over £20,000 per year, receiving mortgage interest relief, increased from 940,000 in 1985-86 to 1,100,000 in 1986-87, while the total cost of relief to these tax units increased from £910 million to £970 million. In this range, therefore, the average relief per mortgagor fell from £970 in 1985-86 to £880 in 1986-87. This fall reflects the reduction in average interest rates (from 13·25 per cent. in 1985-86 to 11·5 per cent. assumed for 1986-87), which was partly offset by growth in the amount of interest eligible for relief below the ceiling of £30,000.

c. the estimate of the total cost of relief is now £4·5 billion in both 1985-86 and 1986-87. The esimate for 1985-86 has been revised from £4·75 billion, following improvements to methods of projecting amounts of mortgages outstanding.

Tax units[1] receiving mortgage interest relief by range of total income—1985-86

| Range of total income | Numbers receiving mortgage relief[2] ('000) | Average value of relief per mortgagor (£) | Total cost of relief (£ million) | Percentage of total cost (per cent.) |

[1] single persons and married couples.

[2] including about 500,000 non-taxpayers.

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing the estimated cost of providing mortgage interest tax relief in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88, at 1985-86 prices, showing separately the estimated cost of mortgages previously under the option mortgage scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: Information for 1985-86 and 1986-87 is in the table. It would be premature to provide an estimate for 1987-88, since the cost will depend on the amounts of mortgate lending and interest rates as well as on the 1987-88 income tax rates and bands. It is not possible to distinguish the cost of relief for those mortgages which were previously under the option mortgage scheme:

Estimated cost of mortgage interest relief (£ million)

|---|---|---|
| 1985-86 | 4,500 | 4,500 |
| 1986-87 | 4,500 | 4,370 |

Pensions

Mr. Clay asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will update the figures relating to the direct revenue costs of tax relief on pension contributions on the same basis as his reply of 3 May 1985 to the hon. Member for Oldham, West, (Mr. Meacher) Official Report, columns 255-7.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information, including later estimates for 1984-85, is as follows:

Direct revenue cost in full year

| | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 |
|---|---|---|---|
| | | | £ million |
| Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes | 1,100 | 1,200 | 1,300 |
| Employers' contributions to occupational pension schemes allowed as a charge against profits for corporation tax purposes[1] | 1,900 | 1,900 | 1,900 |
| Investment income of occupational pension funds (assuming relief at the basic rate) | 3,400 | 3,800 | 4,600 |
| Lump sum payments to pensioners (assuming relief at the basic rate) | 1,000 | 1,100 | 1,100 |

[1] These estimates are particularly tentative.

Government Data Network (System Requirements)

Mr. Warren asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer why the "Statement of System Requirement" for Her Majesty's Government's data network, issued to five United Kingdom foreign bidders by the CCTA, cannot be made generally available to interested parties.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 28 January 1987.

Customs Staff (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs staff are employed at Dundee; and if he is satisfied that their numbers are adequate to deal with increased activity at the port of Dundee.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Territorial Expenditure

Mr. Dewar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table for each of the years 1979-80 to 1989-90 showing territorial spending by function in terms identical to those used for 1985-86 in table 2.12 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 16 December, at columns 488-98. This contains information for the period 1981-82 to 1985-86; figures for later years are not available.

Mr. Dewar asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table comparable to table 2.12 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper distinguishing for each function (a) expenditure falling within each territorial Secretary of State's block and (b) expenditure falling outside the block for (i) Scotland and (ii) Wales giving in each case the amount of expenditure in England which is judged to be "comparable expenditure" for the purpose of determining the size of each block.

Mr. MacGregor: I refer the hon. Member to table 6 in the answer that I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 16 December, at columns 488-98. This showed expenditure in Scotland and Wales under the responsibility of the respective Secretaries of State. Figures for block expenditure are not readily available in the form requested.

Exchange Controls (Nigeria)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what help he has made available to British companies adversely affected by policies of the Nigerian Government relating to currency exchange controls.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on Thursday 29 January.

Incomes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing tax and national insurance contributions less child benefit, where appropriate, for 1986-87, and comparable figures for 1985-86 and 1978-79, with the multiples of average earnings as half, two-thirds, one, five and 10 times for (a) a married couple, with part-time working spouse, (b) a married couple plus two children, with part-time working spouse, and (c) a single person.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 20 January 1987, c. 496-70]: The following table shows (a) income tax plus national insurance contributions less child benefit at current prices and (b) income tax plus national insurance contributions less child benefit as a percentage of gross income. The calculations assume that the taxpayer has no reliefs other than the appropriate personal allowances and that national insurance contributions are at the contracted-in rate. Average earnings are those for full-time males and part-time females paid at adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence. Figures for 1986-87 are provisional.

Tax Revenue

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage and amount of national income derived from taxation for each year since 1979, in total and broken down between taxes on income and expenditure, national insurance and rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: Following is the information:

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the manner of his reply of 20 January 1986, Official Report, c. 83-84, he will publish and update the table on total estimates tax revenue, broken down into the headings shown for 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: Estimates based on the autumn statement forecast for 1986-87 are given in the table below. The definitions used for non-North sea corporation tax and taxes on expenditure differ slightly from those used in the table in the Official Report of 20 January 1986, c. 83-84, but are consistent with the forecasts published in the 1986-87 Financial Statement and Budget Report, table 1.2

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the manner of his reply of 20 January 1986, Official Report, c. 84, he will publish and update the table showing the real changes in revenue sources between 1978-79 and 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: Estimates based on the autumn statement forecast for 1986-87 are given in the table. The definitions used for non-North sea corporation tax and taxes on expenditure differ slightly from those used in the table in the Official Report of 20 January 1986, c. 83-84, but are consistent with the forecasts published in the 1986-87 Financial Statement and Budget Report, table 1.2

AIDS

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries now normally require British citizens to possess a recent AIDS-free certificate or similar documentation before issuing a work permit or allowing entry.

Mr. Eggar: According to the most recent information available to me, Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Iraq and Qatar now normally require such documentation from British and other foreign nationals applying for residence, and India and Finland require it from overseas students.

Dr. Frank Bertrand

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made on behalf of Dr. Frank Bertrand in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: When Dr. Bertrand was first imprisoned in 1981 he was a dual British-Zimbabwean national and we had no standing under the terms of the Vienna convention on consular relations to intervene formally on his behalf in the country of his second nationality. However, since Dr. Bertrand renounced Zimbabwean nationality in 1985 a consular official has visited him regularly and has raised any problems, particularly on health, with the authorities. The most recent visit was on 14 January.

The High Commission has also assisted Mrs. Bertrand in her active representations to secure her husband's release. We understand that a plea for clemency on behalf of her husband was recently delivered to the Zimbabwean authorities. The High Commission has expressed to the authorities its support for this plea and the hope that it will be treated sympathetically.

Diplomats (Prosecutions)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many prosecutions were conducted during the past five years against foreign diplomats for committing rape or indecent assault on young children; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many foreign diplomats over the past five years claimed diplomatic immunity when faced with prosecution for committing indecent assault against young children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: In the past five years no prosecutions took place against foreign diplomats for committing rape or indecent assault on young children. In no such case did diplomatic immunity prevent a prosecution.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present, five meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for February.

The Economic and Finance Council will discuss on 9 February the economic situation in the Community, and the Community position on tied aid financing in preparation for forthcoming discussions in the OECD.

The Agricultural Council is expected to meet on 9-10 February. Among the subjects likely to be discussed are the Commission's 1987 price-fixing proposals and its proposals for sociostructural measures.

The Foreign Affairs Council will meet on 16-17 February. The Council will discuss EC-Japan trade relations and consider progress on Japanese discrimination against imported alcoholic drinks; and Commission proposals for generation of financial protocols for some of the Community's preferential partners. The council may discuss the Commission's proposals for a system of compensation for loss of exports earnings (Compex) for least developed countries not signatory to the Lomé convention. It may also need to discuss any remaining problems in the enlargement dispute between the Community and the United States.

The Fisheries Council is expected to meet on 23 February and may discuss research and development and autonomous tariff quotas for certain species.

The Internal Market Council will meet on 24 February to discuss a number [illegible] measures in the rolling action programme for completing the internal market.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all overseas official delegations or Government-sponsored individuals or parties who visited the United Kingdom during the months of May, June and July 1986, stating in each case the purpose of the visit.

Mr. Eggar: Visitors for whom the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has responsibility fall into two categories: first, guests of Her Majesty's Government, including Heads of State and Government and Foreign Ministers, who are invited in furtherance of Her Majesty's Government's foreign policy objectives; and secondly, visitors invited under the Foreign and Commonwealth Office sponsored visitors scheme. The purpose of this scheme is to enable influential personalities from overseas to obtain first-hand impressions of British policies and achievements.

I will write to the hon. Member with the list of names; more than 600 visitors came, under both categories, in the period concerned.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 22 January, Official Report, column 670, which relations of diplomatic staff other than spouses and children under 18 years may be regarded as enjoying immunity from criminal jurisdiction; and if he will specify the exceptional circumstances involved.

Mr. Eggar: We look carefully at suggestions that anyone outside the normal categories should be regarded as having diplomatic immunity. Our practice is as set out in paragraph 25 of the White Paper "Diplomatic Immunities and Privileges" (Cmnd. 9497).

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report such information as is readily available to him on refusals by foreign Governments to waive diplomatic immunity in respect of legal proceedings against their officials for alleged serious criminal offences.

Mr. Eggar: We have no direct information on the policy of overseas Governments concerning waivers. Our experience suggests that it is infrequent for overseas Governments to waive immunity for the purpose described in the question. Waivers are, however, often granted to enable diplomats to appear in court as witnesses.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, East on 27 January, if he will provide a breakdown of the 77 offences relating to cars with diplomatic registration in 1986, by type of offence and by country.

Mr. Eggar: Twenty-three of the alleged offences were for drinking and driving. The remainder were reported as minor offences (the largest single category was driving without due care and attention) under the various Road Traffic Acts and regulations.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Tobacco Industry

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance was given to tobacco companies under the various industry Acts in England, Scotland and Wales, respectively, in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The following assistance has been provided under the Industrial Development Act 1982 (as amended) to tobacco companies in England, Scotland and Wales in the calendar year to 31 December 1986:

Regional Selective Assistance
  Section 7
    A single grant of £200,000 made to a company in Scotland (no payments were made to tobacco companies in England and Wales).
  Section 8
    No payments made.

New Regional Development Grant
    No payments made.

Old Regional Development Grant
    No separate details available.

Prior Harwin

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when his Department first commenced its current investigations into the affairs of Prior Harwin;

(2) if his Department was aware as at 15 December 1986 that Prior Harwin had set out to attract trading in British Gas shares;

(3) if his Department's investigations were sufficiently advanced by 15 December 1986 to have justified suspending the trading activities of Prior Harwin on that date.

Mr. Howard: Inquiries under section 447 of the Companies Act 1985 into Prior Harwin plc and Prior Harwin Securities Limited began on 1 August 1986. At 15 December 1986, my Department was aware that Prior Harwin Securities Limited had set out to attract trading in British Gas shares. Action was taken to present a petition for the winding up of both companies and for the appointment of the Official Receiver as provisional liquidator as soon as sufficient information and legal advice was available to support such a serious step.

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many traders in British Gas shares now rank as unsecured creditors of Prior Harwin; and how much in total is their unsecured claim.

Mr. Howard: The Official Receiver was appointed as provisional liquidator on 22 December 1986; he has so far been notified of 796 possible claims amounting to £731,000 relating to potential purchases of British Gas shares.

Reed Corrugated Papers

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to reply to the letter dated 20 January from the hon. Member for Monklands, West concerning the problem raised by Reed Corrugated Papers, Coatbridge.

Mr. Alan Clark: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Time Sharing

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how his Department will be distributing the consumer advice leaflets on time sharing published on 27 January;

(2) how many consumer advice leaflets on time sharing have been printed by his Department for distribution;

(3) if he will name the three trade associations covering most United Kingdom developers mentioned in his reply to the right hon. Member for Bristol, South on 27 January.

Mr. Howard: Initially, 100,000 consumer advice leaflets on time sharing were printed, and heavy demand may make a reprint necessary shortly. They have been distributed to Citizens Advice Bureaux, Trading Standards Departments, public libraries, airport information centres and British consular offices in several holiday countries. Copies have also been sent to other interested organisations and trade associations, including those representing the travel and the time share industries.

The three major United Kingdom trade associations in the time share industry, to which I referred in my answer to the hon. Member on 27 January, are the British property Timeshare Association, the European Holiday Timeshare Association and the Timeshare Developers Group.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Housing Executive

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, on what grounds two members of staff of the Housing Executive were threatened with disciplinary action for being associated with the Fair Employment Trust.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, but I understand from the chairman that no threats of disciplinary action were made to the two members of staff for being associated with the Fair Employment Trust.

SCOTLAND

M80 (Stepps and Haggs)

Mr. Norman Hogg asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has determined the line of route for the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The first part of a consultation report on alternative routes for the proposed motorway has been received by the Scottish Development Department and is being considered. The final part of the report is expected shortly. The preferred route will then be selected and draft orders will be published as soon as possible.

Schools (Assessment of Achievement)

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what reports he has received on the continuing programme of research sponsored by his Department on the assessment of achievement in schools.

Mr. John MacKay: Two research reports have been presented to my right hon. and learned Friend and myself, one concerning performance in mathematics and the other performance in English language, both at primary 4, primary 7 and secondary 2. I have placed synopses of both reports in the Libraries of both Houses, along with a newsletter setting out the main purposes of the programme and its progress to date.

The aims of the programme are:

i. to provide information on what pupils know and can do at selected stages in their education in certain curricular areas judged to be of fundamental importance;

ii. to provide comparisons of standards of performance over time, by repeating tests at intervals where possible;

iii. to investigate ways in which the findings can be used nationally, by education authorities, by curriculum developers and by teachers, to evaluate and develop educational policy and to improve learning and teaching.

The first two reports have successfully fulfilled these aims and will, I believe, promote better standards of teaching and learning in our schools.

The main findings on both mathematics and English were that in general pupils, at each stage of education tested, demonstrated appropriate competence in most of the tasks set for them. At each consecutive stage pupils were capable of undertaking the wider range of tasks and more complex problems expected of them.

Earlier studies were conducted in mathematics in 1978 and reading comprehension in 1971. Comparison with these studies has shown that generally the performance of pupils at all three stages has been maintained since 1978 for mathematics and since 1971 for reading comprehension.

The findings of the first stage of the mathematics project have been drawn to the attention of education authorities in the form of folders of notes for use in teacher training. Copies of the folders have also been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Similar steps will be taken in the near future to disseminate the findings of the English language project.

Woodlands (Conservation)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what advice is given or conditions attached prior to the approval of plans of operation for private woodlands, in respect of nesting periods of birds and conservation in general, by the Forestry Commission;

(2) what advice is now given or conditions attached by the Forestry Commission, prior to the approval of felling licences, in respect of nesting periods of birds and conservation in general.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission seeks to ensure that forestry operations approved in plans of operations and felling licences are compatible with the environment. Woodland owners generally adopt a responsible attitude towards the need to minimise disturbance to nesting birds during felling operations. It is not usually felt necessary, therefore, to introduce specific conditions for this purpose in plans of operations or felling licences, although this would be done in respect of woodlands in SSSIs if the Nature Conservancy Council asked for it.

Comprehensive advice on good environmental practice, including the protection of nesting birds, is available to private woodland owners in the "Forestry and Woodland Code" published by Timber Growers UK.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice the Forestry Commission now gives to landowners with private woodlands arising from the Wildlife and Countryside (Amendment) Act 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the Forestry Commission's policy, before commencing consultations on forestry grant and felling applications, to try to ensure that they are sensibly drawn on silvicultural, land use, nature conservation or landscape grounds. Where necessary, the commission will return an application with suggestions as to how it might be modified in order to achieve an acceptable standard. The commission therefore encourages applicants to take care to see that adequate information about their planting or felling proposals is given and that in framing their proposals sufficient account is taken of amenity and conservation considerations, especially in areas designated for their landscape or conservation value.

Higher Education

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students were undertaking full-time courses of higher education in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Total Students in Full-Time Higher Education in Scotland

| Academic year beginning | |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 68,800 |
| 1980 | 72,700 |
| 1981 | 74,400 |

Public Expenditure

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to publish the 1987 volume of his Department's document, "Public Expenditure to 1989-90: a Commentary on the Scotland Programme."

Mr. Rifkind: I expect to publish "Public Expenditure to 1989-90: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme" on Wednesday 18 February. As in previous years, I shall arrange for a copy to be sent to all Scottish Members. Copies will also be placed in the Library.

Urban Aid

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money his Department has made available to each Scottish regional authority in the form of urban aid in each of the last five years for which records are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is set out in the table.

2. No expenditure has been incurred in this period by Borders regional council, nor by Dumfries and Galloway regional council.
3. Figures for 1986-87 are estimated.

Education Budget

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing (a) the total education budget for each year since 1979 expressed as actual outturn expenditure for each year on a constant 1986-87 prices base and (b) the proportion of that total allocated in each year to (i) school teachers' salaries, (ii) adult education, (iii) adult education staff salaries and (iv) the Workers Educational Association.

Mr. Rifkind: No separate information is held on resources allocated to adult education which will constitute an element of many parts of my education programme. The information requested which is available is as follows:

| | 1979-80 | 1980-81 | 1981-82 | 1982-83 | 1983-84 | 1984-85 | 1985-86[2] |

[2] Estimated outturn.

Food Aid

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much European Economic Community intervention fund food is to be distributed in Scotland; what individual foods are included in the total; and in what quantities.

Mr. Rifkind: Arrangements are being made for distribution of butter, beef, milk and certain milk products. The amounts of food to be distributed will depend on the needs established by the charitable organisations.

Mr. Dewar: asked the Secretary of State for Scotland who will be responsible for the distribution in Scotland of European Economic Community intervention fund food; and how much of each individual type of food will be distributed to each region.

Mr. Rifkind: The following charitable organisations have agreed to co-operate in arranging the distribution of free food in Scotland:

Salvation Army
Women's Royal Voluntary Service

Age Concern Scotland
Royal British Legion Scotland
Help the Aged
British Red Cross
Church of Scotland Board of Social Responsibility
Catholic Social Care Commission

The amounts of each individual food distributed in each region will depend on the needs established by the charitable organisations, and cannot yet be estimated.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the United Kingdom allocation of European Economic Community intervention fund foods will be distributed in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Funds are not being allocated to individual member states or regions. The relationship of expenditure in Scotland to that in other regions of the United Kingdom will depend on the eventual uptake by the charitable organisations concerned in each region.

Student Support

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total cost to the Scottish Education Department of (a) student grants and (b) student tuition fees in each year since 1979 expressed in (i) cash terms and (ii) real terms on a constant 1986-87 base.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not yet available in the form requested. The cost to the Scottish Education Department of students' maintenance allowances and tuition fees in cash terms, and in real terms on a constant 1985-86 base was as follows:

| Academic year | Maintenance allowances (including reimbursement of travelling expenses) | | Tuition, etc fees | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Actual £ million | At 1985-86 prices £ million | Actual £ million | At 1985-86 prices £ million |
| 1979-80 | 52·9 | 80·8 | 33·1 | 50·6 |
| 1980-81 | 63·7 | 84·5 | 43·1 | 57·2 |
| 1981-82 | 68·4 | 83·8 | 52·2 | 63·9 |
| 1982-83 | 64·6 | 74·4 | 34·5 | 39·7 |
| 1983-84 | 70·9 | 78·4 | 30·1 | 33·3 |
| 1984-85 | 68·2 | 72·0 | 31·2 | 32·9 |
| 1985-86 | [1]66·8 | 66·8 | [1]32·5 | 32·5 |

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

(1) In session 1982-83 the rate of tuition fees was reduced.

(2) 1985-86 price equivalents are based on the average GDP deflator for the first quarter of each year (mid-academic session).

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report figures showing the maintenance element of student grants in 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay [pursuant to his reply, 19 January 1987, c. 397]: I propose to increase main rates of allowances by about 3·75 per cent. in session 1987-88. The new rates for Scottish students will be as follows (rates for 1986-87 are shown in brackets):

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Student in parental home | 1,442 (1,390) |
| Student living away from home | |
| outside London | 1,915 (1,846) |
| in London | 2,273 (2,191) |

Students in receipt of maintenance allowances will be eligible for reimbursement of travelling expenses in excess of £52 included in the main rates.

The threshold for parental contributions, and the transitional scale points, will be raised on average by about 6·75 per cent. Parents earning a residual income of less than £9,300 will no longer be assessed for a contribution. The minimum parental contribution will be raised from £20 to £40, and the maximum, for parents with more than one child in receipt of grants, from £4,300 to £4,600. The scale is as follows:

Parental contribution scale 1987-88

| Residual income £ | Contribution £ |
|---|---|
| 8,700 | — |
| 9,000 | — |
| 9,300 | 40 |
| 9,400 | 54 |
| 9,500 | 68 |
| 10,000 | 140 |
| 11,000 | 282 |
| 11,800 | 397 |
| 11,900 | 417 |
| 12,000 | 437 |
| 13,000 | 637 |
| 14,000 | 837 |
| 15,000 | 1,037 |
| 16,000 | 1,237 |
| 17,000 | 1,437 |
| 17,300 | 1,497 |
| 17,400 | 1,522 |
| 17,500 | 1,547 |
| 18,000 | 1,672 |
| 19,000 | 1,922 |
| 20,000 | 2,172 |
| 21,000 | 2,422 |
| 22,000 | 2,672 |
| 23,000 | 2,922 |
| 24,000 | 3,172 |
| 25,000 | 3,422 |
| 26,000 | 3,672 |
| 27,000 | 3,922 |
| 28,000 | 4,172 |
| 29,000 | 4,422 |
| 29,712 | [1]4,600 |

[1] Maximum.

Notes:

1. For 1987-88 the rate of contribution is assessed at £1 in £7 for residual incomes from £9,300 to £11,800; then £1 in £5 to £17,300; then £1 in £4 thereafter. (In 1986-87 the rate of contribution was assessed at £1 in £7 from £8,700 to £11,100; then £1 in £5 to £16,200; then £1 in £4 thereafter.)

2. The contribution payable may be less than the amounts shown on the scale, particularly at its top end. This will depend on the amount of grant against which the contribution has to be set and whether any of the assessed contribution is offset by allowances for other dependent children.

Workers' Educational Association

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the total support allocated to the Workers' Educational Association by his Department in each year since 1979 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) constant terms on a 1986-87 prices base.

Mr. Rifkind: Grants and other money paid to the Workers' Educational Association in Scotland during each year since 1979 were as follows:

| Year | Amount£ | Revalued to constant 1986-87 prices£ |
|---|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 82,012 | 136,354 |

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the cost of the teachers' pay settlement to his Department in each relevant financial year.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department will be contributing grant of £8 million and £30 million respectively towards the cost of the settlement in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

EMPLOYMENT

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what percentage of those available for work in 1979 in the north-west had been previously employed in manufacturing industries; and what is his latest comparable figure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The available information from the labour force survey indicates that 42 per cent. of those without a job who were available for work in the north-west region in the spring of 1979 and whose previous industry could be identified had previously left a job in manufacturing industry. The latest labour force survey estimate, for spring 1985, was 30 per cent., although this is not fully comparable.

Trade Union Legislation

Mr. Evans asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received following the decision not to introduce further trade union legislation in this parliamentary Session; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received no representations specifically on the question of the timing of any such legislation.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in the tobacco industry in the United Kingdom in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The Department's employment statistics are produced on a quarterly basis and cannot be expressed in precisely the manner requested.

In September 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 17,000 employees in employment in the tobacco industry in Great Britain. These estimates are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.

Figures for the United Kingdom are not available.

Basildon (Unemployment)

Mr. Amess asked the Paymaster General if he will give the numbers of unemployed people, as well as the percentage rate of unemployed people, for each of the last five years, in Basildon.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants in the Basildon local authority district in December of each year since 1983. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the unemployment statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for local authority districts are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983. Unemployment rates are calculated only for self-contained labour markets, the smallest areas are travel-to-work areas.

|---|---|
| December, 1983 | 8,587 |
| December, 1984 | 9,046 |
| December, 1985 | 8,524 |
| December, 1986 | 8,325 |

Public Bodies

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Paymaster General if he will list all the bodies established by statute which are responsible to him; if he will specify the statute in each case; to which of these bodies there is anyone appointed with special knowledge of disability; and if the persons so appointed are persons with a disability.

Mr. Lee: Listed below are the bodies established by statute which are responsible to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State. For most of the bodies listed, members are not appointed for their special knowledge of disability and therefore it is not known how many have such knowledge. The National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People has 27 members, all of whom have a special knowledge of disability and eight of whom themselves have a disability. The 1,032 members of Committees for the Employment of Disabled People also all have a special knowledge of disability, and 132 are known to have a disability.

North Liverpool Music Resource Centre

Mr. Alton asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement about the closure of the north Liverpool music resource centre community programme scheme, and the future of the trainees.

Mr. Lee: The north Liverpool music resource centre was funded jointly by the European social fund and the Manpower Services Commission community programme.

I understand that the sponsors decided not to apply for a renewal of social fund assistance from January 1987. Unfortunately, this meant that the community programme project was no longer viable.

The Manpower Services Commission will do all that it can to find alternative places for the 25 community programme participants on the project so they may complete the balance of time they have left on the programme.

Sizewell

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General, in the light of recommendation 4*(f)* of the report on Sizewell public inquiry by Sir Frank Layfield, concerning the production by the Health and Safety Executive of a consultative document as a matter of high priority, if he will review the resources available to that body; if he will discuss the priorities of work with the director general; if he will consider whether such a consultative exercise may be undertaken before the report is debated in this House; when he expects to know whether the Health and Safety Executive will undertake any such consultative exercise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has a quasi-judicial role in respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board's application to construct Sizewell B. It would not be proper to comment on the inspector's report, including the recommendations, before he has taken his decision.

Construction Industry

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from the construction industry concerning the level of the Construction Industry Training Board's cash reserves.

Mr. Trippier: I have received no such representations. I have, however, asked the construction industry training board to take account of the size of its reserves in drawing up next year's levy and grant proposals.

Semiconductors (Manufacture)

Mrs. Beckett asked the Paymaster General whether he is issuing any advice to firms in the semiconductor manufacturing sector of the United Kingdom about health risks to pregnant women of working in such conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive has no plans to issue guidance at present. I am aware of recent reports that a study in an American company suggests that miscarriages are more likely among some women production workers making semiconductors. HSE is trying to get further information and will consider carefully any details that can be obtained.

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Couchman asked the Paymaster General whether any changes will be made to his Department's cash limits or running cost limit for 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, the following changes will be made.

The cash limit on class VII, vote 1 will be reduced by £7,000,000 from £1,300,123,000 to £1,293,123,000. This is due to reduced expenditure on the community programme, take-up of which has been marginally lower than forecast. This reduction offsets the increases in expenditure on class VII, vote 3 and class XV, vote 5 described below. It also enables £500,000 to be transferred to the Department of the Environment as a special contribution towards the costs in this financial year of the home insulation scheme.

The cash limit on class VII, vote 3 will be increased by £5,500,000 from £67,005,000 to £72,505,000 to make additional provision for publicising to employers, unemployed people and others Department of Employment Group services for the unemployed. Gross expenditure on vote 3 is also to increase by £1,000,000 to reactivate the unemployment benefit office (UBO) expansion programme, but this increase is matched by receipts from the Department of Health and Social Security (class XV, vote 5). The full additional cost arising from the UBO expansion programme in 1986-87 is £1,700,000, but a contribution of £700,000 will be made from existing running costs provision within the vote. As a result, the Department of Employment's gross running costs provision is reduced from £391,238,000 to £390,538,000 and the total running costs provision for the Department of Employment Group is reduced from £891,898,000 to £891,198,000.

No net increase in public expenditure results from these changes.

TRANSPORT

Marine Pollution

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many vessels identified by United Kingdom sources as discharging oil in the North sea illegally were reported to their flag state in 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86, respectively.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The number of vessels identified as having possibly discharged oil into the North sea and reported to their flag state is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 2 |
| 1984-85 | 3 |
| 1985-86 | 1 |

External Financing Limits

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about the external financing limits for British Rail and the Civil Aviation Authority for the current financial year.

Mr. Moore: The external financing limits of BR and CAA for 1986-87 have been revised. BR's EFL has been increased by £13 million to £784 million to £784 million to accommodate additional expenditure associated with restructuring British Rail Engineering Limited. CAA's EFL has been reduced by £5 million to £9 million, as currency fluctuations will lead to higher proceeds fom its en-route navigation charges in the current financial year.

Merchant Shipping

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will list in the Official Report information available to him on the aids for merchant shipping in the Republic of Ireland recently announced by the Government of that country, together with a list of the equivalent aids available to merchant shipping in the United Kingdom.

| Measures announced by the Irish Government on 6 January | United Kingdom equivalent |
|---|---|
| (a) Corporations profit tax on shipping profits will be reduced from 50 per cent. to 10 per cent. | (a) Corporation tax has been progressively reduced from 50 per cent. in 1983 to its present level of 35 per cent. The small companies' rate has been reduced to 29 per cent. |
| (b) Investment grants will be introduced providing for up to 25 per cent. of the purchase price of new ships and second hand ships less than five years old for ship-owners who employ Irish labour and remain on the Irish Register. Shipping will also be treated as an export service industry and as such qualify for investment under a National Development Corporation scheme. | (b) No equivalent schemes. However, United Kingdom owners investing in United Kingdom new built ships are eligible for loans under the Home Shipbuilding Credit Scheme for 80 per cent. of the capital cost at a fixed rate of interest of 7·5 per cent. over eight and half years with discount available in the case of early repayment of loans. United Kingdom investors in ships (whether new or second hand) are also normally eligible for annual writing down allowances of 25 per cent. of the capital cost on a reducing balance basis, with special flexibility in choosing when to use these allowances. |
| (c) Shipping will now qualify to benefit from the business expansion scheme. | (c) The business expansion scheme applies to shipping. |

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail in the Official Report information available to him on the tax depreciation regimes applicable to investment in merchant shipping in each of the member countries of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Moore: The available information is set out below.

| United Kingdom | |
| Reducing balance | Annual writing down allowances, which can be carried over to future years, of 25 per cent. of the capital cost for new and second ships. |

Disabled People

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on access between central London and Heathrow for disabled people.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: "Care Line", a bus service operated by Alder Valley North, with facilities for wheelchair passengers, has been in operation between Heathrow airport and central London since July 1986. In December 1986 Alder Valley North announced that the service would cease as it had become unsustainable. They agreed to continue until the end of this month to allow a study of the service commissioned by the Department of Transport to be carried out. I have arranged for a copy of the report of this study, prepared by the Cranfield centre for transport studies, to be placed in the Library.

I am pleased to say that London regional transport has told me that it is planning to adapt its existing Airbus services between Heathrow and central London to carry wheelchair passengers. It is also examining the possibility of a service which will link the London terminals of the Airbus service at Victoria and Euston with other main line London rail stations. In the meantime, it will be announcing arrangements to provide disabled passengers who notify them in advance with suitable transport between central London and Heathrow.

I have authorised an increase in LRT's expenditure on transport for disabled pople to meet the cost of these new facilities.

I shall be inviting the Department's disabled persons transport advisory committee to assist in the introduction of these services.

Traffic Flow Statistics

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic flow statistics have been taken on the A259 trunk road in the last 12 months; and what are the findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic has been counted continuously at four sites on the A259 during 1986. The findings are as follows:

| | Annual Average 24 hour Daily Flows |
|---|---|
| Pevensey (Marsh Road) | 13,200 |
| Hastings (Glyne Gap) | 23,400 |
| West Icklesham | 6,700 |
| East of Rye | 6,600 |

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for Transport what traffic flow statistics have been taken on the A21 trunk road in the last 12 months; and what are the findings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic has been counted continuously at two sites and intermittently at four sites on the A21 during 1986. The findings are as follows:

| | Annual Average 24 hour Daily Flows |
|---|---|
| North of Hurst Green (between A265 and B2099) | 10,400 |
| South of A229 (Kent Street) | 13,200 |
| South of Tonbridge Bypass (Castle Hill) | [1]26,300 |
| East of Kippings Cross | [1]15,100 |
| North of Lamberhurst (Windmill Farm) | [1]13,200 |
| Lamberhurst (Scotney Castle) | [1]12,600 |

[1] Estimated from intermittent counts.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Operations (Statistics)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of heart operations, the number of hip replacements, and the number of knee replacements carried out in the Newcastle health authority area in the following years (a) 1979, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: I understand from the Northern regional health authority that the numbers of these operations carried out by Newcastle district health authority in the years requested were as follows:

| Procedure carried out in Newcastle DHA | Year1979 | 1982 | [1]1985 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Surgical procedures on the heart | 1,690 | 1,980 | 2,454 |
| Total hip replacements and other arthroplasty of hip | 338 | [2]276 | 407 |
| Arthroplasty of knee | 29 | 115 | 236 |

[1] The latest year for which figures are available.

[2] The number of operations was affected by industrial action in the National Health Service.

My hon. Friend may wish to write for more detailed information to the chairman of Newcastle district health authority.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants there were for mobility allowance in each of the past five years; how many cases were approved by the adjudicating officers on first application; how many cases went to appeal and how many were approved or refused; and how many cases went to the Medical Appeal Tribunal and were approved or refused.

Mr. Major: The available information is as follows. It relates to decisions given in the relevant years, not to the results of claims made in those years.

1. Claims

| | Number of claims decided | Decided in claimant's favour |
|---|---|---|
| 1982 | 109,3401 | 76,1301 |
| 1983 | 126,3001 | 86,3001 |
| 1984 | 132,0001 | 93,5001 |
| 1985 | 157,2501 | 101,8901 |
| 1986 | 175,0101 | 109,2201 |

Notes:

1. Figures for renewal claims are shown separately in brackets marked [1] but included in the total.
2. It is not possible to identify separately the number of these decisions which were made by adjudication officers on the basis of an advisory medical report.

2. Appeals and references decided by medical boards

| | Number of claims | Decisions in favour of claimant | Decisions adverse to claimant |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1982 | 11,410 | 3,600 | 7,810 |
| 1983 | 12,970 | 3,890 | 9,080 |
| 1984 | 14,750 | 4,800 | 9,950 |
| 1985 | 16,800 | 5,410 | 11,390 |
| 1986 | 20,370 | 6,930 | 13,440 |

Note: Figures include renewal claims.

3. Appeals decided by medical appeal tribunals

| | Number of claims | Decisions in favour of claimant | Decisions adverse to claimant |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1982 | 2,663 | 703 | 1,960 |
| 1983 | 3,070 | 1,000 | 2,070 |
| 1984 | 3,933 | 1,107 | 2,826 |
| 1985 | 4,316 | 850 | 3,466 |
| 1986 | 5,382 | 1,235 | 4,147 |

Note: Figures include renewal claims.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (a) what is his latest estimate of the number of retirement pensioners who receive housing benefit supplement; (b) what is his estimate of the numbers of retirement pensioners who will cease to qualify for housing benefit supplement in April 1987 as a result of the changes to supplementary benefit arrangements announced on 22nd October 1986; and (c) what is his estimate of the proportion of retirement pensioners who quality for housing benefit supplement but do not claim it and of the amount of housing benefit supplement that goes unclaimed.

(a) Information from local authority subsidy claims for the 1986-87 financial year, indicates that there are approximately 320,000 retirement pensioner households receiving housing benefit supplement.

(b) The number of retirement pensioners affected is too small for a reliable estimate to be made. In such cases the reduction as a result of these changes will not in general exceed 10p per week.

(c) Estimates of take-up of housing benefit supplement will be available in a few weeks' time.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if married and cohabiting women who now qualify for invalid care allowance, and who qualify for back-dating of that allowance, will automatically be credited in arrears with class I national insurance credits to the date when their period of entitlement to invalid care allowance is commenced.

Mr. Major: Yes, subject to the usual provision that married women are not entitled to credits if they have chosen to pay reduced rate national insurance contributions.

Job Start Allowances

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether people who take low-paid employment in anticipation of qualifying for job start allowances but who fail to so qualify will, if they leave their job, be treated as voluntarily unemployed and so risk having their unemployment benefit suspended for 13 weeks.

Mr. Major: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 18 November 1986 at column 150.

Board and Lodging

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single persons under and over 25 years of age and how many married couples (a) with children and (b) without children, respectively, in Greenock and Port Glasgow are in receipt of board and lodging payments.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pension Entitlement

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state why the state pension entitlements of Mr. and Mrs. G. Douglas, Hafod, Trefor, Gwynedd, which have been queried with the Department of Health and Social Services in Newcastle upon Tyne since last August, have not yet been adequately answered; if he will look into this case as a matter of urgency; and reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Caernarfon dated 23 December 1986 without further delay.

Mr. Lyell: My noble Friend replied to the hon. Member on 28 January.

Asbestos

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department has received a request from the regional health authority to finance the detection and removal of blue asbestos in the Liverpool royal infirmary.

Mrs. Currie: We have received no such request. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority for information about how it proposes to tackle the problem.

NHS (Staff)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the salary grades of operating department assistants employed in the National Health Service; and if he will also list the comparable nursing grades salaries with which operating department assistants are interchangeable according to the Lewin report.

Mr. Newton: "The Organisation and Staffing of Operating Departments", a report of a joint sub-committee of the standing medical advisory committee and the standing nursing advisory committee (the Lewin report) proposed the introduction of a new class of operating department staff, known as operating department assistants (ODAs) whose duties, as far as practicable, would be interchangeable with those of trained theatre nurses.

| Trainee | ODA | Senior ODA | Enrolled Nurse | Staff Nurse RGN | Nursing Sister II |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| £ | £ | £ | £ | £ | £ |
| 3,668 | 4,632 | 5,778 | 5,700 | 6,475 | 8,070 |
| 3,877 | 4,831 | 5,987 | 5,920 | 6,730 | 8,525 |
| 4,086 | 5,031 | 6,196 | 6,140 | 6,985 | 8,980 |
| — | 5,230 | 6,405 | 6,360 | 7,240 | 9,435 |
| — | 5,430 | 6,612 | 6,580 | 7,495 | 9,890 |
| — | — | — | 6,800 | 7,750 | 10,345 |
| — | — | — | 7,020 | — | 10,800 |

AIDS

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to extend provision of public information on AIDS through newspapers, television and radio; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Further plans are currently under consideration.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to publish and to distribute information on AIDS designed specifically for people under the ages of (a) 20, (b) 18 and (c) 16 years.

Mr. Newton: The Department has a press and radio advertising campaign on AIDS which is targeted specifically at young people aged between 15 and 20.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to distribute the Government's literature on AIDS and HIV in languages other than English.

Mr. Newton: Leaflets and other media activities providing information on AIDS in a number of languages other than English are being considered. A Welsh language version of the national leaflet is already available.

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available (a) the number of nurses leaving National Health Service employment and (b) the number of nurses who have begun employment in private sector health care after leaving National Health Service employment.

Mr. Newton: Information about the number of nurses leaving National Health Service employment is not collected centrally.

Warwick and District General Hospital

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a decision to authorise the proposed phase II development at Warwick district general hospital before the end of February; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals for a phase II development of Warwick district general hospital have not been received by the Department. It is for the west midlands regional health authority to decide whether any such proposals should be included in its future plans and the hon. Member may wish to contact that authority for further information.

Benefits

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people within Tayside region are receiving supplementary benefit; and how many of these are unemployed.

Mr. Lyell: Tayside region is covered by the department's local offices at Perth, Arbroath, Dundee East and Dundee West, but their boundaries are not conterminous with those of Tayside. The total number of people receiving supplementary benefit from these offices, and the number of those who were unemployed on 10 December 1986—the latest available figures—were:

|---|---|
| Total in receipt of supplementary benefit | 38,217 |
| Unemployed people in receipt of supplementary benefit | 15,501 |

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of claims for supplementary benefit to his Department's Liverpool offices during 1986 were not met within 14 days; and what percentage of total claims this represents.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c. 105]: The number of claims for supplementary benefit which take more than 14 days to clear is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Details of the average time taken to deal with a fresh claim to supplementary benefit by each of the social security offices covering the Liverpool city council area, for the year up to and including April 1986, are as follows:

| Name of DHSS local office | Average clearance time (in days) |
|---|---|
| Belle Vue | 6 |
| Breckfield | 10 |
| City | 4 |
| Edge Hill | 11 |
| Garston | 5 |
| Norris Green | 3 |
| Toxteth | 3 |
| West Derby | 5 |

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the number of claimants in (a) 1984, (b) 1985 and (c) 1986 processed by the Department of Health and Social Security office at 2,104 Coventry road, Sheldon, Birmingham in total; and if he will break this figure down to show the number resident in (i) Chelmsley Wood (ii) Ford Bridge (iii) Kingshurst (iv) Bicken Hill and (v) Castle Bromwich.

Mr. Lyell: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of claims dealt with by the Department's South Yardley local office is shown in the table. Figures are available only on the basis of statistical years which run from April to April. Figures for supplementary benefit show the number of decisions made in each period, figures for other benefits show the number of claims received. A breakdown of these figures into separate districts is not available.

| | 11 April 1984 to 9 April 1985 | 10 April 1985 to 8 April 1986 | 9 April 1986 to 13 January 1987 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Supplementary benefit claims decided | 21,156 | 22,892 | 17,526 |
| Other benefits | | | |
| Sickness—invalidity benefit claims received | 5,199 | 5,261 | 2,110 |
| Severe disablement allowance claims received | 64 | 139 | 95 |
| Maternity benefit claims received | 1,933 | 2,000 | 1,529 |
| Retirement pension claims received | 3,947 | 4,445 | 2,753 |
| Widows benefit claims received | 298 | 315 | 200 |
| Death grant claims received | 2,231 | 2,312 | 1,859 |
| Industrial disablement benefit claims received | 224 | 277 | 229 |

Community Care

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list total expenditure on community care by (i) each district health authority, and (ii) each local authority social service department for each year since 1979, showing separately expenditure on private residential and nursing care.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Leukaemia

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the high incidence of leukaemia in children in the parishes of Aldermaston, Tadley, Mortimer and Burghfield; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received representations as to the allegedly high incidence of childhood leukaemia in the vicinity of Aldermaston and Burghfield from a number of local authorities in or adjacent to this area and from individuals.

My noble Friend met a delegation from Berkshire county council on 26 January to discuss this matter.

Ms. Richardson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the inquiry set up to advise the Government on the incidence of leukemia in the parishes adjacent to the atomic weapons research establishment at Aldermaston will make its report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Allegations of a raised incidence of leukaemia in the vicinity of AWRE Aldermaston and ROF Burghfield were referred to the Government's independent advisory committee, COMARE (Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment). COMARE is expected to report in the latter half of 1987.

Elderly People

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many people there are of retirement age in each district authority in Cambridgeshire; what proportion live alone; and how many and what proportion of the people of retirement age are (a) married, (b) single men and (c) single women.

Mrs. Currie: Only the number of people of retirement age (taken as 65 for men and 60 for women) is available annually; the remaining information is taken from the 1981 census of population. Hence the latest available information is as follows:

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|

Births and Deaths Registration Act

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received in support of amending the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1926 to allow for the burial or cremation of foetal remains of less than 28 weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to the written reply given to his question No. 68 to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department answered today.

Hospitals (Coal)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what experiments are being conducted within the National Health Service in the use of imported coal for heating hospitals; and what guidance his Department has issued to health authorities on this subject;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the National Health Service should purchase only British coal for use in hospitals.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 15 January 1987, c. 300]: The Department is currently finalising the new supply agreement with British Coal referred to in my reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 14 January, c. 205.

Mental Illness

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the number of beds for the treatment of mental illness in England in (a) 1972, (b) 1982 and (c) the latest available year, for (i) general hospitals, (ii) mental hospitals and (iii) other residential facilities.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply 19 January 1987, c. 428]: The information requested is given in the table.

Available mental illness beds—England

| National Health Service hospitals | [1]1972 | 1982 | 1985 |
|---|---|---|---|
| General hospitals[2] | 4,639 | 8,897 | 9,268 |
| Mental illness hospitals | 104,208 | 70,746 | 61,925 |
| Other hospitals | 5,650 | 4,188 | 4,673 |
| Private hospitals[3] | n/a | 1,994 | 2,340 |

[1] Available beds in the specialties of psychogeriatrics and forensic psychiatry included in the figures for 1982 and 1985 were not separately identifiable in 1972. Therefore the figures are not strictly comparable.

[2] Hospitals classified as acute, mainly acute or partly acute.

ENVIRONMENT

Bed and Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 39, on estimated expenditure by local authorities on bed and breakfast accommodation for homeless households in the financial year 1985-86, he will indicate when he expects to receive returns from the non-responding authorities; and if he intends to place all returns received in the Library.

Mr. Tracey: A further 26 returns have recently been received from local authorities and the required information has been placed today in the House of Commons Library. Returns from the remaining authorities are expected by the end of March 1987. When this information is available this will also be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Local Authority Housing

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the comparative figures for areas of (a) council house rents and (b) local authority mortgage repayments indicating the global sums, the number of cases in each and the relationship of these figures in percentage terms to the total numbers of lettings and mortgages as the case may be.

Mr. Ridley: The available figures on English local authorities' housing and mortgage loans are shown below. Information on all rented housing and mortgage loans in each area is not available.

Housing stock and mortgages outstanding at end of 1985-86

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest data he has on the average total cost of building and financing the loans on council flats and houses with one, two and three bedrooms, respectively.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

East Sussex

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of expenditure by Brighton borough council and East Sussex county council, respectively, has been provided by rate support grant, in each year since 1974.

Mr. Chope: The following table shows the block grant paid to Brighton borough council and East Sussex county council for 1981-82 onwards expressed as a proportion of their total expenditure.

| | Brighton BC | East Sussex CC |
|---|---|---|
| 1981-82 | ·482 | ·386 |
| 1982-83 | ·297 | ·344 |
| 1983-84 | ·451 | ·308 |
| 1984-85 | ·397 | ·305 |
| 1985-86 | ·496 | ·266 |
| 1986-87 | ·358 | ·231 |

Total expenditure is the measure of local authority expenditure used in the determination of block grant. It comprises net current expenditure on the rate fund revenue account plus items such as debt charges and revenue contributions to capital and less specific and supplementary grants and items such as interest receipts. Estimates of total expenditure prior to 1981-82 are not available.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the procedures and criteria used in determining the block grant entitlement of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Chope: Block grant is paid direct to the receiver for the Metropolitan police district (MPD) under the provisions of section 10 and schedule 2 of the Local Government Finance Act 1982. As police authority for the MPD the Home Secretary approves the Metropolitan police estimates. Local authorities are consulted each year by the receiver before he puts his financial proposals to the Home Secretary, and their views are taken into account. In calculating the amount of block grant payable to the receiver, the Secretary of State therefore determines his grant-related expenditure (GRE) each year at the value, net of specific grants and receipts, estimated for the receiver's expenditure that year.

The receiver's grant-related poundage (GRP) for expenditure at the level of GRE is determined by reference to his share of the total GRE for London.

In other respects the calculation of block grant is as for all authorities. A more detailed description of this is contained in the Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1986-87 but, briefly, an authority's entitlement to grant is determined by deducting from its total expenditure the product of its grant-related poundage and its gross rateable value (and, where specified in the rate support grant, a multiplier determined under section 59 of the Act).

Sports Council

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline details of any contractual relationships which exist between the Sports Council and the Central Council for Physical Recreation, or any other public or private sector organisation, regarding the National Sports Centres funded by the Sports Council.

Mr. Tracey: The Sports Council has a management agreement with Nottinghamshire county council in connection with the Holme Pierrepont National Water Sports Centre. The agreement provides for equal representation by both bodies on a joint committee and for the sharing of net revenue expenditure.

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a detailed breakdown of capital and current expenditure over the last 10 years for each of the national sports centres funded by the Sports Council.

Mr. Tracey: The following is the information:

Urban Programme

Mrs. Peacock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources will be available for local authorities in the urban programme 1987-88; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am today announcing the allocation of £272·3 million in urban programme resources to 57 hard-pressed inner city areas. This money will support co-ordinated programmes to stimulate enterprise, improve the environment and encourage self-help and voluntary effort in local communities. This reflects a £7 million increase in the provisions for the urban programme contained in the Public Expenditure White Paper (the Government Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90, Cmnd. 56-II).

For the first time, part of this money will be distributed by my Department's regional offices so that they can enhance allocations for inner area programmes which reflect best practice within a renewal strategy which meets ministerial guidelines for the urban programme as a whole. It is our policy to recognise good and cost-effective performance by local authorities and to direct resources where they can be of most use.

In allocating these resources I have taken careful account of the representations made in response to consultation with the local authority associations about proposals on the geographical coverage of the urban programme which I announced last August. In the light of these representations, I have decided that three more authorities should be invited to submit Inner Area Programmes — Plymouth, Kirklees and The Wrekin — bringing the total to 57.

Urban areas can also receive resources through urban development grant, which helps to attract private investment, and a range of other Government initiatives, such as derelict land grant and estate action, which helps local authorities to tackle the problems of rundown housing estates. Authorities are encouraged to take advantage of these various types of support and adopt an area-based approach in tackling urban problems.

The allocation to individual authorities listed below are provisional. Formal allocations are made after IAPs are approved, and are conditional on the quality of the IAP, on its conforming with ministerial guidelines, and, in the case of authorities with partnership or programme status in 1986-87, on their providing a satisfactory annual report on achievements through the UP in 1985-86.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his reply to the right hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Freeson) of 15 January, Official Report, column 269, he will state in relation to the Black Country, Teesside and Tyne and Wear urban development corporations (a) who are the consultants advising him, (b) what is the brief they are working to, (c) when he expects to announce the corporation board memberships, (d) what are his criteria for selecting board members and (e) what the salaries of the chairman and the board members will be.

(a) The consultants are Ecotec, Research and consulting Limited (for the Black Country), Price Waterhouse (for Tyne and Wear) and Coopers and Lybrand Associates Limited (for Teesside). These firms are heading consortia of other specialist consultants.

(b) The consultants are analysing the development potential of the areas advising on what was held back achievement of that potential, advising on the most appropriate use of sites, identifying the levels of private sector investment that would be achieved and the public sector cost, and making recommendations on the boundaries of the urban development areas.

(c) My right hon. Friend announced on 6 January his intention to appoint Mr. Paul Nicholson as chairman of the Tyne and Wear Development Corporation. Other proposed appointments will be announced as soon as possible.

(d) My right hon. Friend will select board members on the basis of their ability to do the job. He will include members who have a special knowledge of the locality and appropriate business or professional experience.

(e) All posts are part-time. The chairmen and deputy chairmen will be paid at notional full-time rates of £43,515 and £29,535 respectively. Actual remuneration will depend on the time commitment involved. Members will be paid at a flat rate of £3,465.

Trafalgar Square (Public Meeting)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has made in respect of the application by the National Union of Students for the use of Trafalgar square for a public meeting on 21 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will answer this question shortly.

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many television sets there are at the official residence of the Lord Chancellor; and who is responsible for the payment of the licence fee.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 52]: There are no television sets currently in use in the official residence of my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EEC (Food Sales to Soviet Union)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which member states of the European Community are not in favour of selling agricultural products uneconomically to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Other member states of the European Economic Community generally support the Commission's proposals for sales to the USSR. There are, however, many who, like the United Kingdom, believe that we must reduce production to a level much nearer demand, which would then obviate the need for such sales.

Agricultural Land

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total acreage (a) in cereals and rape and (b) in grass in 1986 and the forecast for 1987; and what was the increase or decrease in each case since 1979 in actual and percentage terms.

Mr. Gummer: The areas for 1986 and 1979 are set out below.

The 1987 area cannot be accurately forecast at this stage.

| England | Thousand Hectares | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1979 '000 HA | 1986 '000 HA | Actual change | Per Cent. Change 1986-1979 |
| Total area of cereals (excl. maize) plus rape grown for oilseed | 3,322 | 3,645 | +323 | +9·7 |
| Total area of grassland (Excl. rough grazing) | 4,295 | 3,955 | −341 | −7·9 |

North Sea (Hydrocarbons)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how specifically he has extended the scope of his Department's monitoring of hydrocarbons in the North sea in the last three years.

Mr. Gummer: By more intensive sampling of coastal waters and of waters adjacent to offshore platforms.

Offshore Disposal Sites

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific improvements his Department has made in its monitoring of offshore sea disposal sites in the last three years.

Mr. Gummer: Improvements made include an increased sampling capability, greater emphasis on the study of changes at sea disposal sites, and closer integration of chemical and biological analyses.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the numerical limits placed by Her Majesty's Government on the levels of annex I and II substances which, when disposed of at sea in dredged materials, are considered acceptable.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 5 December 1986, at column 813.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the average concentrations of annex I and annex II substances was in dredged materials disposed of by the United Kingdom in 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 in the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: Data for the years up to and including 1984 may be found in the annual reports of the Oslo Commission, copies of which are in the Library of the House. Data for 1985 and 1986 will, as usual, be published by the commission in due course.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how the operation of part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 has improved his Department's control over the disposal of waste at sea.

Mr. Gummer: By comparison with the Dumping at Sea Act 1974, which it superseded, part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 extended controls to marine incineration and disposal of waste beneath the seabed, increased the powers of Ministers in considering applications for licences, notably to take account of human health and the availability of alternative methods of disposal, enabled Ministers to charge fully for the costs of considering licence applications, monitoring sea disposal and to recover the costs of clean-up operations, and strengthened their powers of inspection.

North Sea (Research)

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department spent in 1978-79, 1979-80, 1980-81, 1981-82, 1982-83, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 on research and monitoring designed to extend Her Majesty's Government's scientific understanding of the North sea.

Mr. Gummer: It is not possible precisely to allocate a proportion of my Department's research and monitoring effort to the North sea because many relevant projects would also apply to wider areas. It is estimated, however, that the cost to the Ministry for such work in the years in question was:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 2·5 |
| 1979-80 | 2·8 |
| 1980-81 | 3·7 |
| 1981-82 | 3·9 |
| 1982-83 | 4·2 |
| 1983-84 | 4·7 |
| 1984-85 | 4·6 |
| 1985-86 | 5·0 |

Mercury, Cadmium and Zinc

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what concentration of mercury, cadmium and zinc he regards as trace, with regard to sewage sludge disposed of at sea by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: In the absence of specific limits for trace contaminants in the relevant international conventions, my Ministry aims to keep permissible concentrations in sewage sludge below 10 parts per million in the case of mercury and 20 parts per million in the case of cadmium. Disposal of zinc other than as a trace contaminant is not prohibited by the conventions.

Food (Noxious Substances)

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food pursuant to the answer of 15 December, Official Report, column 365, what are the details of the programme of research into the detection of noxious substances in the food chain.

Mr. Gummer: Research is being carried out into the detection of polychlorinated dibenzo-p-dioxins (PCDDs) and dibenzofurans (PCDFs) in the food chain by the Steering Group on Food Surveillance through its working party on organic environmental contaminants in food. The laboratory work is being carried out at MAFF food science laboratory where methods of analysis for these compounds in foodstuffs are being developed with the following aims. For the methods of analysis to be of value, they must be capable of detecting 0·001 microgram of each substance in one kilogram of foodstuff. In order to provide meaningful information the methods of analysis must be capable of detecting these substances in a range of foodstuffs including milk, eggs, fish and animal fat. The methods of analysis should also be more rapid than those presently available.

Food Aid

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the Government's estimate of the numbers of individual deliveries of food by charities necessary to carry out the European Economic Community food aid scheme.

Mr. Jopling: Individual charitable organisations are arranging for the food concerned to reach recipients. I am not able to estimate the number of individual deliveries that this will involve.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what areas of the United Kingdom the distribution of food under the European Economic Community food aid scheme has been commenced; and in how many additional areas it will be commenced in each of the next two weeks.

Mr. Jopling: My most recent information is that there have so far been releases from intervention stores of butter or beef in the following areas:

Avon
Somerset
Manchester
Kent
Northamptonshire
Northern Ireland

I expect releases to occur in other areas in the next two weeks, depending on the requirements of the charitable organisations concerned. Actual distribution after the products leave intervention stores is for charitable organisations themselves.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of the allocated cost of the European Economic Community food aid programme is taken up by the cost of preparation or butchering of the food for distribution.

Mr. Jopling: It is not possible to estimate such a proportion at this stage because most other member states have not yet decided how to implement the relevant EC legislation.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of people in receipt of supplementary benefit in the United Kingdom he estimates will be entitled to benefit under the European Economic Community food aid scheme.

Mr. Jopling: All.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what kinds and quantities of food released under the European Economic Community food aid scheme will be (a) distributed to individuals and/or institutions in their natural state or (b) incorporated in prepared meals.

Mr. Jopling: The relevant products are being distributed through charitable organisations to the most needy individuals and not to institutions. I understand that most charitable organisations will be distributing butter in small packages, though incorporation into prepared meals is not ruled out. The Community legislation provides for releases of beef only for incorporation into prepared meals. The arrangements for milk and milk products are still being worked out, but I expect that the charitable organisations will wish to distribute these in the normal quantities obtained in retail shops.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what help he proposes to give to charities to maintain the quality of foodstuffs for distribution under the European Economic Community food aid scheme after the release of those foodstuffs from their stores.

Mr. Jopling: My Department stands ready to advise the charitable organisations concerned on these questions, which already arise in any case for bodies engaged in providing foodstuffs to the disadvantaged.

Mr. John asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will set out, pursuant to the answer of 21 January to the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Sir P. Mills), Official Report, column 638, the precise rules governing the working of the EEC food aid scheme.

Mr. Jopling: The arrangements are being administered by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce. I am arranging for the board leaflet setting out the conditions for release of beef and butter to charitable organisations to be placed in the Library. Arrangements for milk and milk products have not yet been finalised.

ENERGY

Power Stations

Mr. Patrick McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the Heysham B and Torness B advanced gas-cooled reactor power stations to come on load.

Mr. Goodlad: The CEGB has advised me that the first reactor at Heysham II is expected to raise power early in 1988 and the second in the course of next year. Electricity matters in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

British Coal

Sir Ian Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish statistics for the number of collieries and average manpower in each British Coal area for the fiscal month of November 1986.

Mr. David Hunt: I am advised by British Coal that the number of collieries at the end of its fiscal month of November 1986, and average manpower during that month, by area, was:

|---|---|---|
| Scotland | 6 | 5,384 |
| North East | 9 | 15,390 |
| North Yorkshire | 19 | 18,727 |
| South Yorkshire | 18 | 16,657 |
| North Derbyshire | 7 | 7,784 |
| Nottinghamshire | 21 | 24,127 |
| South Midlands | 8 | 7,649 |
| Kent | 2 | 1,264 |
| Western | 12 | 13,137 |
| South Wales | 15 | 11,859 |

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools (Basildon)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many pupils are enrolled in comprehensive schools in Basildon; and what are the projected enrolments for 1990 and 1995;

(2) how many teachers are employed in comprehensive schools in Basildon; and what is the projected employment for 1990 and 1995;

(3) what information he has as to how many teachers are employed in primary schools in Basildon, and as to the projection of employment for 1990 and 1995;

(4) what information he has as to how many pupils are enrolled in primary schools in Basildon, and as to the projections for enrolment for 1990 and 1995.

Mr. Dunn: Information for areas within local education authorities is not available centrally. In January 1986, the number of pupils on roll in maintained primary and comprehensive schools in Essex and the number of teachers in these schools were as follows:

| | Pupils[1] | Teachers[2] |
|---|---|---|
| Primary schools | 118,796 | 4,920 |
| Comprehensive schools | 104,815 | 6,137 |

[1] Full-time and part-time pupils

[2] Full-time and the full-time equivalent of part-time teachers employed in schools.

Projections of pupil numbers and assumptions concerning future teacher numbers are made only for England as a whole.

Science Teachers

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the number of unfilled posts in science subjects notified to him by local authorities in January 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: In January 1986 local authorities in England reported 407 unfilled posts in science.

Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in view of the shortage of science, technical and mathematics teachers, he will state the means he intends to adopt to ensure that the planned city technical colleges are able to recruit teachers in these subjects.

Mrs. Rumbold: I am confident that city technology colleges will be able to attract staff, who will welcome the opportunity to teach pupils of varying abilities and backgrounds in a disciplined school community working to clear objectives. I recognise that the establishment of city technology colleges will increase the demand for teachers in shortage subjects, though I expect also that they may draw back into the profession some who have left it and stimulate new recruitment. A range of measures to reduce current teacher shortages is in hand and the situation will be kept under review.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now publish in the Official Report for each of the following London boroughs—Waltham Forest, Enfield, Haringey, Barnet, Brent, Ealing, Hillingdon, Harrow and Newham—(a) the number of secondary pupils, (b) the number of pupils studying in another local education authority area, (c) the number of pupils educated from other local education authority areas, and (d) the net inflow/outflow of pupils for the last date for which figures are available and in each of the past three years.

Mr. Dunn: The information available relates to pupils of secondary age attending maintained primary, middle or secondary schools in January of each year. The figures for the years 1984, 1985 and 1986 are as follows:

| | All pupils in schools maintained by this authority | Pupils from this authority attending schools maintained by another authority | Pupils from other authorities attending schools maintained by this authority | Net inflow (+) or outflow (−) |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| January 1984 | | | | |
| Waltham Forest | 15,613 | 816 | 222 | −594 |
| Enfield | 19,975 | 904 | 1,043 | +499 |
| Haringey | 12,148 | 2,317 | 642 | −1,675 |
| Barnet | 19,493 | 1,077 | 2,546 | +1,469 |
| Brent | 15,642 | 2,954 | 815 | −2,139 |
| Ealing | 14,547 | 2,362 | 674 | −1,688 |
| Hillingdon | 16,335 | 481 | 589 | +108 |

Broadacres School, Hixon

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when his decision on the future of Broadacres school, Hixon, Staffordshire, will be published.

Mr. Dunn: Proposals to reorganise educational provision in the Stafford area, of which this forms a part, are currently before the Secretary of State, and a decision will be announced shortly.

A-Levels and GCSE

Mr. Conway asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to issue a circular to local education authorities on the timing of A-levels and GCSE examinations with regard to school leaving dates and term conclusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans to issue guidance to local authorities on these matters. It is for the relevant examination boards to consider the timing of these examinations in consultation with local authorities and other interested parties. The replacement of O-levels and CSE by the GCSE will shorten and simplify the 16-plus examinations timetable. I am not aware of intended further changes which have implications for school leaving or term dates.

Welsh Language

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what priority he attaches to teaching through the medium of Welsh at university level; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend acknowledges the need for some Welsh medium teaching to be available at university level. The priority accorded to it is a matter for the University Grants Committee and the University of Wales.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list showing for each local education authority in England (a) the estimated cost of primary school capital projects other than provision of basic need contained in the plans submitted to his Department for 1987-88 and (b) the estimated cost of primary school capital projects for basic need contained in the plans submitted to his Department for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The expenditure plans submitted by local education authorities are not presented in a form that allows this information to be extracted.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information was received by his Department in response to the circular letter to local education authorities in mid-1986 seeking information in connection with the authorities' plans for education capital expenditure in 1987-88 on (a) numbers of sub-standard places in unremodelled primary schools constructed before 1903 and (b) numbers of such places considered to serve areas of educational and social disadvantage; if he will publish such information as he has available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is set out in the following table. It does not present a reliable national picture of the incidence of substandard places or of areas of educational and social disadvantage for several reasons. For example, a number of authorities failed to supply any information, or supplied only a part of what was requested. In addition, authorities themselves are asked to judge what constitutes an area of educational and social disadvantage: the information at (b) cannot therefore be taken as consistent or comparable.

| Local Education Authority | (a) Sub-standard places in unremodelled primary schools constructed before 1903 | (b) Number of such places in areas of educational and social disadvantage |

[2] These authorities did not supply the information requested in their response to the Department's letter of 30 June 1986; the figures given were supplied in response to the letter of 18 December 1985.

Examination Results

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of entrants for A level examinations of each of the examining boards in England and Wales in each year since 1983 have received (a) A grades, (b) B grades, (c) C grades, (d) D grades and (e) E grades.

Mrs. Rumbold [pursuant to the reply, 23 January 1987, c. 743]: The information for English boards is given in the following table:

GCE A level summer examinations, England

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Radice asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England for pupils of secondary age (a) the amount spent within that local education authority on assisted places, (b) the number of assisted places, (c) the average expenditure per assisted place pupil and (d) the percentage of the local education authority budget represented by expenditure on the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987, c. 640]: I regret that, due to arithmetical errors, the information given in respect of the Derbyshire, Essex, Hertfordshire and Lancashire local education authorities contained inaccuracies. Revised figures are as shown in the following table:

| | Derbyshire | Essex | Hertfordshire | Lancashire |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Expenditure (£) on assisted places scheme schools in the area | 320,861 | 434,924 | 827,900 | 683,804 |
| Number of assisted pupils at schools in the area | 146 | 220 | 539 | 579 |
| Average expenditure (£) per assisted place pupil | 2,198 | 1,977 | 1.536 | 1,181 |
| Assisted places expenditure as percentage of LEA secondary budget | 0·4 | 0·3 | 0·9 | 0·6 |

PRIME MINISTER

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when she next plans to visit the Falkland Islands.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Legislative Procedures

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions he has had regarding alterations in the system of handling Northern Ireland legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: Under direct rule special procedures for handling Northern Ireland legislation apply. I am always ready to consider suggestions for improvements to these procedures. In particular, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister indicated on 25 February 1986 that she was prepared to discuss these matters with leaders of the Unionist parties. They have not so far taken up that offer.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drink-Drive Campaign

56. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many motorists were stopped and breathalysed over the Christmas 1986 period; how many were found to be positive; and what were the comparable figures for Christmas 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Bruinvels) on 12 January 1987 at column 71. Statistics for 1985, including separate figures for the Christmas period, are published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 19/86, "Statistics of Breath Tests, England and Wales, 1985", tables 6 and 7.

Police

Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent progress in the programme of civilianisation of the police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that civilianisation resulted in the release of about 500 police officers for operational work in provincial forces in England and Wales in 1985. The figure for 1986 is not yet available.

Crimes of Violence

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of crimes of violence against the person (a) in the 12 months ended March 1979 and (b) in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: In the 12 months ending March 1979 police in England and Wales recorded 88,000 offences of violence against the person, compared with 125,000 in the 12 months ending September 1986. Statistics of recorded notifiable offences are published each quarter in a Home Office statistical bulletin, issue 39/86 being the nost recent.

Myra Hindley

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Warrington, North on 26 January, Official Report, column 20, why he is unable to distinguish the cost of (a) police overtime, (b) the helicopter used to transport Myra Hindley, (c) security for Myra Hindley and (d) transport for each police force involved; what costs were incurred other than those of the police service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The £12,000 to which I referred in my earlier reply on 26 January at column 358, represents the cost of overtime for the 135 police officers involved in the operation. No charge was made for the use of the Metropolitan police helicopter. The cost of providing security for Miss Hindley is included in the cost of the police officers involved and cannot be separately identified. The cost of transport for each police force involved is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. In addition to police service costs, the prison service incurred additional costs of about £90 representing the cost of overtime for the two prison officers who escorted Miss Hindley.

Cardiff Prison

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the ratio of prisoners to prison officers in Cardiff gaol in each year from 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The ratio of prisoners to staff in the prison officer class at Cardiff prison during the period in question was:

| | Ratio |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 2·26 : 1 |
| 1981 | 2·23 : 1 |
| 1982 | 2·55 : 1 |
| 1983 | 2·32 : 1 |
| 1984 | 1·89 : 1 |
| 1985 | 2·29 : 1 |
| 1986 | 2·38 : 1 |

News International, Wapping

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to date of giving police protection to the News International plant at Wapping; and if he will give separate figures for the cost of the operation on the night of 24 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I will reply as soon as possible.

Devon and Cornwall Police

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the terms of reference of the Devon and Cornwall police in their investigations relating to the conduct of certain police officers allegedly involved in the ill treatment of prisoners on 21 to 24 November 1974 at Queens road police station, Birmingham, and Morecambe police station, Lancashire.

Mr. Hurd: The chief constable of the Devon and Cornwall constabulary has been asked to undertake inquiries into the allegations made by the former West Midlands police officer, Mr. Thomas Clarke, that while he was on duty at Queens road police station he witnessed intimidation of, and saw signs of injury on, five of the six men who were later convicted of offences arising from the Birmingham pub bombings in November 1974.

North Wales (Detention of Persons)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he makes of the number of persons normally residing in north Wales who are at any particular time detained in prison.

Mr. Mellor: The home address of persons received into prison department establishments is not recorded centrally.

Criminal Inquiries Compensation Scheme (Railwaymen)

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the annual amount paid to railwaymen under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme for each year they were eligible to claim under the scheme.

Mr. Mellor: The amounts paid to railwaymen are not readily identifiable and information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Golding asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many railwaymen received compensation from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board between 1979 and 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Police Widows

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 12 January, Official Report, columns 73-4, what estimate he has made of the costs to Her Majesty's Government in each of the next five years of the proposed increase of £1·41 per week to all police widows who are in receipt of the preserved rate pension in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The cost of agreeing the claim is estimated to be £455,000 in the first year. This will reduce with the death of claimants, but no precise estimate can be made. The figure takes no account of the cost of meeting comparable claims to other Departments.

Sinn Fein (Visit to Wales)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to ban the proposed visit of members of Sinn Fein to Wales at the invitation of Cymdeithas yr Iaith, the Welsh Language Society; what representations he has received; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have no power to ban such visits. I have received one letter asking me to consider the security implications of this visit.

Mrs. Cherry Groce

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 26 January, Official Report, columns 22-23, when he expects the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to submit proposals to the Police Complaints Authority on whether disciplinary charges should be brought against any of the officers involved in the armed raid which resulted in the shooting of Mrs. Cherry Grose; and whether he will require such proposals to be published.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the Police Complaints Authority has received from the commissioner a memorandum under section 90 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 containing proposals in respect of disciplinary action arising from this incident. The authority will announce its decision shortly. Memoranda under section 90 of the 1984 Act are not published.

Vauxhall Tavern

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many officers were involved in the raid on the Vauxhall Tavern public house on 24 January; from which police divisions they were drawn; and what was the cost to public funds of the operation;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the grounds on which protective clothing was worn by officers during the police raid on the Vauxhall Tavern public house on 24 January; and what specific terms of protective clothing were issued to officers and on whose authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that 35 officers were involved in the operation, 22 from the Territorial Support Group and the remainder from Kennington police station. The raid was a routine operation carried out during a normal police shift and so represented no additional cost to the Metropolitan police. The only protective clothing used was disposable gloves issued on the authority of the officer in charge of the operation to protect officers from the risk of infection by Hepatitis B or AIDS as a result of accidental injury from any drugs paraphernalia which might have been found on individuals searched during the operation.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how many complaints concerning alleged drunkenness of persons using the Vauxhall Tavern public house on the night of 24 to 25 January had been made by persons resident in the Vauxhall constituency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there were no complaints of drunkenness from Vauxhall residents on the night of 24 to 25 January.

Lambeth (Reported Crimes)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the number of reported crimes by main category in the London borough of Lambeth between the hours of 6 pm on 23 January and 6 am on 24 January and as to how many of these were investigated, within what time period, by the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that this information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mehmet Karipinar

Mr. Silkin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the right hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford may expect a reply to the urgent letter concerning Mr. Mehmet Karipinar sent to his Department on Monday 19 January; and how long he proposes to keep Mr. Karipinar in detention.

Mr. Waddington: I replied to the right hon. Member on 29 January. Mr. Mehmet Karipinar chose to make a voluntary departure and left the country on 26 January.

West Midlands (Passport Office)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider establishing a passport office in Birmingham or the west midlands.

Mr. Waddington: We have no plans to do so.

Wrexham Prison

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 489, how many of the 300 permanent new jobs at Wrexham prison will be filled as a result of national advertising.

Mr. Mellor: It is not possible to give a firm prediction, but in normal circumstances approximately 250 posts—mainly prison service grades—would be filled as a result of national advertising.

Armley Prison (Prisoner's Petition)

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he received a petition from Mr. B. H., a prisoner currently in Armley prison, No. R07634; and when he expects to respond to that petition.

Mr. Mellor: Petitions were received from prisoner No. R07634 on 24 February 1986, 15 April 1986, and 17 July 1986 about a board of visitors' adjudication. The prisoner was sent an interim reply on 7 October 1986. Further investigation is needed into a procedural point raised about the conduct of the adjudication. A reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Mr. Ray Buckton

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to respond to the letter to him from Mr. Ray Buckton, concerning the compensation provisions of the Criminal Justice Bill; and if he will agree to meet Mr. Buckton to discuss this matter.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend the Minister of State wrote to Mr. Buckton on 28 January, replying to his points and indicating that a meeting could be of assistance.

Customs Clearance (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions exist for immigration control and customs clearance for individuals arriving aboard ship at Dundee and subsequently leaving their ship.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 345]: Immigration control at Dundee is carried out by Customs officers employed as immigration officers in accordance with paragraph 1(1) of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971. The assistance of immigration officers from Edinburgh airport is available as necessary.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the discovery of four people who arrived by ship in Dundee on or about 20 January and came ashore without immigration control or customs clearance.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 345]: On 21 January two men were detained by the police in Dundee on shoplifting charges and two others by the British Transport Police in Edinburgh. Inquiries conducted so far suggest that these persons arrived at Dundee as stowaways on board the "Banglar Robi" and that they had come ashore clandestinely. If this is established, they will be dealt with as illegal entrants to the United Kingdom.

EMPLOYMENT

Asbestos Regulations

Mr. Michie asked the Paymaster General if he will take action to amend the Asbestos Regulations 1969 so that single demolition operations are brought within the scope of the regulations in the light of the recent successful appeal brought by AI Industrial Products plc in the Appeal Court.

Mr. Trippier: The Asbestos Regulations 1969 are due to be replaced by the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations which will apply to all work with asbestos. These regulations are in the final stages of preparation and should be laid before Parliament later in the year.

Meanwhile, I am advised that the 1969 regulations will continue to apply to building operations, including demolition. If in any cases the regulations do not apply, the general provisions of the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974 will.

Employment Measures (Statistics)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the numbers of unemployed people who have benefited from the Government's employment measures since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Hazard Legislation

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will provide for extra Health and Safety Executive inspectors to enforce hazard legislation.

Mr. Trippier: The resources and staffing of the health and safety inspectorates are the responsibility of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive, subject to the limits set by the Government on their total manpower and running costs. Recruitment to all inspectorates is in progress.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Dobson asked the Paymaster General if he will give the number of people registered as unemployed in the constituency of York for one year or more and for three years or more in 1979, 1983 and at the date for which the latest figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information, which is also in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in the York parliamentary constituency who had been unemployed for more than one year and for more than three years in October 1983 and October 1986. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of the statistics in March 1986. Statistics of unemployment for parliamentary constituencies are derived from the ward-based system and are available only from June 1983.

| | Unemployed more than one year | Unemployed more than three years |
|---|---|---|
| October 1983 | 1,317 | 385 |
| October 1986 | 2,225 | 770 |

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Paymaster General if he will give both as a figure and as a percentage the number of persons (a) in the entire workforce and (b) classified as unemployed who are classed as (i) skilled, (ii) semi-skilled and (iii) unskilled.

Mr. Lee: The available information, which is from the Labour Force Survey, is set out in the table.

Great Britain, Spring 1985

|---|---|---|---|---|
| I-III Professional, intermediate and skilled occupations | 1,041,000 | 37 | 19,219,000 | 72 |
| IV Partly skilled occupations | 419,000 | 15 | 4,352,000 | 16 |
| V Unskilled occupations | 199,000 | 7 | 1,564,000 | 6 |
| Not Classified[3] | 1,155,000 | 41 | 1,418,000 | 5 |
| Total | 2,814,000 | 100 | 26,553,000 | 100 |

[1] People without a job and looking for work.

[2] Economically active people (employees, self employed, and unemployed).

[3] Includes 554,000 people looking for work for more than three years who were not asked about their previous occupation and 347,000 people who had never had a job.

Sheltered Placement Scheme

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what representations he has received from voluntary organisations about the current difficulties experienced in the sheltered placement scheme regarding shortages of places.

Mr. Lee: My Department has received representations about the sheltered placement scheme from or on behalf of the following voluntary organisations:

Cambridgeshire Mental Welfare Association.
Enham Village Centre/Papworth Village Settlement.
National Star Centre for Disabled Youth, Cheltenham.
Reading Industrial Therapy Organisation Limited.
The Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR).
The Spastics Society.
Walsall Society for Mentally Handicapped Children and Adults (MENCAP).
The Shaw Trust.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will undertake a full review of the financing, organisation and structure of sheltered employment, in the light of experience gained through the sheltered placement scheme.

Mr. Lee: I have no immediate plans for a review of the sheltered employment programme. Work to examine certain aspects of the sheltered employment programme, including the sheltered placement scheme, is already in hand or is being planned and I do not rule out the possibility of further work in the light of the outcome of consultations on the report on the Tomlinson principles, prepared by a working party of the National Advisory Council on Employment of Disabled People.

Restart Programme

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will give details of the numbers of disabled people who have been interviewed as part of the Government's restart programme.

Mr. Lee: We do not know how many people with disabilities have been interviewed as part of the restart programme. However, of the 779,051 people counselled by 8 January 1987, 32,246 were referred to a disablement resettlement officer for specialist advice and a further 3,015 were referred to an employment rehabilitation centre.

Disabled People

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the level of quota compliance in the public sector, particularly with regard to the figures to be published in the Employment Gazette; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: We are firmly committed to encouraging all employers, including those in the public sector, to employ more people with disabilities, both registered and unregistered. The key to success is continuous education and persuasion to promote the adoption and implementation of constructive policies and practices towards the employment of people with disabilities. We seek to apply such policies in central Government and will be continually striving to improve our performance.

We shall be considering further the role of the quota scheme in this overall approach of education and persuasion when we have the results of the research into the numbers and characteristics of people with disabilities in the working population, which we are commissioning on the advice of the working group set up by the Manpower Services Commission to examine ways of improving the effectiveness of the quota scheme.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will provide his most recent estimates for employment in electronics, class 34, by regional area, Scotland and Wales; and if he will indicate for each area the net loss, or gain, of jobs between June 1979 and June 1986.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the electrical and electronics engineering industry in the regions, Scotland and Wales are available only from censuses of employment. For other dates, the survey sample is not large enough to provide reliable estimates other than for Great Britain.

The following table gives, for the areas specified, the numbers of employees in employment in the industry at September 1984, the most recent date for which a census of employment was held. It also gives the net changes between September 1981 (the date of the previous census of employment, and the earliest date for which comparable figures are available) and September 1984. The estimates are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry in each region, Scotland and Wales.

YTS

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what proportion of disabled young people leaving the YTS find full-time employment (i) six months after completion, (ii) one year after completion and (iii) 18 months after completion.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested. The Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up of YTS leavers shows that of those young people identified as disabled who left YTS schemes between April 1985 and March 1986, 26 per cent. were in full-time work, and 45 per cent. were either in work or further education/training, some three months after leaving.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what proportion of able-bodied young people leaving the YTS find full-time employment (i) six months after completion, (ii) one year after completion and (iii) 18 months after completion.

Mr. Trippier: The information is not available in the form requested. The Manpower Services Commission's regular follow-up survey of YTS leavers shows that between April 1985 and March 1986, nationally 53 per cent. of able-bodied leavers were in full-time work, and 67 per cent. were in either work of further education/training, three months after leaving. Longer term research has also shown that of those able-bodied young people on YTS in September 1984, 67 per cent. were in full-time work 18 months later.

EC (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Paymaster General by how much in numerical and percentage terms unemployment in the European Economic Community altered during the British presidency.

Mr. Lee: Figures for the European Community are not yet published for the whole period of the British presidency, which ended on 31 December 1986. In the first four months from the end of June 1986 to October 1986, the seasonally adjusted level of registered unemployment increased by 18,000 to 16·079 million—a rise of 0·1 per cent.

Tourism

Mr. Steel asked the Paymaster General what is his Department's policy towards the concept of partnership, in the promotion of tourism, between central Government, local authorities, and the commercial sector; and if he will take steps to ensure that the Government maintain their current percentage share of the total grant.

Mr. Trippier: The Government believe that tourism is best promoted nationally and locally by a partnership between the commercial sector and both central and local government. We are continuing to make funds available to the British Tourist Authority and the national tourist boards for the promotion of tourism both regionally and nationally. The national tourist boards are best placed to decide on the allocation of resources based on identified priorities and needs.

New Workers Scheme

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the extent to which the new workers scheme is able to meet the needs of disabled youngsters.

Mr. Lee: I am satisfied that the new workers scheme, by supporting full-time permanent jobs for young people under 21, meets the needs of all such young people—including those who are disabled—who might otherwise be unemployed.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what consultation took place with voluntary organisations and interested parties prior to the introduction of the new workers scheme.

Mr. Lee: The new workers scheme built on the experience of its predecessor, the young workers scheme. Both the CBI and the TUC were consulted prior to its introduction.

Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General if he will consider extending to the new workers scheme the flexibility which was introduced into YTS for disabled young people by extending age limits and by offering additional financial support.

Mr. Trippier: There are currently no such plans. Although the upper age limit for entry to the new workers scheme is set at 20, it is nonetheless universal in its application to all young people, including those with special needs or disabilities.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Dr. David Clark asked the Paymaster General, further to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields on 12 January, Official Report, column 53, concerning public levels of radiation exposure, whether maximum annual exposure of five millisieverts is the only recommendation or guidance given by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in relation to a new nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General whether he will list in the Official Report the names of those people who sit as chairmen of industrial tribunals in Birmingham.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

Full-time chairmen
Mr. Richard Smith (Regional Chairman)
Mr. Bernard Owen

Mr. John Shand
Mr. Nathan Myers
Mr. John Haslam
Mr. David Pugsley
Mr. Manual Delgado

Part-time chairmen
Mr. Dennis Akehurst
Mr. Allen Rees
Mr. Michael Arrowsmith
Mr. Williams Senior
Mr. Gerald Sneath
Mr. John Croom-Johnson
Mr. Gerald Foster

Gas Mains

Dr. Glyn asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce regulations to provide for a minimum depth at which gas mains pipes made of plastic may be laid under streets and pavements.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Availability for Work

Mr. Hayward asked the Paymaster General in what circumstances the new availability for work questionnaire is being given to current as well as new benefit claimants.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The new questionnaire is the latest revision of a form which has been in use since at least 1947. It has been the usual practice since then to use a similar questionnaire as the basis on which the independent adjudicating authorities can decide entitlement. As in the past, we are using the form for current claimants whenever doubts arise about the availability of an unemployed claimant for work. Such doubts may arise, for example, following an inquiry to the claimant's last employer, a routine interview with benefit staff or in any circumstances in which there is a need to confirm availability.

As I informed the House on 29 October, in a few offices claimants who are permitted to sign every quarter instead of every fortnight have also been given the questionnaire. This is an experiment and the results are now being considered.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Entry Clearance

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the maximum, minimum and average periods between the receipt of a first application for settlement at the post in Dhaka and the decision on whether or not to grant entry clearance.

Mr. Eggar: In straightforward cases the minimum time between first application and a decision is currently three to four months for those in queue 1—priority cases. For straightforward cases in queue 2—spouse and children—and queue 3—fiance(e)s—the period is six months. In cases where further local inquiries or reference to the Home Office have to be made, the time taken to resolve these cases varies according to the circumstances of each individual case. Average times could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Swedish consulate in Iran still accepts applications for entry clearance to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The British Interests Section of the Royal Swedish embassy in Tehran still accepts such applications, giving priority to urgent and compassionate cases. However, such is the demand for non-urgent, private visit visas that the waiting list for interview for applicants in that category currently extends to the end of March.

Central America

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dorset, West (Mr. Spicer), Official Report, 3 December, column 650, what evidence, of the nature set out in his reply, Her Majesty's Government have of similar intervention by other countries in central America and elsewhere.

Mr. Eggar: The evidence to which I referred was available from published sources. These have not produced evidence of similar intervention by other countries in central America.

General Sikorski

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the repatriation of the remains of General Sikorski to Poland; what replies he has made; what consideration has been given to the wishes of the family; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tim Renton: In 1981 the Polish authorities proposed that the remains of General Sikorski be removed to Poland. My right hon. and noble Friend the then Secretary of State for the Home Department, Lord Whitelaw, considered a formal application from Major Kycia, acting as Madame Sikorska's executor, for a licence to remove the remains from Newark cemetery to the crypt of the cathedral in Krakow. The Home Secretary fully and carefully considered all the issues involved. He was unconvinced that the relevant criteria for agreeing to a licence had yet been satisfied, and did not, therefore, grant the licence. That decision was recorded in a reply he gave on 30 June 1981 to my hon. Friend the Member for Davyhulme (Mr. Churchill). It was also conveyed to Major Kycia and to the Polish Government.

The Polish Embassy raised the matter again with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in 1983. The embassy was informed that the Home Secretary regarded the 1981 application for a licence as concluded. Later in 1983 a letter to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister from the Association of Fighters for Freedom and Democracy in Warsaw was answered on my right hon. Friend's behalf by Her Majesty's ambassador at Warsaw in the same sense. That remains the position.

South Africa (Oxfam Workers)

Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the South African Government over the continued detention of Oxfam workers, Mr. Sarangalis Mkhatshwa, Arthur Mkhwanaji, Rev. Abraham Major and Janet Cherry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Her Majesty's ambassador at Pretoria raised the cases of those named, and others, as part of the representations which we made to the South African Government on 19 December 1986 on behalf of the Twelve about human rights abuses in South Africa.

EC (Unemployment)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what view he took as European Economic Community President of the European Commission's proposals on reducing unemployment.

Mrs. Chalker: The Commission put forward no new formal proposals for reducing unemployment during the United Kingdom Presidency. We, with the Governments of Italy and the Republic of Ireland, put forward an action programme for employment growth which had the support of the President of the Commission and was adopted by the Labour and Social Affairs Council on 11 December. For an account of the programme, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on 15 December 1986, at column 368.

Falkland Islands (Conservation Zone)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the successful applicants for licences to fish in the Falklands Islands conservation zone.

Mr. Eggar: Details of licence allocations for vessels to fish in the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone (FICZ) are given in the table. British companies have an interest in over 70 vessels licensed for the first season—until 30 June—in addition to those British flag vessels shown in the table. Allocations for the second half of the year have yet to be made.

Vessels permitted to fish in more than one area are issued with separate licences for each, that is north and south.

FICZ licences allocations: 1 February to 30 June 1987

| Country | Squid illex fishery north | North and south | Squid loligo fishery south | Totals Vessels | Licences |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Japan | 58 | 7 | 6 | 71 | 78 |
| Taiwan | 30 | | | 30 | 30 |
| Korea | 25 | | | 25 | 25 |
| Poland | 14 | 14 | 12 | 40 | 54 |
| Spain | 1 | 2 | 33 | 36 | 38 |
| Chile | | | 2 | 2 | 2 |
| Italy | | 4 | 2 | 6 | 10 |
| Greece | | | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| France | | 1 | | 1 | 2 |
| United Kingdom | | | 3 | 3 | 3 |
| | 128 | 28 | 59 | 215 | 243 |

Notes:

Total number of licences in north: 156 (ie 128+28).

Total number of licences in south: 87 (ie 59+28).

Channel Tunnel (Passport Control)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs where French passport control for passengers coming to England from France via the Channel fixed link will take place.

Mr. Eggar: Article 4 of the treaty signed between France and the United Kingdom on the Channel fixed link deals in general terms with frontier controls. The detailed arrangements are still under discussion between us and the French Government.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nigeria

53. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will increase technical assistance to Nigeria so as to provide more support for integrated health and family planning programmes.

Mr. Chris Patten: We plan to increase our technical cooperation programme in Nigeria. Much of the programme will be devoted to training and we shall respond positively to requests for training in integrated health and family planning. We already participate in the World Bank's family health project in Imo State by providing training fellowships.

SADCC (Gaborone)

54. Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how Her Majesty's Government will be represented at the forthcoming Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) in Gaborone; and what British assistance is being provided to SADCC member states.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall be representing Her Majesty's Government at the forthcoming meeting in Gaborone of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference. We have so far pledged £25 million to SADCC. In the last financial year we provided £108 million in bilateral aid to SADCC member states. We expect to maintain substantial programmes of assistance.

Mozambique

55. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he makes of the food situation in Mozambique; and what plans he has for further aid.

Mr. Chris Patten: We are concerned at reports of declining food supplies in Mozambique. We provided 14,500 tonnes of Zimbabwean maize in 1986. We are now sending a further 7,000 tonnes. We shall continue to watch the situation closely.

ENVIRONMENT

Canary Wharf Consortium

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the sale price of land to the Canary wharf consortium will be made public.

Mr. John Patten: The land price paid by the consortium cannot be published until after an agreement has been concluded and when confidentiality restrictions can be lifted.

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much per acre the Canary wharf consortium will be required to pay for land in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone; and what was the price paid for Heron quay.

Mr. John Patten: The price for the land which the Canary wharf consortium is seeking to purchase will be a major factor in negotiations on the master building agreement. For reasons of commercial confidentiality neither this land price nor the price paid for Heron quay can be disclosed at present.

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the long-term effects on the environment of a worst case nuclear accident under adverse meteorological conditions.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the long-term effects on the environment of a worst case nuclear accident under adverse meteorological conditions.

Mr. Waldegrave: The National Radiological Protection Board prepared several reports for the Sizewell inquiry which considered, among other things, the consequences of releases of radioactivity following a nuclear accident under adverse meteorological conditions.

Water Pollution

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures are being taken by his Department to improve the water quality of Britain's rivers, lakes, reservoirs and offshore waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is continuing with the implementation of part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, which provides comprehensive controls over discharges to all significant waters, and is considering the need for making further regulations under the Act aimed at reducing pollution risks. Other measures set out in the consultation paper "The Water Environment: The Next Steps" issued last year in connection with water privatisation, including proposals for introducing statutory water quality objectives, are also being actively pursued. On 1 April 1987, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will come into being with a specific water pollution capability. The inspectorate will take on a number of functions aimed at improving water quality, including the monitoring and enforcement of water quality objectives.

Allotments

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the building of council housing upon public allotments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities wishing to use statutory allotments for other purposes such as housing may not do so without the consent of the Secretary of State under section 8 of the Allotments Act 1925. Consent may be given only if adequate alternative provision is made for displaced plotholders, or if such provision is considered unnecessary or not reasonably practicable. Consent is not required for the disposal of non-statutory allotments.

Consumer Safety

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make extra provision within the rate support grant for local authorities to cover the extra spending which has arisen out of the requirements of the Consumer Safety (Amendment) Act 1986.

Mr. Chope: The Consumer Safety (Amendment) Act 1986 introduced measures which allow local authorities to prevent unsafe consumer goods coming on to the market in the first place. This will enable more effective and efficient enforcement of existing consumer legislation and overall should not result in a need for extra resources.

ReChem International

Mr. Abse asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will place in the Library both the letter he has received from the European Economic Community Commissioner for the Environment relating to ReChem International, and his reply.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have seen reports that the Commission intends to open infraction proceedings relating to ReChem International, under article 169 of the EC treaty. I have not seen any formal communication from the Commission on this subject. The Commission and the United Kingdom regard correspondence on infraction proceedings as confidential between them. It would not therefore be appropriate to place any such letter in the Library of the House.

Owner-occupiers

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the people in each inner London borough are owner-occupiers.

Mr. Tracey: The most recent information available is data from the 1981 census. The percentages of households living in owner-occupied housing are shown in table H of "Census 1981, County report, Greater London, Part I", which is available in the Library.

London Zoo

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money the Government allocated to London Zoo in the last financial year; how much has been allocated for the current financial year; what is the purpose of his grant; and what information he has about animal experiments carried out at the zoo.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1985-86 Government support for the Zoological Society of London amounted to £3 million, made up of a pump-priming capital grant of £1 million and a block revenue grant of £2 million. In the current financial year 1986-87, Government are making available a further £2 million revenue grant, and £34,300 in capital grant to match sums the society raised privately in 1985-86. The grant is given to maintain the society's nationally and internationally recognised work in conservation and scientific research.

Responsibility for the control of animal experiments rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. However, I understand that it is an internal rule of ZSL that no animal in its collection is used for experiments requiring a licence under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, which has recently replaced the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876. The society's research arm, the Institute of Zoology, is inspected under this Act and the Government are thus able to be satisfied that the law is being complied with and that experiments are neither cruel nor unnecessary. A full account of the activities of the institute is published in the Scientific Report (1984-86) available from ZSL.

Local Authority Work (Competition)

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that competition between private firms and local authority work forces will be carried out on wholly fair terms.

Mr. Ridley: I am glad to have the hon. Member's support for the principle that local authorities, in carrying out their duties under the forthcoming competition legislation, must ensure fairness of treatment as between their DLOs and private contractors. I also expect his support for the necessary powers to deal with those who attempt to protect their DLOs from fair competition; and for similar rules to protect the private sector from unfair competition from local authority businesses.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the powers he proposes to take to oblige local authorities to seek competitive tenders for their services will enable him, without further primary legislation, to oblige councils to tender for the provision of (a) teaching, (b) police, (c) fire, (d) planning control and (e) environmental health services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Government do not envisage using the enabling power in the forthcoming Local Government Bill to introduce compulsory competitive tendering for the provision of the services listed by the hon. Member. However, I believe that the power is necessary so that the competitive process can be extended to other support services after the initial tranche of activities. Orders made under this enabling power would be subject to parliamentary scrutiny.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has conducted or intends to commission any research to establish the administrative implications of introducing compulsory tendering procedures for (a) vehicle maintenance, (b) office cleaning, (c) street cleaning, (d) refuse collection, (e) the management of leisure centres, (f) ground maintenance and (g) catering services.

Mr. Ridley: There is already a considerable amount of independent professional advice on the administrative implications of competitive tendering. The Government therefore have no plans to commission any research at present.

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimate, in accordance with the principles of the financial management initiative, of the overall savings that he expects to secure by introducing compulsory competitive tendering in relation to (a) vehicle maintenance, (b) office cleaning, (c) street cleaning, (d) refuse collection, (e) the management of leisure centres, (f) ground maintenance and (g) catering services; and how he proposes to monitor whether those savings are achieved.

Mr. Ridley: Local authorities which have contracted out service provision as a result of competitive tendering regularly report savings of 20 per cent. to 30 per cent. on previous costs. If all authorities matched this, savings would exceed £500 million per annum. Decisions on how best to monitor the future level of savings will be taken in due course.

Homes Insulation

Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he has given to extending the scope of the homes insulation scheme to cover draughtproofing for low income households.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham Edgbaston (Dame J. Knight) on 28 January, at column 244.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures for the number of households accepted as homeless in each London borough, and in the London boroughs in total, for each year since such figures were first compiled.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the Department's regular quarterly statistics about homelessness, copies of which are available in the Library.

Housing Land

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of any studies or research sponsored by his Department on the effects of circular 15/84 about land for housing.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has commissioned two research studies on land for housing recently. A report on a study of land use planning and the housing market by Coopers and Lybrand was published by it in 1985. A supplementary report on the same study will be published shortly. A study on land used for residential development in the south-east by Roger Tym and Partners has been completed and a report will be published by the consultants.

Defective Housing

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information which he has concerning the number of houses of the defective categories designated under the Housing Act 1985 which were built for, and have remained in, private as opposed to public ownership.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that such properties were built in certain locations, including Basingstoke, Chesham, Taunton and Dartford. The Department is currently obtaining further information.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now consider giving the owners of houses of the defective categories designated in the Housing Act 1985, but which never formed part of public housing stock, rights comparable to those given to owners of such housing which did once form part of the public housing stock.

Mr. John Patten: I will answer this question shortly.

Urban Development Agency (Birmingham)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received further proposals in respect of an urban development agency for Birmingham.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. Birmingham city council wrote to my right hon. Friend on 23 December and he will be replying very shortly.

Nuclear Installations (Radiation)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will publish a list of the estimated maximum exposures to radiation of any member of the public from any possible combination of exposure pathways for each licensed nuclear installation, expressed in millisieverts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish a table showing for each licensed nuclear installation (a) when the date certificates of authorisation for radioactive discharges were last issued, (b) whether such certificates contain numerical limits for all types of radioactive discharges, (c) when habits surveys relating to all possible pathways of significant radiation exposure of members of the public were last undertaken, (d) when detailed studies of possible individual membership of more than one critical group were last undertaken and (e) whether review work for new certificates of authorisation following Cmnd. 9852 has been started; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I will write to the hon. Member.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what professional staff in his Department are engaged in the programme of reviewing certificates of authorisation for radioactive discharges following Cmnd. 9852; whether such staff are only engaged in review work for installations in England; whether the individuals concerned have other duties; what other organisations are involved in the review work; if he will publish a timetable for issuing the new certificates for each nuclear installation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Officers of Her Majesty's Radiochemical Inspectorate are engaged in the programme of reviewing certificates of authorisation on my behalf. These officers are engaged only in review work for installations in England but will participate in reviews of Welsh installations as requested by the Secretary of State for Wales. These officers have a range of other duties including regulation of discharges under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 and the inspection of premises. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is also involved in the review work. As stated in paragraph 63 of Cmnd. 9852, it is our aim to complete the review of liquid and gaseous authorisations for all nuclear installations in the United Kingdom within three years. It is not practicable to publish a timetable for issuing new certificates.

County Halls (Sale)

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has received from the various residuary bodies about progress on the sale of the former metropolitan county halls.

Mr. Chope: The residuary bodies for the metropolitan areas are already marketing the headquarters buildings of the abolished councils which remain in their ownership.

Council Housing (Loans)

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest data he has on the average total cost of building and financing loans on council flats and houses with one, two and three bedrooms, respectively.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1987]: Provisional figures for the mean construction costs, excluding land, site works and fees, in tenders accepted by English local authorities, and the implied loan charges, are as follows.

|---|---|---|---|
| One bedroom | 18,700 | 2,107 | 37,347 |
| Two bedroom | 18,200 | 2,051 | 36,349 |
| Three bedroom | 20,900 | 2,355 | 41,741 |

These averages include dwellings for special needs. The figures for loan charges have been calculated on the assumption that construction costs are financed by loans for 60 years at an interest rate of 10 per cent. repaid through a sinking fund with an accumulation rate of 5 per cent.

Trafalgar Square (Students' Meeting)

Mr. Straw asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what decision he has made in respect of the application by the National Union of Students for the use of Trafalgar square for a public meeting on 21 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1987]: Permission is being refused. It is not appropriate on public safety grounds for such demonstrations to take place while Nelson's column is being cleaned.

Council House Sales

Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each London borough for the years 1980 to 1986 the numbers of tenants who have initiated purchase of their council house, and the numbers who have completed; and if he will break these figures down to show purchases of flats and houses.

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987, c. 174]: The table gives the available information on claims received and sales completed under the right-to-buy provisions, up to September 1986. Corresponding information is not available on the progress of voluntary sales to tenants.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment, in relation to the Thames barrier, what was (i) the length of time between the final grant of planning permission and the coming into full-scale operation of the barrier; (ii) the estimate either made by his Department, assessed by his Department, or made available to his Department, at the time of the final grant of planning permission and (iii) the cost of construction estimated by his Department, assessed by his cost of construction, including all associated costs; (iv) actual cost of construction converted into constant prices at a convenient date close to the final grant of planning permission and (v) the cost of construction estimated by his Department, assessed by his Department, or made available to his Department, at the time of the final grant of planning permission.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply. The information is as follows:

(i) Planning permission was not necessary for the construction of the Thames barrier — exemption was granted in the Thames Barrier and Flood Prevention Act 1972. The period between this enactment and operation of the Barrier was 10 years and two months.

(ii) The estimate of the length of this period at the time of enactment was five to six years.

(iii) Some work remains to be completed. It is estimated that the final cost will be about £450 million.

(iv) At December 1973 prices the estimated final cost would be about £170 million.

(v) The estimated cost of construction in December 1973 was £88 million. However, designs were not fully complete at the time that estimate was made.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has prepared an analysis of the difference in cost of the Thames barrier between that estimated at the time of the final grant of planning permission and outcome.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply. No.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has prepared an analysis of the difference in construction time of the Thames barrier between that estimated at the time of the final grant of planning permission, and outcome.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply. No.

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has available to it any analysis prepared by the former Greater London Council, or any department thereof, of the difference in cost of the Thames barrier between that estimated at the time of the final grant of planning permission, and outcome; and if he will place a copy of such analysis in the Library.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply. No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Telecom (Strike)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the effect on the telephone service of the strike by British Telecom engineers.

Mr. Butcher: British Telecom's network is designed to be resilient. There has been little disruption of significance to services overall so far. The company is taking all the steps it can to maintain services. Services provided over the Mercury network are not directly affected.

Rolls-Royce plc

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the figure for the net borrowings of Rolls-Royce plc at 31 December 1985 using the definition indicated in his answer to the hon. Member for Hastings and Rye (Mr. Warren) on 18 December 1986, Official Report, columns 607-8, along with details of how the figure is made up.

Mr. Pattie: The net borrowings of Rolls-Royce plc at 31 December 1985 were £273 million. This sum is based on the following figures taken from the company annual report for 1985:

Regional Aid

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, by region, the amount granted in regional assistance as regional development grants in each financial year since 1976-77 at current and outturn prices.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The question has been interpreted as asking for information at current and constant prices.

Payments of regional development grants since 1976-77 at current or outturn prices were as follows:

[2] Expenditure on a 1986 price basis for each year is calculated by applying the appropriate deflator to expenditure at current prices.

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, by region, the amount granted in national selective assistance under section 8 of the Industry Act, in each year since the inception of the scheme at current and outturn prices.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Cumulative expenditure by region to 31 March 1986 for certain forms of assistance under section 8 of the Industry Act 1972 and the Industrial Development Act 1982 is as follows:

| Region | Amount (£'000) |
|---|---|
| Scotland | 50,599 |
| Wales | 28,503 |

Cordless Telephones

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration is being given to the possibility of laying an order under the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1967 which would outlaw the manufacture, sale, leasing, keeping and importation of cordless telephones.

Mr. Butcher: I plan to lay an order under section 7 of the Wireless Telegraphy Act 1967 restricting the import, sale, and manufacture and possession of unapproved cordless telephones within the next two months.

The open sale of this appraratus, which it is unlawful to use, has led to interference to authorised radio services, including, most worryingly, to emergency services.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there is any evidence that cordless telephones and the frequencies on which they operate cause interference to emergency services.

Mr. Butcher: There is clear evidence that the use of unapproved cordless telephones causes interference to other radio services, including those used by the emergency services. Where unapproved apparatus is not well designed, it generates harmonic frequencies and this, coupled with the power used, can interfere with authorised services on a large number of different frequencies.

The Department's radio investigation service has records of a number of incidents of interference to police and fire services' radio systems as a result of the use of unapproved cordless telephones, and to a radio telemetry system used by a water authority for monitoring water levels. Other radio services to have suffered similar interference include local and water authority mobile systems, those used by the Automobile Association and other business users, and those operated by the Ministry of Defence. While these are not emergency services as such, the use of radio by this kind of agency is often related to emergencies, some of which involve safety of life. The number of instances of interference is rising in line with the increased use of unapproved equipment.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has not yet allocated frequencies for cordless telephones with a range of approximately one mile.

Mr. Butcher: Radio apparatus must meet specifications laid down to avoid interference. In general, the greater the range of any radio apparatus, the smaller the number of users that can be accommodated on any set of frequencies. The present specifications were drawn up to allow a reasonable density of use in urban areas and the range had to be limited to achieve this. Nevertheless, we recognise that there may be a demand for instruments with a rather longer range than the present limits, and will be discussing with manufacturers whether a suitable specification can be drawn up, and if so whether a suitable frequency allocation can be made. Existing unapproved apparatus is not suitable for this purpose.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give details of any prosecutions brought, and penalties imposed, where cordless telephones have been proved to have caused interference to emergency services.

Mr. Butcher: A successful prosecution was brought following interference to fire brigade radio communications as a result of the use of unapproved cordless telephone. The defendant was fined £50, orderd to pay £20 costs to my Department, and ordered to forfeit the equipment. In a case of interference to a radio telemetry system used by a water authority for monitoring water levels, a defendant was fined £200, ordered to pay £60 costs, and ordered to forfeit the equipment.

Emergency Services (Radio Frequencies)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what radio frequencies are currently used by the emergency services.

Mr. Butcher: The police and fire services use the radio frequency bands 80-84 MHz—base receive mode for the mobile radio service — and 97·6-102·1 MHz — base transmit for the mobile radio service. In addition they operate on certain frequencies in the range of 143-168 MHz. The ambulance services operate on 165-168 MHz and on 170-173 MHz.

Radio Bands (Allocations)

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to whom the 49 and 69 MHz radio bands are allocated.

Mr. Butcher: The 49 MHz radio band is allocated to land mobile services generally, to paging services including hospital pagers and low power services including alarms for the elderly. The 69 MHz radio band is allocated to Government use.

EC (United Kingdom Presidency)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the internal market opening measures (a) adopted and (b) agreed during the British presidency.

Mr. Alan Clark: During the United Kingdom presidency—July-December 1986—the Council adopted or agreed 48 individual measures which will help remove barriers to trade in the Community. Details of 41 measures were given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in an answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor) on 19 December 1986 at columns 765-68. I provided details of the seven remaining measures in and answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) on 12 January 1987, at column 5.

Forty-four of the measures were formally adopted by the Council. Four others were agreed and await adoption. These are one of the measures dealing with the marketing of pharmaceuticals; and measures dealing with roll-over protection structures on narrow-track wheeled agricultural and forestry tractors; the supplies directive; and energy labelling tolerance levels.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the internal market opening measures that were programmed for agreement or adoption during the British presidency of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: Work during the United Kingdom Presidency was based on a Presidency action programme of internal market measures to be discussed by the Council during the period 1 July 1986 to 1 July 1987. Details of these were given in an answer to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 25 June 1986, at columns 174-78. A copy of the programme is available in the Library of the House.

House of Fraser

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 January, Official Report, columns 328-9, what resources and what priority his Department is according to the consideration of the new information supplied by Lonrho plc in December 1986 about the purchase of House of Fraser by the Al Fayed family; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend is considering the material submitted on behalf of Lonrho carefully. He will devote to this such time and resources as he considers necessary in order to reach his conclusions on the material.

Reed Corrugated Papers, Coatbridge

Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to reply to the letter dated 20 January from the hon. Member for Monklands, West concerning the problem raised by Reed Corrugated Papers, Coatbridge.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1987]: I will be replying to the hon. Gentleman shortly. I am glad that a settlement has now been reached between the Community and the United States which avoids any imposition of restrictions by the United States on imports from the Community.

WALES

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the cost incurred by the Welsh water authority for all work undertaken in preparation for privatisation.

Mr. Mark Robinson: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Home Education

Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children are being educated out of school and in the home in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many children are being educated out of school and in the home in Cardiff West; and if he will make a statement.

General Certificate of Secondary Education

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if the leaflets explaining the new general certificate of secondary education to parents will also be available in Welsh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: All GCSE explanatory leaflets issued in Wales for the informaton of the general public, including parents, have been in the English and Welsh languages.

Cot Deaths

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many cot deaths have occurred in Wales in each of the last seven years.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The number of registered deaths in Wales for which cot death — sudden infant death syndrome — was mentioned on the death certificate — whether or not it was given as the underlying cause—is given in the following table:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 57 |
| 1980 | 77 |
| 1981 | 67 |
| 1982 | 66 |
| 1983 | 65 |
| 1984 | 49 |
| 1985 | 75 |
| [1]1986 | 49 |

Source: Office of Population Censuses and Surveys.

Unemployment Costs

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimation of the cost to the Exchequer of the present level of unemployment on Alyn and Deeside on an annual basis.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I regret that the estimates requested cannot be provided. A regional breakdown of benefits paid to unemployed people is not available, nor is it possible to estimate the revenue forgone.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is considering setting up urban development corporations in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: An order to designate an urban development area and establish an urban development corporation in Cardiff was laid before Parliament on 12 January. We are not at present considering the establishment of any other urban development corporations in Wales.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether, following his announcement confirming that all local authorities' bids for loft insulation had been met, he intends to implement the changes to the regulations governing loft insulation grants announced by the Minister for Housing and Construction, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), on 19 December, Official Report, column 757.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The changes to the regulations governing loft insulation grants announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction will apply in both England and Wales.

Housing (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing how many houses specifically designed for disabled people have been built in each housing authority area in Wales in each quarter since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson [pursuant to the reply, 22 January, c. 674]: The information the hon. Gentleman requires is given in the following table:

House completions specifically designed for disabled people (including houses built to mobility standards)

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Review

Mr. Colvin asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the recent review which examined his Department's regional organisation.

Mr. Jopling: Following a review last year of the management and structure of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, a wider review has been carried out of my Department's regional organisation as a whole. It is more than five years since the last such review and in that time there have been important developments in the scope of the Department's work and the way in which it is run. The latest review has taken these into account.

I am now considering a report from the review team. Changes recommended include a reduction in the number of regional offices from five to four and in divisional offices from 19 to 15. The offices affected would be changed in status but they would be retained as bases for the advisory service. Changes in management structure are also recommended.

As regards the system of regions and divisions, my preliminary view is that there is a case for moving in the direction recommended in the report. I am now beginning consultation on that basis, and I am inviting all concerned to submit comments on the report's proposals by 31 March 1987. A copy of the report is being placed in the Library of the House.

My intention is that any changes resulting from this review should be introduced not later than 1 April 1988 with the aim of ensuring that my Department should be fully adapted to meet the challenge of servicing the agricultural industry and others with an interest in the countryside, and should do so as efficiently as possible.

Coast Protection

Sir Julian Ridsdale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement bringing up to date the position concerning coast protection of the Naze at Walton on the Naze.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The coast protection scheme proposed by Tendring district council has met several objections and the council was directed last June to make application for planning permission to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. However, I am informed that further site investigations are now under consideration, pending the outcome of which the council has deferred submission of the application.

EC Budget

Mr. Foulkes asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by how much the proportion of the European Economic Community budget devoted to agriculture was altered during the British presidency.

Mr. Jopling: Decisions taken during the British presidency, notably the agreement in December on milk and beef, will result in considerable savings in expenditure. Agriculture Their effect on agriculture's share of the total budget will depend on the overall resources available and decisions taken on other Community activities.

Surplus Food (Distribution)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements have been made by his Department to reimburse the charitable organisations which have undertaken to distribute the free food from the European Economic Community for their legitimate expenses.

Mr. Jopling: The European Commission is making payments available at a flat rate per tonne for re-packing foodstuffs into small amounts where necessary and for transporting them to charitable organisations' distribution points. The rates of payment for butter and beef are still under discussion in Brussels and will be announced to the charitable organisations as soon as possible. Costs of further distribution to individual recipients are for the charitable organisations themselves.

Radioactive Discharges

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what professional staff in his Department are engaged in the programme of reviewing certificates of authorisation for radioactive discharges following Cmnd. 9852; whether such staff are only engaged in review work for installations in England; whether the individuals concerned have other duties; what other organisations are involved in the review work; if he will publish a timetable for issuing the new certificates for each nuclear installation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jopling: Officers of the fisheries radiological inspectorate and the atomic energy unit of my Department are engaged in the programme of reviewing certificates of authorisation on our behalf in respect of installations in England and will participate on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales in the review of authorisations for installations in Wales. The officers concerned undertake a range of other duties relating to inspection and regulation of discharges under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, related monitoring and research programmes and provision of technical advice.

The Department of the Environment is also involved in the review work in England, as is the Welsh Office in respect of Welsh installations and the Scottish Office in respect of Scottish installations. As was stated in paragraph 63 of Cmnd. 9852, the intention is to complete the review work within three years. I regret that it is not possible to publish a timetable for issuing new certificates.

Dairy Quotas (Compensation)

Mr. Colin Shepherd asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what compensation will be payable to dairy farmers who are obliged to accept compulsory reductions of quota in the event that, at the end of the period for obtaining the overall reduction of quota by voluntary means, the required 2 per cent. has not been achieved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Under Community rules, we would be required to make compulsory cuts in producers' quotas if the reduction in our national quota could not be fully met by quota purchased under the Community outgoers scheme. This would mean that some of the Community funds made available to finance the scheme would remain unspent. The Council of Ministers in December agreed that such funds may be used to pay direct compensation to producers for compulsory cuts in quota. Alternatively, they may be used to buy quota under a national outgoers scheme for re-allocation to specified categories of producer. In the event that it proves impossible to secure the full uptake of the Community outgoers scheme, we will of course consult fully with the industry before deciding which of these options should be chosen.

Foodstuffs (Levies)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will bring up to date for the whole or part of 1986 the information on duties and levies on foodstuffs provided in his written answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 7 March 1984, Official Report, column 582.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Figures for the whole of 1986 are not yet available. The table shows, for the first 10 months of 1986, the duties and levies on imports of food and live animals chiefly for food —Standard International Trade Classification (Rev 2) Section 0—from countries for which no preferential duty rates apply:

January to October 1986

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Customs duty | 43·1 |
| Agricultural levy | 125·5 |
| Total charges | 168·6 |
| Total charges as a proportion of the value of the goods subject to duty and/or levy | 20·8 |

The basis on which the proportion shown in the table has been calculated differs from that used for the 1983 data in the earlier written answer to which the hon. Member refers. This is because no information on the value of imports subject only to levy was then, or is now, readily available, and the charges were calculated as a percentage only of the value of goods charged with customs duties. I am sorry that this was not made clear at the time.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Breach of Confidence

43. Mr. Maclennan asked the Attorney-General what steps he is taking to implement the recommendations of the Law Commission on breach of confidence.

The Solicitor-General: The Government intend to introduce legislation based on the recomendations made by the Law Commission in its report No. 110, cmnd. 8388, on the law in England and Wales relating to breach of confidence. But since the commission's report amounts essentially to a recommendation for a restatement of the common law it is not a matter to which the Government propose to give high priority at present.

Crown Prosecution Service

45. Mr. Neale asked the Attorney-General how many visits have been undertaken by law officers to areas of the Crown Prosecution Service.

The Solicitor-General: Each of the six areas comprising a former metropolitan county has received an extensive visit from me since the service came into operation, as have Durham and parts of two London areas. I have been greatly impressed by the universal commitment of staff at all levels to the success of this new and independent service.

Fraud (Prosecutions)

46. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Attorney-General whether figures are yet available for fraud prosecution under the fraud investigation group proceedings up to 31 December 1986.

The Attorney-General: During 1986, 86 trails on indictment were handled by the fraud divisions of the Crown Prosecution Service. In 74 of these trials convictions were secured. These trials involved 195 defendants, of whom 121 pleaded guilty and 52 were convicted.

Of the 86 cases, 22 were formally designated as FIG cases. In 21 of these cases convictions were secured.

The total sum at risk in the cases dealt with in 1986 was £171 million.

The average time from first reference to the fraud divisions to plea or verdict was 16 months.

Barristers' Fees

Mr. Greenway asked the Attorney-General what progress has been made in negotiations with the Bar regarding the fee levels for prosecuting counsel for 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: Agreement has now been reached with the Bar regarding the levels of fee to be paid in 1987-88 to prosecuting counsel instructed by the Crown Prosecution Service. The agreement provides for increases in fees to be weighted in favour of the more substantial contested cases and improves the provisions relating to appearance fees. These changes will take effect from 1 April 1987.

Northern Ireland (Cash Limits)

Mr. Hind asked the Attorney-General what change he proposes to make to the 1986-87 cash limits for Class XX Vote 22, Administration of Justice, Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland court services' running costs limit.

The Attorney-General: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the running costs limit for the Northern Ireland court service will be increased by £34,000 from £10,737,000 to £10,771,000, thereby increasing the cash limit for Class XX, Vote 22 by the same amount from £9,731,000 to £9,765,000. The increase relates to undertakers' charges in coroners' courts which are being transferred from the Law, Order, Protective and Miscellaneous Services, Northern Ireland, Vote—Class XVIII, Vote 1—where there will be an offsetting reduction. There is therefore no net increase in public expenditure or aggregate running costs.

Zircon Satellite

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Attorney-General whether, before initiating inquiries into the action of the New Statesman in publishing details concerning project Zircon, he satisfied himself that some or all of the same material had not already been published in other organs; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I was satisfied that there were sufficient grounds for inviting the Director of Public Prosecutions to request a police investigation.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Storage

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to add new nuclear contaminated material to the residual nuclear storage at the former Royal Navy dockyard in Gillingham, Kent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The residual nuclear storage facility known, as MOD Gillingham consists of a storage facility for radioactive materials and contaminated equipment and a disposal site for low level radioactive waste. The latter was used for disposal of waste up to the end of last year, but there are no plans for its further use. The storage facility was used for contaminated equipment when Chatham dockyard was in operation and now contains intermediate level waste awaiting disposal. Its use for storage of containers of radioactive material and contaminated equipment from other dockyards is being considered and items may be transferred temporarily from Devonport and/or Rosyth, pending the extension of their own storage facilities. There will be no hazard to members of the public arising from storage of such items as the radiation levels just outside the building will be such that no special restrictions on movement will be required.

Convoy Accident (Wiltshire)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many recovery vehicles were dispatched to the scene of the convoy accident in Wiltshire on 10 January and of what type; if a military recovery vehicle was sent to the scene of the accident; and by whom the crane that successfully completed the recovery operation was supplied.

Mr. Stanley: Two recovery vehicles were dispatched to the scene of the accident in Wiltshire on 10 January. These were a military Scammell recovery vehicle for towing operations and a 50-ton crane to right the vehicle involved in the accident. The crane was supplied by Scott-Greenham Limited of Southampton, an approved MOD contractor.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence why he will not set up an inquiry of Privy Counsellors into the convoy accident in Wiltshire on 10 January.

Dangerous Cargoes

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will set up an inquiry of Privy Counsellors into the general question of transporting dangerous military cargoes on minor roads.

Mr. Stanley: No.

Royal Air Force, Binbrook

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for the future of Royal Air Force, Binbrook, Lincolnshire; how many civilians are currently employed there: for how long the base is expected to remain in use after the departure of the Lightning aircraft; and for what purpose.

Mr. Stanley: I cannot add at present to what was said by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces at columns 1118-19 in the debate on the Royal Air Force on 22 January.

The number of civilians currently employed at RAF Binbrook is 109.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Redmond asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the occasions during the course of the last calendar year when his Department had reason to meet or consult with the chief fire officer for South Yorkshire or the South Yorkshire fire and civil defence authority concerning incidents involving radioactive materials.

Mr. Stanley: Liaison is conducted with those civil authorities, including fire services, which have a need to know. I am not prepared to go into further detail, as that could indicate routes and methods of transport of defence nuclear materials, which is contrary to the policy of successive Governments.

Ex Gratia Payments

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and service women are receiving ex gratia payments for injuries incurred during their service.

Mr. Freeman: None are currently receiving ex-gratia payments. Those discharged as a result of injuries received during service receive lump sums and/or pensions under the armed forces pension scheme and, where appropriate, the DHSS war pension scheme, depending upon the circumstances of their injury.

Major Projects (Expenditure)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 131, agreement has now been reached with the Public Accounts Committee regarding early warning from his Department to the Committee of projects during project definition which are likely to exceed the £250 million expenditure limit; and how, in this context, projects in respect of which it would not be in the public interest to reveal details, are treated.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence equipment projects appear in the major project statement when they have been authorised for full development or production and meet the appropriate cost criteria; and since 1983, in response to the request of the Public Accounts Committee, projects which are expected at some stage to meet the criteria have been noted separately in the statement when they have incurred expenditure exceeding £10 million up to the end of project definition.

In its 35th report, 1985-86, the Public Accounts Committee expressed the wish that as much as possible of the information in future statements should be published and my Department in its response gave an undertaking that we would do our best to facilitate this. In the major project statement for 1986, therefore, we have separately annotated those details which are sensitive from the security or commercial standpoint and seek the Committee's co-operation in preventing their public disclosure.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the date for the submission of the major projects statement to the Public Accounts Committee each year; and what is the timing and procedure for informing the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee of any project which would qualify for inclusion in the major projects statement but which cannot be submitted to the Public Accounts Committee as a whole due to considerations of national security.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no set date for submission of the major project statement to the Public Accounts Committee. The statement is submitted to the Committee towards the end of the calendar year. In the case of a project which is excluded from the major project statement on grounds of national security, the National Audit Office would be informed by the time when, but for national security considerations, the project would have been included in the statement for the first time; and would have continuing access to the relevant papers. It would then be for the Comptroller and Auditor General to decide when to inform the Chairman of the PAC.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether any criteria relating to the precise stage a project has reached apply to the inclusion of such a project in the major projects statement submitted annually to the Public Accounts Committee, over and above the cost criteria specified in his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 131.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Defence equipment projects appear in the major project statement when they have been authorised for full development or production and meet the appropriate cost criteria; since 1983, in response to the request of the Public Accounts Committee, projects which are expected at some stage to meet the criteria have been noted separately in the statement when they have incurred expenditure exceeding £10 million up to the end of project definition.

In its 35th report, 1985-86, the Public Accounts Committee expressed the wish that as much as possible of the information in future statements should be published and in my Department in its response gave an undertaking that we would do our best to facilitate this. In the major project statement for 1986, therefore, we have separately annotated those details which are sensitive from the security or commercial standpoint and seek the Committee's co-operation in preventing their public disclosure.

L/Cpl. S. J. Cockton

Mr. Raison asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to receive the results of the inquiry into the death of L/Cpl. S. J. Cockton on 6 June 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his answer, 26 January 1987, c. 132]: In my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North-West (Mr. Bellingham) on 25 June 1986 at c. 161-3, I set out the circumstances surrounding the loss of an Army Gazelle helicopter in the Falkland Islands on 6 June 1982. I subsequently decided that a board of inquiry should be held into the loss.

The board of inquiry's report has now been carefully considered. It has been the practice of successive Governments not to publish reports of this kind. Evidence is given to boards of inquiry in confidence and the report is likely to contain a significant amount of classified information. This is indeed the case in this instance. I wish, however, to give as full an account of the board's findings as is possible within those constraints.

So far as the circumstances of the accident are concerned, the board's independent inquiry confirmed and amplified the account of the Gazelle's mission and the role of HMS Cardiff which I gave in my answer on 25 June. Because the Gazelle's sortie was to be flown within the airspace of 5 Infantry Brigade on a brigade task, there was no requirement under the standard operating procedures in force at the time for any authority outside the brigade to be informed. Nor did the board find any evidence to suggest that anybody outside 5 Brigade had prior knowledge of the flight. At the time of the accident, HMS Cardiff was operating off the east coast of East Falkland on a naval gunfire support mission in support of 3 Commando Brigade. Concurrently, HMS Cardiff had been tasked with enforcing the total exclusion zone and, as part of this, to deter or destroy Argentine aircraft attempting to use Port Stanley airfield. The missile engagement zone of the ship's Seadart missiles covered a large part of East Falkland.

Ships, including HMS Cardiff, had been used for similar tasks on frequent occasions before 6 June. Indeed on the night of 2-3 June, HMS Cardiff had engaged an Argentine aircraft attempting to use Port Stanley airfield. When HMS Cardiff detected a radar contact over East Falkland on 6 June, it was heading towards Port Stanley airfield along a route previously used by Argentine aircraft. No friendly aircraft movements had been forecast; HMS Cardiff was unaware of the rebroadcast station on Mount Pleasant peak; and there were no identification friend or foe (IFF) or other friendly transmissions from the contact. It was accordingly assessed to be an Argentine aircraft, probably fixed wing, and in accordance with the approved criteria for engaging such contacts, HMS Cardiff fired her Seadart missiles and shot it down.

The board of inquiry noted that all staff were most conscious of the risk of accidental engagements between units of the task force and took great pains to prevent them throughout the campaign. Nevertheless, there was a lack of experience in both Army and Navy staffs with each other's procedures and capabilities.

Procedures were developing during the campaign, but neither the Navy nor the Army staffs appreciated in time the significance of a ship's missile engagement zone overlapping the land. There was a widespread lack of perception of the conflict between the air interdiction task of the Naval ships using the Seadart system over the land and the autonomous nature of land force helicopters in their own brigade airspace.

The board confirmed that the Gazelle helicopter had been fitted with IFF but that, as I said in my reply on 25 June, it was switched off because it had been established that at that time the use of this equipment caused interference with other weapon systems critical to the battle.

The particular complexities of the Falklands campaign and the involvement at short notice of staff and units unfamiliar with amphibious and joint warfare put great pressure on individuals and procdures. This was exacerbated by the difficulties of communication within the land forces, which were at that time fully stretched in the crucial advance to Port Stanley, and between them and the Royal Navy. The board concluded that the loss of the Gazelle was caused by an accumulation of adverse factors and errors among naval and military staffs at all levels. The board recommended that neither negligence nor blame should be attributed to any individual and that no action should be taken against any individual.

Since the Falklands campaign, considerable improvements have been made in joint warfare procedures and in the capabilities of 5 Brigade. In addition, staffs and units have planned and exercised the deployment of joint forces out of area, most recently in Oman last November. Everything possible has been and continues to be done to learn the lessons from the tragic loss of the Gazelle helicopter on 6 June 1982.

Our deepest sympathy goes to the relatives of the four men who died.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services

2. Mr. Dickens asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present level of commercial registration of bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Currently there is broadly the same level of services overall as before deregulation, about 75 per cent. commercial and the balance on subsidised contracts.

Pennines (Major Roads)

14. Sir John Osborn asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total number of days for which the major roads across the Pennines, with the exception of the M62, have been closed to traffic between Yorkshire, Derbyshire and Lancashire and Cheshire this Janary mainly due to heavy snow; and for which months in each of the past 30 years the number of such days has been the highest.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. There was no day last month when all the major roads across the Pennines were close. I will write to my hon. Friend with details of those roads which were closed.

I cannot answer the second part of my hon. Friend's question.

Driving Tests (Impersonation)

15. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to ensure that there is no impersonation of those undertaking driving tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are checks which examiners make. I do not wish to give details. Perhaps my hon. Friend would let me know if he has a particular case in mind.

One-man Buses

16. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department issues on the operation of one-man buses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department has issued a code of practice on safety and other special requirements for public service vehicles intended for one person operation. In all other respects the way in which such vehicles are employed is the matter for the operator concerned.

National Bus Company

17. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the privatisation of the National Bus Company.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am very pleased with the progress made by the National Bus Company, 14 subsidiaries have been sold, 13 of them to their managements, and in every case provision has been made for employees to participate in the success of their undertaking. Many more sales are being negotiated and NBC is confident that a substantial part of its business will have been privatised by the end of this year.

Road Schemes

18. Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many road schemes will be supported with transport supplementary grant in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We aim to support 340 major schemes costing £1 million or more, 70 schemes to be supported for the first time in 1987-88. The remaining 270 maintain support for schemes in previous settlements where local authorities continue to make satisfactory progress. Schemes bring road safety and environmental benefit as well as ensuring the effective flow of goods and people on more important local roads.

Manchester Airport (Rail Link)

19. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to meet with the chairman of British Rail to discuss the rail link to Manchester airport.

Mr. Moore: There is no need for me to do so since British Rail has already put forward proposals for its share of the funding. I should be happy to meet representatives of Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Authority and Manchester Airport plc, together with British Rail, as soon as they have presented me with details of their proposals.

Motorways

20. Mr. Stevens asked the Secretary of State for Transport if there has been any improvement in the time taken to repair motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The increasing use of lane rental contracts has produced a dramatic improvement. In 1985-86 lane rental contracts were completed on average 38 per cent. faster than normally expected. They produced a saving of about 500 days of traffic delay worth over £8 million to the nation.

Conventional contracts are also being completed more quickly.

We currently apply lane rental to most major maintenance schemes on our motorways.

London Regional Transport

21. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of and plans for capital investment in London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport's annual business plan, published in December 1986, shows a planned investment of £280 million in 1987-88. That compares with a forecast expenditure of £259 million this year and with an expenditure of £234 million in 1985-86. I welcome this continuing trend as evidence of LRT's commitment to the highly successful modernisation of their system.

Their investment programme contains many projects of benefit to the travelling public, including provision for new buses with easier access for the disabled; a £135 million scheme to automate the Underground's ticketing and ticket control system; a £45 million scheme to provide additional Underground trains; replacement of the Underground's power stations with equipment to permit cheaper access to the national grid; and a continuing programme of station modernisation to enhance passengers' environment and save future maintenance costs.

28. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review with the chairman of London Regional Transport safety standards on the underground and buses.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans at present to call for such a review. The primary responsibility for maintaining safety of both bus and Underground systems rests with the operators. They are governed by the relevant statutory requirements and the bodies responsible for ensuring compliance. I shall be happy to consider carefully any matters my hon. Friend brings to my attention.

Channel Tunnel

22. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the safety of travellers in the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the last six months, my Department has received some 260 representations from members of the public about the Channel tunnel. Only about 20 of these referred to safety issues. The public can be assured that the British and French Governments attach the utmost importance to safety in the tunnel, on which they will be advised by an independent binational safety authority.

Heathrow-London (Traffic Flow)

23. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to facilitate traffic flow from Heathrow airport to central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We appointed consultants last March to look at options for improving travel between Heathrow and central London. Their report is expected in the spring.

Motorways (Speed Limits)

24. Mr. Madel asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received concerning any change in the maximum speed limits allowed on motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department receives representations on a wide range of road safety issues, including speeds on motorways. Ninety-eight per cent. of accidents are on other roads.

If my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind, perhaps he would let me know.

British Rail

25. Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what he intends to discuss.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are next due to meet on 18 February and will be discussing a wide range of matters of mutual interest.

Lifeboats

26. Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the present lifeboat provision for north-west Scotland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Provision of lifeboats around the coast of the United Kingdom is a matter for the Royal National Lifeboat Institution. I understand it is presently reviewing lifeboat cover for north-west Scotland and will inform the United Kingdom Search and Rescue Committee of its intentions when next it meets in May.

British Rail (Privatisation)

27. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to privatise British Rail.

Mr. Moore: I have no plans to privatise British Rail.

Lay-bys (Caravan Cafes)

29. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy towards the operation of caravan cafes from lay-bys on trunk roads unauthorised by local planning departments.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's policy is to secure the removal of unauthorised developments of this kind where there is a safety hazard or interference with traffic flows or an environmental nuisance. Alternatively, it may agree action to this end by the local planning authority.

A13 (Southend)

30. Dr. Michael Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans and proposals exist to extend the dual carriageway on the A13 into Southend; when work will commence on the final sections; and when they are due to open for traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This part of the A13 is not a national road. Its improvement is the responsibility of Essex county council.

Rural Areas

31. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what means are available to his Department to monitor the effects of bus deregulation in rural areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department, together with the Scottish and Welsh Offices, is financing a programme of research into bus deregulation which is being carried out by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory with the support of consultants, and include studies of the effect on rural areas.

Woolwich Ferry

32. Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is planning to take in response to the review of the operation of the Woolwich ferry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will decide what action to take after considering the consultants' findings and recommendations from the London borough of Greenwich.

Driving Tests

33. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many people in the Basildon constituency took driving tests in each of the last five years and how many people were successful on the first occasion.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Records of driving test applications are not kept in these ways. The information is not available.

Railways (Electrification)

34. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what rail lines he expects to be electrified in the next five years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following railway electrification schemes are due to be completed within the next five years:

| | Year |
|---|---|
| Ayr-Largs | May 1987 |
| Bishops Stortford-Cambridge | May 1987 |
| Blackfriars-Farringdon | May 1987 |
| Ipswich-Norwich | May 1987 |

Bypasses

35. Mr. Ashby asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many towns have benefited from the completion of bypasses since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Sixty-seven trunk road bypass or relief road schemes have been completed since 1979. Some of these have relieved more than one community. Certain other completed schemes have also taken traffic out of communities.

East London River Crossing

36. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the inspector's report from the public inquiry relating to the proposed east London river crossing to be published.

Mr. Moore: The inspector's report will be published at the time Ministers announce the decisions they have taken in the light of the inspector's findings. Given the exceptional length and complexity of this inquiry and volume of evidence which will need to be considered by both the inspector and Ministers, this is bound to take some time.

Trunk Roads

37. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the results of his Department's review of the trunk road building programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I expect to announce the results of the present review in the spring.

Stoke-Derby Road

38. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to make a statement about his proposals for the Stoke to Derby road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: What was, in earlier years, referred to as the proposals for a Stoke-Derby link now comprises a series of improvement or bypass schemes within the road programme. Of these, improvement of the 8 ½ mile length of A50 between the Uttoxeter and Blythe Bridge bypasses was completed in April 1985. On 18 December 1986, I announced a further trunk road scheme to improve the A50/A5007 route between Blythe Bridge and Queensway in Stoke on Trent. Subject to statutory processes, work on that scheme should start in 1990 and take two years to build.

To the east of Uttoxeter a series of bypass schemes are proposed for Doveridge, Hatton-Hilton-Foston, Etwall and Derby Southern bypass. It has been necessary to reappraise the traffic, economic and environmental benefits of these schemes and various alternative routes. For this purpose a new traffic model was developed which was validated last year and for the past few months our consultants have been producing new traffic forecasts and appraising the various options. I hope to be able to make an announcement about the future of these schemes soon.

Manchester (Rail Links)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current estimated cost of constructing a rail link to Manchester airport; if the funding has now been agreed; and when the work will commence.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the latest estimated cost of the proposed rail link is about £15 million and that British Rail has agreed in principle with Greater Manchester Passenger Transport Authority and Manchester Airport plc on their share of the costs. It is for them to decide in the first instance on when the scheme could start.

Search and Rescue Helicopter (Western Isles)

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to station a search and rescue helicopter in the Western Isles.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Tendering action is now in hand. The precise date on which a search and rescue helicopter will be stationed in the Western Isles will depend on consideration of the responses to the invitations.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will now make a statement on the framework for monitoring airline leisure traffic being set up by the Civil Aviation Authority as a result of his decision on the appeal by Britannia Airways against decision 1/86 of the Civil Aviation Authority;

(2) if he will now make a statement on the framework for monitoring part-charter arrangements by airlines being set up by the Civil Aviation Authority as a result of his decision on the appeal by Britannia Airways against decision 1/86 of the Civil Aviation Authority;

(3) if he will now make a statement on the progress of consultations with the Office of Fair Trading being undertaken by the Civil Aviation Authority as a result of his decision on the appeal by Britannia Airways against decision 1/86 of the Civil Aviation Authority;

(4) if he will now make a statement on the progress of the consultations with the airline industry being undertaken by the Civil Aviation Authorty as a result of his decision on the appeal by Britannia Airways against decision 1/86 of the Civil Aviation Authority.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Civil Aviation Authority only recently instituted consultations with the industry, users and the Office of Fair Trading following my right hon. Friend's request last year that the authority should review the adequacy of the information available to it on airlines' activities. A copy of the consultation letter has been placed in the Library and those consulted have until 31 March to reply. I look forward to seeing the authority's proposals in due course.

Buses

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the regulations relating to tests on buses carrying more than eight passengers in relation to comfort and convenience for public use; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has recently consulted about proposals to increase the number of safety checks at the annual tests of private vehicles with more than 12 passenger seats. We also propose to delete or change the checks of certain items in the annual tests of public service vehicles with more than eight passenger seats. In the latter group, a small number of checks on comfort and convenience would be dropped.

M4 (Lane Closure)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the time lapse on 26 January between the clearing of obstacles to the free passage of vehicles on the fast lane of the eastbound carriageway of the M4 approximately three miles west of junction 10 and the removal of the advanced road traffic signs indicating that the lane was closed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The advance warning signs were removed about three-quarters of an hour after the removal of the lane coning. This time was reasonable given the journey via the motorway junctions taken by the removal team.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the time lapse on 26 January between the clearing of obstacles to the free passage of vehicles on the fast lane of the eastbound carriageway of the M4 approximately three miles west of junction 16 and the removal of the advanced road traffic signs indicating that the lane was closed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About half an hour.

Modbury-Bigbury Road (Car Count)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what has been learnt from the car count on the Modbury to Bigbury road since the count started in September 1982; and to what uses the information so far gained has been put;

(2) what steps he is planning to take to improve or alter the Modbury to Bigbury road as a result of information gained since the car count there began in September 1982.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Data from the Modbury to Bigbury road site indicate an average flow of 1,900 vehicles per day in 1985, of which some 60 were heavy lorries. This represents an increase of some 10 per cent. since 1982, less than the growth of over 20 per cent. recorded for rural class B roads generally. These data are obtained for the compilation of national statistics. I know of no plans to change the road as a result of their collection.

Data from this site, together with similar data from other randomly selected core census sites, are used to asses traffic trends for different types of vehicle over the whole country. The principle uses of this information are:

(i) providing traffic forecasts for national and local roads planning,

(ii) determining traffic management and maintenance needs, in particular the circulation of road track costs and grant-related expenditure, and

(iii) assessing road accident trends and road safety priorities, through the calculation of accident rates.

Maintaining regular monitoring throughout the year at core census sites avoids the need for extensive traffic counting at a large number of places on the road system. Seasonal profiles obtained from the core census enable short period counts to be converted into estimates of total flow throughout the year.

Traffic Census

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost to the taxpayer of the traffic census currently being undertaken throughout the country.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Expenditure on traffic monitoring, including roadside interviews by this Department in the financial year 1986-87 is expected to be some £5 million. Of this, about a quarter (£1·35 million) is spent on national traffic monitoring. The remainder (£3·62 million) relates to schemes undertaken for regional offices and includes, for the first time, traffic monitoring in London.

Expenditure

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for Transport what was the amount per head expended in each passenger transport authority area and in each county for the most recent 12-month period for which figures are available.

Mr. David Mitchell: The table shows 1986-87 budgeted expenditure on passenger transport revenue support (PTRS) and concessionary fares by local authorities and PTAs in each shire county and PTA area, expressed as a single £ per head figure. It is not possible to exclude from PTA figures their expenditure on British Rail services under section 20 of the Transport Act 1968. Such expenditure amounted to £4·99 per head across all Metropolitan county council areas in 1984-85.

Railway Level Crossings

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct British Rail to install barriers at automatic open level crossings over classified roads throughout the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: It would be premature for me to ask British Rail to make any alterations, including the installation of barriers, at automatic open level crossings until I have seen the report of the safety review now being carried out by Professor Stott.

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many automatic open level crossings have been in operation in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of automatic open level crossings in operation in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1977 | 58 |
| 1978 | 68 |
| 1979 | 84 |
| 1980 | 107 |
| 1981 | 114 |
| 1982 | 122 |
| 1983 | 136 |
| 1984 | 169 |
| 1985 | 227 |
| 1986 | [1]251 |

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Transport when was the last occasion his Department changed the regulations for the installation of automatic open level crossings.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department's published "Railway Construction and Operations Requirements—Level Crossings" were last changed in 1981 following a working party set up in 1976. An additional section dealing with the protection of pedestrians was added in 1985, as a result of recommendations made in the Oppenheim report.

Regional Airports

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the growth in percentage terms in total passenger traffic at each United Kingdom regional airport during 1986 or that part of the year for which the information is readily available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information for the period January to September 1986 is readily available in respect of the 18 regional airports listed. Percentage growth is in relation to the same period in 1985.

| Airport | Growth per cent. |
|---|---|
| Aberdeen | −9·4 |
| Belfast | 12·5 |
| Birmingham | 27·3 |
| Bristol | 14·7 |

Birmingham International Airport

Mr. Snape asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the continuing growth of traffic at Birmingham international airport, he will now reconsider the granting of gateway status at that airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I welcome the traffic growth at Birmingham international airport. I do not propose to make any changes in the policy on gateway international airports set out in the 1985 airports policy White Paper, Cmnd. 9542. However, the Government will not allow the question of gateway status to inhibit constructive negotiations with any foreign Governments which have airlines interested in serving Birmingham international airport.

British Airways

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport what safeguards will exist following the privatisation of British Airways to ensure the continuation of their air services within the Highlands and Islands.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The continuation of these services will remain, as it has been in the past, a matter for the commercial judgment of the board of British Airways.

Channel Fixed Link

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Transport, further to the reply to the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale of 12 January, Official Report, column 23, if he will set out the timetable for the proposed fixed-link beneath the Channel; what further discussions he has had with British Rail concerning the London terminus and the possible dispersal of services; and if he will make a statement on the employment implications of such dispersed services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Subject to the Channel Tunnel Bill receiving Royal Assent, ratification of the Channel Tunnel treaty and the coming into operation of the concession agreement, we understand that Eurotunnel intend to start construction of the Channel tunnel in the autumn of this year and to bring it into operation in 1993.

British Rail's services through the Channel tunnel will not be eligible for Government subsidy, and it is for BR to determine on commercial grounds the pattern of services it will provide. Its plans for a passenger terminal in London are designed to accommodate those passengers likely to want to travel to and from London. It also plans to run direct passenger services between the continent and points north of London. It expects to run direct freight services between a pattern of points throughout Britain and centres in mainland Europe.

BR estimates that these dispersed passenger and freight services will create about 500 new jobs in the first year of operation. This figure is included in the total of 1,500 for the operational phase of the project which I gave in my reply to my hon. Friend on 12 January.

BR (Rolling Stock)

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate British Rail's expenditure on new rolling stock in the current year and for 1987-88.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR is investing substantially in new rolling stock. We have approved investment in 1,681 new passenger vehicles worth some £464 million (in 1986-87 prices) in the last three years alone. BR estimates that it will spent over £70 million on locomotives and rolling stock in 1986-87. The spread of expenditure between future years is a matter for BR.

Dim-dip Lighting

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed introduction of motor vehicle dim-dip lighting.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations require dim-dip to be fitted to motor vehicles, except motor cycles and slow moving vehicles, first registered from 1 April 1987 and manufactured after 1 October 1986. Motorists will appreciate dim-dip's merit in preventing vehicles being driven on sidelamps and allowing them to be seen in well-lit streets without the risk of dazzling other road users.

M25 (Traffic Flows)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport if for each section of the M25 and for the M25 as a whole he will give (a) the pre-construction traffic flow estimates and (b) the latest estimates for future traffic flows; if he will specify those sections of the M25 where traffic flows exceed 50,000 vehicles per day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the pre-construction estimates of traffic flows given to him in my answer of 25 February 1986, at columns 501-502. Traffic flows on those sections of the M25 equipped with automatic counting loops are listed below. Loops are being installed on the remaining sections this year.

Drivers will use only part of the M25 during their journey. Some journeys on the motorway are short. Aggregate figures for the M25 as a whole would not be significant.

The motorway has been fully open for three months. It is premature to estimate future traffic flows before traffic patterns have settled down. When measures to relieve congestion on the south-western sector of the motorway were announced on 28 August 1986, it was made clear that traffic would be monitored closely — which is why automatic counting loops are being installed on all sections—and that further studies would be undertaken as necessary.

24 hour average daily flow

| Section (Junction numbers) | 000s |
|---|---|
| 1-2 | — |
| 2-3 | — |
| 3-4 | 48 |

Cash Limits

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the cash limits on his votes and to his Department's running costs limit.

Mr. Moore: The cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 1 is to be reduced by £4 million from £894,197,000 to £890,197,000 and the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 4 is to be reduced by £2,290,000 from £113,705,000 to £111,415,000, these reductions offsetting an increase of £6,129,000 from £175,242,000 to £181,371,000 on the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 2, which is subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate.

Also subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for Class VIII, Vote 5 is to be increased by £2,711,000 from £194,011,000 to £196,722,000. The increase will be offset by savings on Class VIII, Vote 3 and will not therefore add to the planning total of public expenditure.

Running costs of the Department of Transport on Class VIII, Vote 2 have been increased by £2,129,000 and on Class VIII, Vote 4 have been decreased by £2,290,000, reducing the running costs limit by £161,000, from £286,504,000 to £286,343,000. This £161,000 will be transferred to Customs and Excise's running cost limit to cover the cost of an origins and destinations survey which it is undertaking on behalf of the Department of Transport.

SCOTLAND

Teachers' Salaries

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the cost of teachers' salaries in Scotland as a proportion of total expenditure on education in each year since 1978-79 and the amount spent by local education authorities on books and equipment over the same period at 1985-86 prices.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is shown in the table, which has been compiled from local authority financial returns. The figures refer to nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

| Teachers' salaries as a proportion of net expenditure on education[1] | | Expenditure on books and equipment at 1985-86 prices [2,3] (£000) | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1978-79 | 60·79 | 11,501 | n/a |
| 1979-80 | 60·45 | 11,448 | n/a |
| 1980-81 | 62·25 | 9,489 | n/a |
| 1981-82 | 61·38 | 9,068 | n/a/ |
| 1982-83 | 60·64 | 8,626 | 17,860 |
| 1933-84 | 60·26 | 10,522 | 15,246 |
| 1984-85 | 59·85 | 10,176 | 16,924 |

[2] Before 1982-83 expenditure on educational tools, equipment and materials was not separately identified in local authority financial returns.

[3] The cash terms for each year have been repriced to 1985-86 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

One-parent Families

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the number of children in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland resident with a one-parent family.

Mr. John MacKay: The 1981 census showed that the numbers of children in households consisting of one adult and one or more children under 16 were as follows:

|---|---|
| (a) the localities of Greenock and Port Glasgow | 1,361 |
| (b) Strathclyde | 34,693 |
| (c) Scotland | 70,666 |

The information at (b) is contained in volume 1, table 38 of the 1981 census report for Strathclyde region and that at (c) in volume 1, table 38 of the 1981 census Scottish summary report, copies of which are in the Library.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the number of households in Greenock and Port Glasgow which are one-parent families; and if he is able to disaggregate the figures to show how many of them are (i) divorced mothers, (ii) separated mothers, (iii) unmarried mothers, (iv) divorced fathers and (v) widowed mothers.

Mr. John MacKay: The 1981 census showed that in the localities of Greenock and Port Glasgow there were 719 households containing one adult and one or more children under 16. Of the adults, 87 were male and 632 were female. There are no figures readily available by marital status.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate the number of one-parent families in Greenock and Port Glasgow in (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984 and (f) 1985 where the head of the household was unemployed.

Mr. John MacKay: The 1981 census showed that in the localities of Greenock and Port Glagow there were 79 households consisting of one adult and one or more children aged under 16, in which the adult, though economically active, was out of employment the week before the census. There are no figures available for the other years.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is considering any amendment to the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to amend the Act. I have indicated in the past that I expect to review the operation of the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Fishing and Fishing Methods) (Scotland) Order 1985 once it has had two or three years in which to prove itself.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the long-term effects of the EEC common fisheries policy on the Scottish fishing industry; what measures he is taking to restore confidence to the industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Scottish fishing industry has performed extremely well since the settlement of the common fisheries policy in 1983. Total fish landings in Scotland in 1982 were worth around £149 million, and this had risen to £215 million by 1985. The industry's performance was even better in 1986, with landings provisionally estimated at around £234 million. The confidence of the industry is reflected in the number of new vessels being built or on order. Although there will be some problems in 1987 because of the need to conserve white fish stocks, I believe that the common fisheries policy will continue to provide the basis for a healthy and prosperous fishing industry in Scotland.

Land Use

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will review land use in Scotland with particular reference to rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The Government's principal objective on rural land use remains that of supporting the economic and social base of the communities concerned, while having regard to the claims of other legitimate countryside users.

Surplus Food (Distribution)

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement outlining the arrangements he has made to distribute the proposed EEC food aid to those in need in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. Friend on 30 January to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar).

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish details of his plans to release food from European Economic Community intervention food stores within Dundee and Tayside; what charity organisations will be involved in its distribution and what criteria will be used in deciding to whom such foods will be distributed.

Mr. John MacKay: The following charitable organisations have agreed to co-operate in arranging the distribution of free food in Scotland:

Salvation Army
Women's Royal Voluntary Service
Age Concern Scotland
Royal British Legion Scotland
Help the Aged
British Red Cross
Church of Scotland Board of Social Responsibility
Catholic Social Care Commission

Food will be released, so far as possible, from stores conveniently located for the charities' distribution work. It is to be given to needy people whose resources have been further stretched by the recent extremely cold weather.

Kymmene-Stromberg Paper Mill

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Kymmene-Stromberg paper mill at Irvine to become fully operational; how many permanent (a) full-time and (b) part-time jobs it will provide; and over what time scale those jobs will become available.

Mr. Rifkind: The Kymmene Stromberg paper mill at Irvine is expected to come into operation during 1989 and to be employing around 430 full-time people by the end of that year. When fully operational in 1991 the mill is expected to employ 480 people full-time. No part-time employment is envisaged. The building of the plant will also provide a boost for the local construction industry providing at present over 1,000 jobs.

Building Regulations

Mr. Martin asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of all organisations and companies that responded to his Department's consultation paper of October 1986 on the Scottish building regulations; how many organisations and companies were in favour of the proposal to exclude section 'N' dealing with electrical installation work; and how many were against.

Mr. Ancram: Copies of all responses are available for inspection on a public file held in St. Andrew's House library. Not all of these can be classified simply as endorsing or opposing the deletion of part 'N' from the regulations. However, some 18 expressed clear views against its removal and seven in favour.

On balance, having taken account of the opinions of the consultees and of the views of the Building Standards Advisory Committee, I have decided to retain this statutory safeguard.

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update his answer of 6 March 1986, Official Report, column 251, to show at 1986 prices Government expenditure on the Scottish Development Agency in each year since the agency was established; and what is his estimate for each year until 1988.

Mr. Lang: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Development Area Status

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now examine proposals for the Banff and Buchan constituency to be restored to full development area status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to review the assisted area status of Banff and Buchan. The present assested area structure was established only two years ago after a comprehensive review of regional policy and the assisted area map. In the interest of maintaining stability in regional incentives, the Government have concluded that it is too early for changes to be made to the present structure.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will reconsider the restoration of development area status to the Grampian region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to reconsider the assisted area status of Grampian region.

The present assisted area structure was established only two years ago after a comprehensive review of regional policy and the assisted area map. In the interests of maintaining stability in regional incentives, the Government have concluded that it is too early for changes to be made to the present structure.

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the extent his responsibilities for the designation of, or the restoration to, development area status in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Assisted areas in Great Britain are designated by order made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Decisions on the coverage of the assisted area map and the designation of individual areas are taken in consultation with other relevant Ministers, including my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Questions and representations about assisted areas in Scotland are dealt with by the Scottish Office.

Banff and Buchan (Employment)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate future employment trends in the Banff and Buchan constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The outlook for employment in the Banff and Buchan constituency, as elsewhere, is dependent upon continued economic growth and pay restraint. I am aware that unemployment in the constituency has risen relatively rapidly over the past year. In part this reflects reductions in oil-related employment. However, I note that the overall unemployment rate in each of the three travel-to-work areas in the constituency remains below the Scottish average.

Dalgety Foods Limited

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his discussions with Dalgety Foods Limited on the proposal to close its potato crisp factory at Broxburn, West Lothian, on 31 July.

Mr. Lang: Following the announcement of the intention to close the factory at Broxburn, my officals immediately contacted the senior management of Golden Wonder Limited. I understand that it is the company's view that, in order to ensure the long-term survival of its crisp manufacturing business, it had to increase the efficiency of its production. After consideration of a number of options, it concluded that this would best be achieved by closure of the factories at Broxburn and Long Buckby in Northamptonshire.

The decision is a matter for the commercial judgment of the company. However, I share the concern that has been expressed about the impact of this closure on the Broxburn community and my officials would be ready to consider assistance for any viable use for the facility.

Student Support

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about levels of student allowances and parental contributions for session 1987-88.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams) on Friday 29 January 1987.

Teaching Staff (Joint Negotiating Committee)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has ever issued an order under section 14(1), subsection 91(2) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1981; whether he has ever issued an order under section 14(1), subsection 92(3) of the Education (Scotland) Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: An order was made under subsection 91(2) in November 1981 prescribing the numbers representing teaching staff, education authorities and the Secretary of State on the newly established Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Teaching Staff in School Education. The 1981 order remains in force. Under subsection 92(3) the Secretary of State has no power to make an order but he does from time to time appoint officials to represent him on the committee.

Butter and Cereals Prices

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average market price for (a) butter and (b) butter and (c) cereals per tonne.

Mr. John MacKay: Average Scottish farm gate prices per tonne for beef and cereals for the month of December 1986 were as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Beef | 1,619·57 |
| Wheat | 112·89 |
| Barley | 115·57 |

No corresponding figure is available for butter, but the Scottish Milk Marketing Board selling price of the butter constituent of milk sold for butter manufacture in the same month was the equivalent of £1,574 per tonne.

Intervention Storage Costs

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average annual cost of storing the following foodstuffs per tonne in European Economic Countries intervention foodstores: beef, butter and cereals, respectively.

Mr. John MacKay: Figures are not available for storage costs incurred in other member states. For the United Kingdom, the average cost per annum for storing beef is £310 per tonne (bone-in) and £141 per tonne (boneless). The equivalent costs for butter and cereals are £81·50 per tonne and £12·50 per tonne respectively.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Deutschmark

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the increase in cost to the European Economic Community budget of the decision not to revalue the deutschmark for the purposes of the common agricultural policy; and what effect this will have on (i) the United Kingdom contribution to the European Economic Community budget and (ii) trade between the United Kingdom and West Germany.

Mr. Brooke: As part of the 1984 CAP price fixing agreement, the Agriculture Council agreed to an immediate and substantial revaluation of the deutschmark for purposes of the common agricultural policy and that the remaining positive monetary gap would be removed not later than the 1987 price fixing. We expect the Commission to bring forward proposals to that effect shortly.

Tobacco

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from tobacco taxes in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lawson: It is estimated that £5,540 million was raised in 1986 from the excise duties and value-added tax on tobacco products.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 19 December 1986, Official Report, column 742, on the consultation document "VAT Input Tax: Origin and Scope of the Right to Deduct", if he will state, in relation to each of the categories of traders in each group making supplies listed in schedule 6 of the Value-Added Tax Act 1983, how much of the £300 million given in the parliamentary answer he expects to recover; and if he will give figures for the years 1979-80 to 1985-86 of the amount claimed by each of the categories of traders in each group in schedule 6 as a result of their exempt or partially exempt status.

Mr. Brooke: The ability of a VAT registered business or group to recover input tax can depend upon many factors and an individual business can have dealings in any number of the categories in Schedule 6 of the Value Added Tax Act 1983. I regret that the information is not available to make the apportionment which the hon. Member requests.

Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much will be deducted in income tax and national insurance contributions taken together from (a) a single person and (b) a married couple who earn £100, £150, £200, £250 and £300 per week respectively; and what percentage of gross income do the combined payments represent in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Fishing Vessels (Capital Allowances)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will seek to amend the provisions of the Finance Act 1984 with a view to restoring to fishing vessel owners the right to claim 100 per cent. first year capital allowances on their vessels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation to discuss the impact of the provisions of the Finance Act 1984 insofar as it relates to first year capital allowances on fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will review the impact on investment in the Scottish fishing industry of the withdrawal of first year capital allowances on fishing vessels as a result of the provisions of the Finance Act 1984; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what representations he has received from the Scottish fishing industry in relation to capital allowances for fishing vessels under the Finance Act 1984; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospitals (Funding)

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is Her Majesty's Government's policy in relation to the geographical inequalities in the funding of National Health Service hospital provision in the constituent parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: The Ministers responsible seek to give equal access to health care in their countries for those in equal need.

EC Budget

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much in pounds million the European Economic Community budget was altered during the British Presidency.

Mr. Brooke: At the beginning of the United Kingdom Presidency the Community budget was the subject of a legal dispute. Following the ruling of the European Court of Justice on 4 July that the budget procedure was incomplete, an agreed budget was adopted on 10 July containing expenditure totalling £21,853 million. Full details are given in the statement on the 1986 Community Budget Council, Cmnd. 9907. This budget was not amended during the remainder of the British Presidency.

The budget procedure for 1987 was not complete at the end of the United Kingdom Presidency since the Parliament voted to exceed the maximum rate of increase for non-obligatory expenditure as laid down under the treaty. The Council of Ministers was not prepared to agree to this.

Channel Tunnel (Customs and Excise)

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many meetings have taken place between the French and United Kingdom authorities responsible for Customs and Excise examination on future Channel tunnel traffic;

(2) whether French Customs and Excise officials will examine passenger luggage on trains using the Channel fixed link on the train; and if he will make a statement;

(3) under what circumstances there will be mutual inspection of passenger luggage by United Kingdom Customs and Excise officials at Frethune and by French customs officials at Ashford.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Benefits

Mr. Meacher asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the latest estimates of the average revenue gain which accrues to the Exchequer when (a) a person claiming benefit gains paid work and (b) a person not claiming benefit gains paid work, giving a gross figure and indicating the amount due to the tax gained, national insurance contributions gained, reductions in benefit expenditure and any other relevant factors.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987]: It is not possible to estimate the revenue forgone in either case.

Customs Staff (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many customs staff are employed at Dundee; and if he is satisfied that their numbers are adequate to deal with increased activity at the port of Dundee.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 30 January 1987]: For operational reasons it is not policy to disclose the numbers of customs staff employed at specific locations.

The staffing at Dundee is regularly reviewed and an assessment made of the risks having regard to variations in traffic. The fixed staff are supported by mobile teams and specialist staff who are organised on a regional basis.

THE ARTS

Royal Opera house

Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Arts who are the signatories to the Royal Opera House trust deed.

Mr. Luce: The signatories were the chairman and secretary-general of the Arts Council, and the director and secretary of the Royal Opera House Covent Garden Limited.

Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Arts whether any alterations have been made to the trust deed on the land acquired in Covent garden by Her Majesty's Government for the Royal Opera House since 1974.

Mr. Luce: I would refer the hon. Member to my reply to a question by the hon. Member for Moray (Mr. Pollock) on 18 December 1986 at columns 627-629. A memorandum of agreement between the Arts Council and the Royal Opera house Covent Garden Limited dated 5 December 1985 varied their respective entitlements under the original trust deed so that the Royal Opera House should have the first claim on the revenues and proceeds of sale of the part of the site which was developed for commercial purposes.

Mr. Fisher asked the Minister for the Arts whether he has any plans to seek alterations to the trust deed on the land acquired in Covent garden by Her Majesty's Government for the Royal Opera House in 1974.

Mr. Luce: No.

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Frank Field asked the Minister for the Arts if, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on museum collections not on show to the public of 26 January, Official Report, column 76, he will list similar information for the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce: Due to the great variety of objects in the Victoria and Albert museum's collections, it is not possible to give a simple answer to this question.

All objects are available for viewing by the public including those that for conservation reasons cannot be constantly on display in public galleries—for example, light-sensitive works.

The percentage on show ranges from 95 per cent. for ceramics to only 5 per cent. for the light-sensitive objects.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what special exercises geared specifically to providing more advice and information to elderly people for the purpose of ensuring that they are made aware of benefits to which they might be entitled were mounted in 1985-86 by the Department of Health and Social Security local offices at Stockton, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Redcar and Eston.

Mr. Lyell: In 1985-86 the mobile publicity officer based at the Department's Stockton local office gave 120 talks, displays and surgeries on benefits' advice and information in the Stockton, Middlesbrough, Hartlepool, Redcar, Eston, South Durham and North Yorkshire areas. Of these 47 were directed specifically at the elderly, 42 others were aimed at professional groups—for example, home helps, social workers — in frequent contact with the elderly. The regional information officer talked to five parish councils about subjects of concern to the elderly —for example, exceptionally severe weather—and staff from three local offices in the area gave 10 talks to retirement clubs.

The regional information officer also made 52 broadcasts and the mobile publicity officer held 21 exhibitions in the community covering the whole range of benefits' advice and information.

These initiatives complemented the normal flow of advice to the elderly through local offices, the Freefone service, leaflets, posters and order book notes.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give details of the total number of recipients of housing benefit for 1979 and each subsequent year;

(2) if he will state the total number of recipients of housing benefit for each year from 1979 up to the present date.

Mr. Lyell: I regret that the information is not available in the precise form requested. The table combines information from different sources before and after the introduction of housing benefit in 1982-83.

Average number of recipients (Great Britain)

| Year | Rent rebates | Rent allowances | Rate rebates[2] |

| 1986-87[3] | 3,745 | 1,190 | 7,120 |

[1] Figures for 1982-83 include those local authority tenants receiving housing assistance in supplementary benefit who in November 1982 were included in the partial start of the housing benefits scheme.

[2] Most recipients of rent rebates-allowances also receive rate rebates. Rate rebate recipients include owner occupiers.

[3] Estimates for 1986-87 are provisional and are subject to revision. Estimates for earlier years may be subject to minor revision.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available guidance given to local offices of his Department as to what cases are suitable and what cases are not suitable for referral to HQ sB3C for consideration of Secretary of State discretion under the Supplementary Benefit (Requirement) Regulations, schedule 2A paragraph 54)(m) and also the guidance that HQ sB3C uses in determining which cases qualify and which cases do not qualify for Secretary of State discretion under that same regulation.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my predecessor's replies to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 26 June 1986 at column 291 and on 12 February 1986 at columns 488-89.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of supplementary benefit in Wales in (a) 1980, (b) 1983 and (c) 1986 were one-parent families.

Mr. Lyell: The information is as follows:

Number of lone-parent recipients

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the value in real terms, both in absolute figures and as a percentage, of retirement and other state pensions and all other welfare and national insurance benefits and allowances paid in November 1979 compared with those paid in November 1986; and if he will also indicate the actual figure for each benefit in each year.

[2] April 1979 rates.

[3] These are not rates of benefit.

[4] Real values calculated using retail price index less housing costs, the normal index for this benefit.

[5] Supplementary benefit scale rates for children were restructured in 1980. Previously there had been separate scale rates for children aged 11-12 and under 5.

[6] Housing benefit was fully introduced only in April 1983. The 1979 figures are the most closely comparable figures from the previous rent and rates rebate scheme. They are not rates of benefit. The way in which the housing benefit needs allowances are constructed means that a real-terms comparison of their 1979 and 1986 levels using the RPI is inappropriate. A full explanation of the reasons for this is given in the reply to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford, on 4 December 1986, at columns 729-730.

[7] Child dependency additions with short-term benefits were abolished in 1984.

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the total number of supplementary benefit recipients and the total cost for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lyell: The information is as follows:

| Supplementary benefit recipients | | Cost | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Date | Number (thousands) | Financial Year | £ (millions) |
| November 1979 | 2,850 | 1979-80 | 2,436 |

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many chronically sick and disabled people are claiming unemployment benefit.

Mr. Major: To be entitled to unemployment benefit a person must, among other things, be capable of work. A chronically sick person should therefore receive incapacity benefits rather than unemployment benefit as should a disabled person whose disability makes him incapable of work. Statistics are not held on the number of disabled people who are capable of work and claiming unemployment benefit.

Benefit Fraud Teams

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library copies of any guidelines issued to members of the benefit fraud teams operating within the Department of Health and Social Security local offices.

Mr. Lyell: Instructions and guidance for the investigation of suspected social security fraud are set out in the fraud investigators' guide. It contains details of departmental policy on fraud and operational instructions and guidance for investigators, including those who are members of benefit fraud teams.

It is not in the public interest to publish the contents of this guide.

Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish details of the numbers of benefit fraud teams both currently in existence and also planned; if he will define the local offices which form the geographical area for each team's work; if he will define the administrative location of each team; and if he will give details of the staff complement of each team.

Mr. Lyell: Thirty-one benefit fraud teams have been established nationally and there are no plans at present to increase this number. Each team operates within the boundaries of a management group of offices, providing support for the offices within that group. The teams are administered by their appropriate regional office, though for practical purposes they may be based within the group of offices they assist. Teams usually comprise 16 or 17 officers.

Health Authorities (Staff Qualifications)

Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many members of (a) regional health authorities and (b) district health authorities have professional qualifications in (i) nursing, (ii) medicine, (iii) dentistry, (iv) speech therapy and (v) physiotherapy.

Mrs. Currie: Each regional health authority and each district health authority includes a hospital consultant, a general medical practitioner and a nurse, midwife or health visitor. Other members may also have these or other professional qualifications but this would not necessarily be known to us.

Organ Transplants

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he is giving to doctors in relation to the screening of organ donors.

Mrs. Currie: In October 1985, at the Department's request, the United Kingdom transplant service advised all surgeons and physicians known to be concerned with renal, heart, liver and corneal transplantation and all laboratories who perform tissue typing for transplant recipients and donors that all donors should be tested for HTLV III antibody as they already were for hepatitits B. They also advised where this might be carried out. Separate guidance has also been issued about screening of semen and blood donors.

Tobacco

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent on research into cures for tobacco addiction in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The Department is currently providing £70,000 per year for the purpose of running and monitoring the effectiveness of facilities at the Bethlem Royal hospital and the Maudsley hospital, London.

The main Government funded agency for carrying out biomedical research in the United Kingdom is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that the council is funding research on additions including smoking.

Information on other research into cures for tobacco addiction is not held centrally.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent in the last calendar year for which figures are available on curing people addicted to tobacco smoking; and if he will give a breakdown of the figure.

Drugs

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent in the last calendar year for which figures are available on curing people addicted to drug taking; and if he will give a breakdown of that figure.

Mrs. Currie: £5 million has been made available to health authorities in England in the financial year 1986-87 specifically for the development of services for drug misusers. Grants totalling a further £5·2 million have been made to individual local projects. Information on amounts spent on services for drug misusers by health and local authorities from their normal allocations is not held centrally.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths were recorded as due to drug taking in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the number of deaths registered in England and Wales in 1985, the latest available calendar year, where the underlying cause of death was stated as drug dependence or non-dependent abuse of drugs, excluding alcohol and tobacco.

Number of deaths from drug abuse
England and Wales 1985

| Underlying cause | | Number |
|---|---|---|
| [1]ICD 304 | Drug dependence | 127 |
| [1]ICD 305.2-305.9 | Non-dependent abuse of drugs (excluding alcohol and tobacco) | 52 |

Regional Health Authorities (Construction Expenditure)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure on construction work to meet fire regulations by region for each of the last 10 years; and what expenditure is planned on this item, by region, for each of the next 10 years, as shown in the strategic plans by regional health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are required to comply with the general fire safety requirements of building regulations and, where appropriate, to hold fire certificates under the Fire Precautions Act 1971. They are also expected to comply with departmental fire precautions guidance. However, the costs of construction to meet these requirements are not separately identified in figures available to the Department.

Basildon (Population Projections)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the projected population of Basildon in the years 1990, 2000, and 2010.

Mrs. Currie: The official local authority projections produced by the Office of Population Census and Surveys are made for Essex as a whole and not for the individual districts.

NHS (Health Hazards)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will institute an immediate programme of education and training for senior and line management to help to identify and deal with hazards in the National Health Service;

(2) if he will advise all regional health authorities to submit to him, within the next six months, the cost implications of conforming with hygiene, hazard and pollution legislation;

(3) what steps he has taken to identify the extra costs to health authorities as a result of the abolition of Crown immunity;

(4) how much extra money is to be allocated to health authorities to meet their obligations when Crown immunity is abolished in their institutions;

(5) if he will give consideration to financial assistance to all health authorities which have transitional difficulties due to the abolition of Crown immunity.

Mr. Newton: Central guidance has been, for a number of years, that health authorities should establish working practices as if they were not immune from legal penalty. Complying with the requirements of sections 1 and 2 of the NHS (Amendment) Act 1986 should not, therefore, impose any new burdens on health authorities and we have no plans to allocate additional resources or seek reports on spending plans. Health authorities will themselves determine the need for any reordering of their priorities and the education and training requirements of their staff.

NHS (Occupational Health and Safety)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to ensure the adequate organisation and funding of an occupational health and safety service for the National Health Service which complies with the International Labour Organisation convention 161.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Nurses (Back Pain)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will accept the recommendations of the report of the Robens Institute on back pain in nurses.

Mr. Newton: The report by the Robens Institute was circulated to general managers of health authorities on 20 August 1986, under cover of a letter DA(86)19, a copy of which is in the Library.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list total Government expenditure in real terms and in cash terms on provision for the elderly in each of the last 10 years.

(2) if he will list total Government expenditure in real terms and in cash terms on provision for the mentally handicapped in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

AIDS

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have died with AIDS stated as a cause of death on the death certificate; what is his estimate of the total number of deaths where AIDS was a contributory factor but did not explicitly appear as such on the death certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There have been 220 deaths registered in England and Wales up to the end of 1986 where the cause of death AIDS or a similar term has appeared on the original death certifications.

We cannot make a sensible estimate of the number of deaths where HIV infection was a contributory factor but did not appear on the death certificate. However, by the end of December 1986, 285 deaths from AIDS in England and Wales had been reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he has given to the prison staff and medical service and to special hospitals about the risk of the spread of HIV.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

Prison service management centrally, regionally and locally, has been active in disseminating to prison staff wide ranging information and advice in the form of operational guidelines, training programmes and specially convened meetings. Prison medical officers have also received advice on the medical management of cases and regular and detailed briefing on epidemiological and clinical matters. These measures will continue.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has issued comprehensive guidance to the special hospitals. The guidance covers education, staff training and preventive measures, and advice on serotesting and patient and staff care. The guidance stresses the need for full information and counselling for staff and patients in relation to both the risk of transmission of HIV infection within the hospital and all aspects of serotesting, particularly the implications of a positive result. The Department of Health and Social Security is in touch with some centres about places for special hospital staff on courses in counselling skills. The hospitals will continue to receive relevant general guidance which is issued periodically by the DHSS and will be given further specific guidance if this is considered necessary.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a statement giving his response to the Burgen committee report on food irradiation.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter) on 12 January at column 120.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the current level of research into the effects of the irradiation of food; if he has any plans to enhance the level of public awareness on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for supplementary benefit take more than 14 days before payment is made after first application in each social security office, what proportion of supplementary benefit claims this represents in each office, and what is the average number of weeks delay before supplementary benefit claims are met at each office.

Mr. Lyell [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c.106-7]: The number of claims for supplementary benefit which take more than 14 days to clear is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Details of the average time taken to deal with a fresh claim for supplementary benefit by each local social security office for the year up to and including 8 April 1986 have been placed in the Library.

NHS Representatives (Business Interests)

Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what rules govern the outside business interests of individuals either employed by the National Health Service or sitting as representatives on the various management boards; and whether their business interests have to be declared.

Mr. Newton: Members and employees of health authorities are subject to the Prevention of Corruption Acts in the same way as any others working in public service.

There are long standing instructions governing the conduct of members and employees in this respect and I am considering the issue of revised guidance.

Standing orders of health authorities require the declaration of any financial interest or relationship a member or employee may have with a manufacturer, supplier or contractor with whom the health authority may enter into a contractual relationship and any financial interest which may affect the authority's planning or policy decisions.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will extend the severe weather payment regulations to cover single women receiving supplementary pensions between the ages of 60 and 65 years; and if he will estimate the additional costs involved;

(2) if he will extend the severe weather payment regulations to cover single widows between the ages of 60 and 65 years; and if he will estimate the additional costs involved;

(3) if he will extend the severe weather payment regulations to cover assessment units with children under the age of five years; and if he will estimate the additional costs involved.

Mr. Major: Exceptionally cold weather payments have been targeted on those groups most at risk from the cold. No reliable estimate can be made of the cost of extending entitlement to other groups, since this will depend on how often, and in how many areas, a period of exceptionally cold weather is declared in any particular year, and on the number of claimants in those groups who have capital of less than £500 on the date of claim.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about enabling neighbourhood energy action groups to insulate the homes of those receiving severe weather payments; and what reply he has given.

Mr. Major: "Neighbourhood Energy Action" wrote to me on 15 January 1987 asking me to consider using records of exceptionally cold weather payments to identify vulnerable people who may qualify for help with draughtproofing. I will be replying to its letter shortly.

Sir Russell Johnston asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the letter sent to him by the hon. Member for Inverness, Nairn and Lochaber about exceptionally severe weather payments on 2 December 1986.

Mr. Lyell: I replied to the hon. Member on 29 January 1987.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will instruct all his offices to accept telephone applications for severe weather payments; and if he will instruct each local office to write to pensioners and others on supplementary benefit informing them that they may be eligible for severe weather payments.

Mr. Major: The Department's local offices have already been instructed to accept claims for exceptionally cold weather payments by telephone.

Although there are nearly 5 million supplementary benefit recipients, it is estimated that only about 1·5 million of these will qualify for exceptionally cold weather payments. It is not, therefore, proposed to instruct local offices to write to all supplementary benefit recipients about the scheme. I am, however, satisfied that, in view of the widespread publicity in national and local newspapers and on local radio, all reasonable steps have been taken to ensure that potential claimants are made aware of their entitlement.

Breast Cancer Screening

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to give his response to the Forrest committee report on breast cancer screening.

Mrs. Currie: The Government are urgently considering their responses and will make an announcement shortly.

Meningitis

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the total number of diagnosed cases of meningitis which have occurred in each of the last three years; and how many of this number were found in the Eastern regional health authority area for each of these years.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

University College Hospital (Special Trustees)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the original endowments making up the funds administered by the special trustees for the University College hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Information of this sort is not held centrally. The nature and terms of the original endowments are confidential, and it is for the special trustees to decide whether they may be disclosed. The hon. Member may therefore wish to approach them himself.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last checked that the special trustees for the University College hospital were disbursing funds in accordance with their trust instrument and the National Health Service Acts 1973 and 1977.

Mrs. Currie: The accounts of special trustees are examined each year by auditors appointed by my right hon. Friend under the provisions of the National Health Service Act 1977.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the special trustees for the University College hospital appointed by him under the National Health Service Act 1977 giving their occupations and qualifications together with the dates and periods of their appointments;

(2) if he will place in the Library a copy of the trust instrument of the special trustees for the University College hospital.

| Name and Qualifications | Occupation | Appointed to |
|---|---|---|
| Dr. H Baderman BSc FRCP JP | Consultant | 31 March 1990 |
| Dr. P. M. Meadow MA PhD | Reader in Biochemistry | 31 March 1988 |
| Mr. J. J. Tobin MA LLB | Solicitor | 31 March 1988 |
| Dr. P Verrill MBBS FFARCS | Consultant Anaesthetist | 31 March 1990 |

A copy of the instrument of appointment has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total value of funds currently held by the special trustees of the University College hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The annual accounts of the special trustees for 1985-86, the latest year available, show the total value of funds held on 31 March 1986 as £5,382,558.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria must be applied by the special trustees for the University College hospital in disbursing funds.

Mrs. Currie: The powers of special trustees are prescribed in sections 90 to 96 of the National Health Service Act 1977, as amended by the Health Services Act 1980, but the detailed execution of their duties is governed by the statutes and common laws relating to trustees in general and charitable trustees in particular. These include the Trustee Act 1925, the Charities Act 1960, the Trustee Investments Act 1961, and associated case law.

Primary Care

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he has taken and what measures he proposes to take to reduce the geographical inequalities in the finance and provision of primary care.

Mr. Newton: The primary health care services comprise the family practitioner services and the community health services. Expenditure on the family practitioner services is not cash limited and resources are provided to meet demand. The level of resources devoted to community health services is a matter for regional health authorities and district health authorities whose overall financial allocations are determined so as to reduce, over time, geographical inequalities in health service provision relative to population need.

Accident and Emergency Departments (Doctors' Posts)

Mr. Randall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is taking to fill vacant hospital doctor posts in accident and emergency departments (i) in the Hull royal infirmary and (ii) throughout the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for the medical staffing of a particular hospital department lies with the local health authority. Information is not available centrally about vacant medical posts in accident and emergency departments although we are aware that some posts have been difficult to fill. We are keeping the position under review, but the underlying problem appears to be the imbalance in the hospital medical staffing structure which our proposals in "Hospital Medical Staffing—Achieving a Balance" are expected to correct. The number of doctors in post in England in the specialty of accident and emergency has increased by 16·5 per cent. since 1979—from 1,421 whole-time equivalents to 1,656 whole-time equivalents in 1986. The numbers in all medical specialties increased by 13 per cent. in the same period.

Mortality

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Social Services what were the broad conclusions to be drawn from the "Occupational Mortality Decennial Supplement", published in July 1986; whether figures for mortality by social class will be given in the 1991 supplement; and in what document information about infant mortality by social class is published.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Adoptions

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to transracial adoptions for children in the care of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: In all decisions relating to the adoption of a child courts and adoption agencies, whether local authorities or voluntary societies, are required to give first consideration to the need to safeguard and promote that child's welfare throughout childhood and to take account of the child's wishes and feelings. Within this legal framework the choice of prospective adopters is the statutory responsibility of agencies and a matter of professional judgment. The child's needs arising from his ethnic, cultural and religious origins and identity are important factors in decisions about adoption placements and we welcome the efforts which are being made by statutory and voluntary agencies to recruit prospective adopters from ethnic minority groups.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many primary fittings of limbs were carried out at artificial limb and appliance centres in each month since January 1985.

Mr. Major: The figures requested are not available.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many amputees were waiting for primary fittings in each month since 1985; and whether any amputations have been postponed as a result of the industrial dispute at J. E. Hanger.

Mr. Major: The figures requested are not available.

A decision on whether an amputation is to be carried out is made by the surgeon concerned. We are not aware of any postponement of an amputation on account of the J. E. Hanger industrial dispute.

Perivale Hospital

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 29 January, what is his estimate of the value of the Perivale hospital and its associated buildings, separate from the land attached to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

PRIME MINISTER

Cold Weather Poverty

Q18. Sir David Price asked the Prime Minister whether, in the light of this winter's experience of exceptionally cold weather, she will review Her Majesty's Government's arrangements for mitigating the problems of cold weather poverty.

The Prime Minister: The Government already give substantial help with heating costs through the supplementary benefit scale rates and weekly heating additions.

The exceptionally cold weather payment scheme was amended from 26 January to provide help when the average temperature for an area falls to 0° Celsius or less over a fixed seven-day period. Future arrangements for extra help during periods of exceptionally cold weather will be considered in the light of this winter's experience.

Rural Areas (Land Use)

Q118. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Prime Minister whether she is satisfied with the co-ordination of the various Departments studying alternative land use in rural areas.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

State Security

Q180. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister when she first became aware that Sir Robert Armstrong had offered inaccurate evidence in the Wright case in Australia concerning the Attorney-General's alleged role in deciding whether to proceed against Mr. Chapman Pincher's book "Their Trade is Treachery", and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Prime Minister: It remains inappropriate to comment on matters at issue in the Peter Wright case in Australia.

HMSO Publications (Distribution)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Prime Minister if she will list in the Official Report those publications of Her Majesty's Stationery Office in respect of which the authorisation of persons or public bodies other than Government Ministers is required before copies may be sent to hon. and right hon. Members; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A limited number of Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications are, on the instructions of the Home Office, issued only on production of a written authority signed by a senior officer in the police or a local authority. The publications concerned are as follows:

Firearms forms

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister, if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 February.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minister, if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 February.

Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Prime Minister, if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 3 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Cigarettes (Imports)

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about the extent and trend of subsidised imports of cigarettes; from which main countries they come; what information he has about the margin by which such imports undercut the price of domestically produced cigarettes; what representations he has received about the implications of these imports for the competitiveness and viability of the United Kingdom cigarette industry; and what action he proposes to take.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Concern has been expressed by the United Kingdom cigarette manufacturing industry about the competitive impact of imports of cheap brands of cigarettes. According to estimates provided by the industry imports of cheap brands have risen from 0·1 billion in 1983 to 9·6 billion in 1986 of which about 90 per cent. come from the Federal Republic of Germany (including West Berlin). The 1986 import figure represents about 10 per cent. of United Kingdom cigarette consumption. The industry has estimated that these imports can undercut the retail prices of United Kingdom manufactured brands by up to 20p per packet of 20 cigarettes, particularly as a result of marginal costing policies pursued by foreign manufacturers. If it can be shown that the price differential is due to unfair subsidies the Government will take the matter up with the European Commission.

Post Office (Consultants' Fees)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has about spending by the Post Office on fees to outside consultants in the current year, in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Pattie: The information I have relates to expenditure on consultancy in 1985-86 and is contained in paragraphs 6.76-6.77 of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the Post Office's procurement activities (Cmnd. 9912), to which I refer my hon. Friend.

Aircraft Manufacture

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made as to which aircraft manufacturers in Germany, France, Italy or Spain could manufacture the high-technology wings required for the A330 and A340 aircraft and of the high technology interchange which would result in air frame manufacture in collaboration between the MD11 manufacturers and Airbus Industrie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: No such assessments have been made. British Aerospace's application for launch-aid for its participation in the Airbus A330/A340 programme was submitted, and is being considered, on the basis that it would be manufacturing the high-technology wings for these aircraft. Airbus Industrie and McDonnell Douglas suspended last September their discussions on possible collaboration on the MD11 and the A330/A340, and have not since resumed them.

Boeing Aircraft Corporation

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the direct or indirect support given to the Boeing Aircraft Corporation by the United States Government through research contracts, whether military, space or civil, by ordinary or special tax relief, or by any other means; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: The American competitors of Airbus, of which Boeing is one, continue to derive benefit from a wide range of Government support, including public contracts and publicly funded programmes. According to consultancy estimates available to the Government last year, the combined aeronautics R and D expenditure by the United States Department of Defence, NASA and the Department of Transportation over the last 15 years exceeds $47.5 billion. In addition, tax concessions associated with the switch to foreign sales corporations are estimated to have benefited Boeing by $397 million. My Department keeps the position under close review.

Airbus

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the cumulative order and optional orders for each of the following Airbus aircraft: A300, A310, A320, A330 and A340 for the following years: (a) 1980, (b) 1981, (c) 1982, (d) 1983, (e) 1984, (f) 1985, and (g) 1986 and the situation as at 1 February; and if he will make a statement.

| | A300 | | A310 | | A320 | | A330 | | A340 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Orders | Options | Orders | Options | Orders | Options | Orders | Options | Orders | Options |

Notes:

(1) The recording of options for mature programmes (A300, A310) was discontinued in 1984.

(2) Two airlines have publicly announced their intentions to place firm orders for 22 A340s and options for a further 15 of these aircraft.

The sales record of the Airbus programmes, and in particular that achieved for the A320 before its first flight has been made, is one of which the European aerospace industry, including the many United Kingdom companies participating in these programmes, can justly be proud.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is now in a position to give an estimate of the profit his Department is likely to make from its investment in the A320 Airbus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: Based on information supplied by British Aerospace, my Department expects to obtain its agreed rate of return on launch-aid provided to British Aerospace for the Airbus A320. However, the details remain commercially confidential.

British Sugar Corporation

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when and in what form he expects to announce his decision on the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission relating to the acquisition of British Sugar by Tate and Lyle or Gruppo Feruzzi.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend will make an announcement as soon as is practicable.

United States (Trade Relations)

Mr. Carttiss asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the settlement of the Community's trade dispute with the United States of America.

Mr. Channon: I wish to explain the agreement by the Government to the adoption of a Council decision on the conclusion of negotiations with the United States before it was possible for the Select Committee on European Legislation to scrutinise it.

On 30 January the Council of Ministers approved the terms of an agreement negotiated between the Commission and the United States to settle the protracted dispute between the two parties over the terms of Community enlargement. The main elements of the agreement provide for the Community, subject to the transitional arrangements applying to Portugal and Spain in their treaties of accession, to restore in respect of the enlarged Community the tariff rates previously bound in GATT in relation to the Community of Ten. Reduced levy quotas will be opened by the Community for the period 1 January 1987 to 31 December 1990 for imports into Spain of at least 2 million tonnes of corn and 300,000 tonnes of sorghum. Community tariffs on a series of other products will be reduced autonomously for the same period of four years. The arrangements will be reviewed in July 1990.

In view of the urgency of concluding the agreement by 30 January I decided not to withhold agreement to decisions until the Select Committee had had the opportunity to consider it. I regret that it was not possible for the normal scrutiny procedures to be followed in this case.

The Government warmly welcome this agreement, which is the means of averting an exchange of retaliatory and counter-retaliatory trade measures between the United States and the Community which would have had very serious consequences for EC-US trade, for the multilateral trading system and for progress in the new round of multilateral trade negotiations which is now beginning in GATT.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the conclusion of the working group formed to review the procedures relating to the use of firearms by the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: On 26 February 1986 I announced that, in response to the concerns which have been expressed about the use of firearms by the police, a working group was to be formed, under Home Office chairmanship, to examine all aspects of the policy and procedures relating to the issue to and use by the police of firearms in England and Wales. I undertook to advise the House of the working group's conclusions.

The working party comprised representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers, the Police Complaints Authority, the Police Federation and the Superintendents' Association as well as Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary and the Home Office. They have carried out a thorough review and have made a number of recommendations. In response to my invitation to police authorities and other organisations and individuals to submit their views for the working group's consideration, 12 such submissions were received. I should like to thank those whose contributions did much to inform the working group's deliberations.

I have today placed in the Library a complete list of the working group's recommendations and conclusions, together with its membership and terms of reference, a list of those who submitted evidence and the text of the revised Home Office guidelines for the police on the issue and use of firearms. I am asking all chief officers to accept and implement the working group's recommendations. I know that many have already done so or are in the process of doing so.

The working group's report is thoughtful and detailed. Because of the thoroughness with which the review was conducted the report necessarily contains a wealth of operational and tactical detail. It would not be sensible for all such information, which could be of considerable value in the wrong hands, to be publicly aired. The same considerations apply to te "Manual of Guidance on Police Use of Firearms" which is produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers and which is often referred to in the working group's report and in its conclusions and recommendations.

The working group looked closely at such matters as the selection and training of police officers for firearms duties; the criteria for authorisation to issue firearms for particular operations; the relevant instructions and guidelines; the planning, briefing for and supervision of armed operations; and the choice of weapons and ammunition.

The practical effect of carrying out the working group's recommendations will be to enhance the standards of professionalism and restraint exercised by the police in this difficult and dangerous area of police operations.

It recommends, for example, that there should be an increased operational role for specialist firearms teams, the members of which should be on 24-hour called to attend operations requiring the issue of firearms. The officers in these teams should not be dedicated solely to firearms duties, but those duties should take priority over their other police work. Nor should they be the only armed police response available within forces. These teams should be in addition to an equitable distribution of authorised firearms officers throughout the force area. The aim is to have fewer authorised firearms officers and a greater concentration of training and the development of tactical and operational skills on them.

As regards the selection of officers for firearms training, the working group recommends procedures which will probe carefully an officer's temperament, maturity and stability as well as his or her physical suitability for such training. Those who are selected, trained and authorised to carry firearms should be assessed both continuously and annually for their continued suitability for armed duties.

The working group does not recommend any changes in the length of initial and refresher training courses. Both of these have recently been increased. But it advises that developments in judgment training systems should be monitored so that suitable systems can be introduced into the training programmes. This will lead to a greater emphasis in training on the need for trainees to decide, under conditions of stress, whether to shoot, as distinct from how to shoot.

The working group also stresses the importance to armed operations for supervisory officers to be trained in the right tactics as well as in supervision itself, and for them to consult properly trained tactical advisers.

The working group also recommends that senior officers who may be called upon to authorise the issue of firearms for particular operations, as well as those responsible for planning armed operations and for briefing the personnel to be involved, should be provided with aides-memoire and checklists to ensure that no important point is overlooked. These documents will require specifically that the option of proceeding without the issue of firearms should be considered before authorisation for their issue is given.

In order to maintain the standards of firearms training throughout England and Wales and to ensure that best practice is spread the working group recommends a system of inspections of firearms training both at the national firearms training centres and within individual forces.

Contrary to what is often reported, neither the drawing nor the actual use of firearms by police officers in England and Wales has increased in recent years. Neither the Government nor the police have any desire to shift away from the traditional emphasis on unarmed policing. But public concern on the matters covered by the report is understandable, and I share it. This has been a valuable exercise. The outcome will be better protection for the public and police officers alike on those rare occasions when police officers have to carry guns, and the even rarer occasions on which they are required to use them.

Life Sentences

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year of the past five years, how many people were serving life sentences in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 1.4 of the latest issue for 1985, Cmnd. 9903). Information for 1986 is not yet available.

Wandsworth Prison

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of staff and their rank employed at Wandsworth prison on 19 January.

Mr. Mellor: Staff employed at Wandsworth prison on 19 January were as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Governor I | 1 |
| Governor III | 1 |
| Governor IV | 2 |
| Assistant Governor | 4 |
| Chief Officer I | |

| Medical Officers | 4 |
| Pharmacists | 2 |
| Chaplains | 5 |
| Education Officers | 2 |
| Civilian Instructors | 16 |
| Senior Executive Officer | 1 |
| Higher Executive Officer | 2 |
| Higher P&T Officer | 1 |
| Executive Officers | 7 |
| Administration Assistants | 12 |
| Typing Manager | 1 |
| Personal Secretary | 1 |
| Typists | 8 |
| Telephonists | 2 |
| Administration Officers | 29 |
| Civilian Drivers | 3 |
| Storemen | 8 |
| Cleaners | 4 |
| Industrial Craftsmen | 24 |

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to the proposals for the open land opposite Wandsworth prison and adjoining Alma terrace, Wandsworth, as to the proposed use of this land.

Mr. Mellor: As has been explained previously to the hon. Member in reply to his question of 28 October 1985, at column 344, this land is being used to provide temporary car parking facilities while building works within the establishment are in progress, and it is likely to continue to be needed for these purposes in the immediate future. We are aware that, in the longer term, the local authority wishes to see this land used to provide open space, and, when we no longer need the land for car parking, we shall discuss with the authority its future use.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of car parking spaces available for staff working at Wandsworth prison.

Mr. Mellor: 82 car parking spaces are at present available for staff at Wandsworth prison, including 19 spaces provided on a temporary basis on open land adjacent to the prison.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further proposals he has for dealing with drug abuse.

Mr. Mellor: Recent developments were set out in my reply to my hon. Friend on 20 November, at column 302. Since then the Council of Europe Pompidou Group of Ministers, at its meeting in London last month, has agreed a wide-ranging new plan of action; the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 has come fully into effect, and we have announced a £2·1 million scheme for drug-related teacher training in 1987-88, provision of an extra £1 million in 1987-88 to enable drug misuse agencies to reach more drug misusers and provide more counselling on AIDS.

Crime (Basildon)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders, rapes, armed robberies, and burglaries there were in Basildon in 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The information which is collected centrally is of notifiable offences recorded in the Essex police force area, figures for which are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (tables S.3.1 and S.3.1(A) of volume 3 of the issue for 1985).

CRE Code of Practice

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Metropolitan police will implement the Commission for Racial Equality code of practice on employment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the Metropolitan police are implementing the CRE code of practice on employment.

Wapping (Public Houses)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why public houses in Wapping were raided by the police on the evening of 24 January.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me there were no such raids.

Racial Incidents

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis explaining why no consultation took place with relevant external organisations in respect of territorial operations instruction I/86, "Best Practice Guidelines for Recording and Monitoring Racial Incidents" between February and July 1986 and as to what management measures are being taken to enforce and monitor the implementation of the minimum requirements and to encourage and monitor initiatives taken in line with the best practice options set out in appendix A.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am assured by the Commissioner that consultations with community organisations following the issue of the Metropolitan police best practice guidelines for recording and monitoring racial incidents did take place during the period concerned and have done so since. Given the need for the guidelines to be implemented in a way which takes proper account of local circumstances, implementation is a matter for local decision in consultation with the community.

Victim Examination Suites

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victim examination suites have been opened in cities with a population of 50,000 or more persons since 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The provision of facilities for the examination of victims is a matter for individual chief officers of police. No information is held centrally.

Rape

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Home Office has updated the circular concerning policies regarding rape since 1985.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes, in Home Office circular 69/1986, issued on 15 October 1986, which provided guidance to the police on their treatment of victims of violence against women.

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by police force area the number of male and female officers trained for the interviewing and examining of rape victims.

Payments to Consultants

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 12 December 1986, Official Report, column 253, whether he will break down the expenditure on payments to consultants between management and computer consultants.

Mr. Hurd: Records do not distinguish between management and computer consultants and this information is not therefore readily available.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have served prison sentences of less that one week at Winson Green prison, Birmingham since 31 January 1986.

Mr. Mellor: According to the records held centrally, about 80 persons were initially received into Birmingham prison in the period 1 February to 30 November 1986 to serve sentences of less than one week.

BBC

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation governors; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Hussey on 13 January to discuss the future arrangements for financing the BBC, a matter on which he made an announcement the following day.

Opinion Polls

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to establish a code of conduct to cover the methodology and publication of political opinion polls and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

DEFENCE

Royal Naval Vessels (Collisions)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if any Royal Navy vessel has been in collision with a Russian vessel in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on how many occasions in the last 12 months Royal Navy submarines have been involved in collisions with other seagoing vessels.

Mr. Stanley: No such collisions have occurred.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how extensive was the damage to the stern of a Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarine, recently involved in a collision and repaired in Portsmouth;

(2) which nuclear-powered submarines have undergone repairs in Portsmouth in the last 12 months, and on what dates.

Mr. Stanley: No Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines have been repaired at Portsmouth in the last 12 months.

TRANSPORT

Ports of London and Liverpool (Assistance)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Transport if any form of financial assistance is currently being given to the ports of (a) London or (b) Liverpool.

Mr. Moore: Government grant to the Port of London Authority for the severance of non-registered employees ceased on 31 December 1986. So did grant for the special severance scheme for registered dock workers in the port of London in November and December. The payment of grant for severances in the port of Liverpool (and of grants in respect of any further severances in London) awaits a decision by the European Commission on whether they are compatible with the treaty of Rome provisions on state a ids. The Commission sought a justification for these grants only in late December of last year, although it has been aware of their existence for a number of years. Under the treaty of Rome we are debarred from continuing to make these grants until the Commission has made its decision.

This includes the current severance offer in Liverpool: I understand the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company has today told the unions that the terms of the severance offer stand but its implementation must await the outcome of the Commission's deliberation.

Coaches (Speed Limiters)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Transport what penalties will be incurred by operators of coaches fitted with mandatory speed limiting devices when infringements take place caused by incorrect installation and or setting up; what discussions have taken place with the police about the allowable error in vehicle speed before prosecution; how he proposes to check such devices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We propose to amend the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations so as to make compulsory the fitting of speed limiters to coaches. The maximum penalty for a breach of these regulations is currently a fine of £1,000. The regulations will be based on a British Standard, which will include clauses on accuracy of calibration. We shall be consulting interested parties, including the police, on a draft regulation and on arrangements for the frequency of calibration and checking.

Bonby Lodge (Junction)

Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is the intention of his Department to provide resources to the Humberside county council to enable it to construct a grade separated junction at Bonby Lodge on the A15(T) with the B1206.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have written to Humberside county council asking for a report on its proposals for this junction. Decisions will be taken on receipt of the report.

Shipping Statistics

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will publish the most recent projection available to his Department of shipping using United Kingdom ports in the year 2000 in terms both of the number of ships and the values of cargoes at current prices in the following categories; (a) under 10,000 dwt, (b) 10,000-39,999 dwt, (c) 40-79,999 dwt and (d) over 80,000 dwt;

(2) if he will publish the most recent projection available to his Department for the trend between the current year and the year 2000 of shipping using United Kingdom ports in each of the following categories: (a) containers, (b) bulk cargoes and (c) cereal cargoes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: As far as I am aware no one has made any such projections.

Cycle Lanes

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what evidence his Department has about the impact of the experimental cycle lanes in the Fulham road in the boroughs of Hammersmith and Fulham, and Kensington and Chelsea, on accidents to cyclists;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the exercise of powers by him under part II of schedule 5 to the Local Government Act 1985 in respect of the decision of Kensington and Chelsea council to terminate the experimental cycle lanes on the Fulham road; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have a copy of the accident data included in the report on the cycle lanes considered by the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea's town planning committee on 29 September 1986. My right hon. Friend's approval to its decision not to make permanent the cycle lanes when the experimental order lapsed is not required under the provisions of part II of schedule 5 to the Local Government Act 1985.

Bus Lanes (Westminster)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leicester, East of 19 January, Official Report, column 382, whether he has any further information from Westminster city council concerning the future of the three bus lanes around the Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. It has notified my right hon. Friend, under the requirements of the Local Government Act 1985, schedule 5, paragraph 5, of its intention to make permanent the two bus lanes on Millbank.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress regarding the proposed second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scheme for the second Severn crossing has some complex and unusual engineering, environmental, financing, contractual and legislative features which the consultants' study report and the announcement on 24 July by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales have shown. It is necessary to examine these aspects very fully before proceeding with the detailed development of the scheme. This is currently in hand.

As mentioned in the announcement, we wish to be in a position to provide the second Severn crossing by the mid-1990s if traffic growth warrants it by then and Parliament so decides. This is still the Government's aim.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Parliamentary Groups (Grants)

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the amount of grant his Department is making during the current year to (a) the British-United States of America Parliamentary Group; (b) the British-France Parliamentary Group; and (c) the British-Soviet Parliamentary Group.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not making a grant to any of these parliamentary groups during the current financial year.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what countries have been approached with regard to permanent resettlement of Hong Kong's Vietnamese refugees; what was the number of refugees resettled in the periods 1983-84, 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 to date; and what agreements have been reached by Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the Hong Kong Government with respect to its refugee problem.

Mrs. Chalker: Since 1979 we have approached a very wide range of countries to seek their assistance in resettling refugees from Hong Kong. In response to our approaches and those of UNHCR the following countries have resettled Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong:

Argentina
Australia
Austria
Belgium
Bermuda
Canada
China
Denmark
Finland
France (incl. New Caledonia)
German Federal Republic
Greece
Ireland
Israel
Italy
Ivory Coast
Japan
Luxembourg
Netherlands
New Zealand
Norway
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
USA
Vanuatu

We have not, however, entered into formal agreements with any Government or organisation with respect to the resettlement of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong. Substantial numbers of refugees have been resettled in the United Kingdom and in Hong Kong itself.

In 1983, 4,200 Vietnamese refugees were resettled from Hong Kong. The figures for 1984, 1985 and 1986 were 3,694, 3,953 and 3,816 respectively. We remain in close contact with resettlement countries and with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees as part of our continuing efforts to identify a durable solution to this sad problem.

Departmental Expenditure Limits

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will propose to make any changes in the Foreign and Commonwealth cash limits and running costs limit for 1986-87.

Mr. Eggar: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimates, the cash limit for Class II, Vote 1, (Overseas Representation) will be increased by £6,310,000 from £393,260,000 to £399,570,000 and the running costs limit by £6,225,000 from £369,300,000 to £375,525,000; the cash limit for Class II, Vote 2 (Other External Relations) will be increased by £4,061,000 from £99,557,000 to £103,618,000 and the cash limit for Class II, Vote 4 (British Council) will be increased by £2,060,000 from £50,694,000 to £52,754,000. In all cases the increases take account of unavoidable increased costs. These include those associated with the introduction of a visa regime for certain Asian and African countries net of offsetting savings including reduced fuel and rent costs and increases in visa fees receipts.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate for Class II, Vote 3 (BBC External Broadcasting and Monitoring) the cash limit for this Vote will be reduced by £3,403,000 from £113,280,000 to £109,877,000. The cash limit increase of £1,643,000 announced by the Chief Secretary on 22 July 1986 under the end year flexibility scheme has been surrendered as well as a further reduction reflected by a declared underspend of £1,760,000.

The net increases reflecting these changes will be charged to the reserve.

EC (Palestinian Imports)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to monitor the results of recent European Economic Community policies to encourage the flow of Palestinian products into the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EEC (Spanish Accession)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the proposals and concessions agreed with the United States of America following its complaint under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade rules on the Spanish accession to the European Economic Community; and what will be the estimated reduction in European Economic Community revenue in consequence over the anticipated period of the settlement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

I will reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Research Councils (Fees)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has about spending by the research councils on fees to outside consultants in the current year, in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Walden: The information is as follows:

| Financial year | £'000 |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 2,775·5 |
| 1985-86 | 3,132·4 |
| 1986-87[1] | 2,210·9 |

[1] period up to 31 December 1986.

Burnham Grammar School

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received about the proposed closure of Burnham grammar school; and how many of these have been returned to the sender.

Mr. Dunn: Section 12 of the Education Act 1980 requires local education authorities to publish notices of their intention to cease to maintain a school and provides for objections to such proposals to be made to the education authority in the two months following publication. Of 65 letters so far received by my right hon. Friend about the proposed closure of Burnham grammar school, 17 were objections made within the statutory period of notice: these were returned to the senders with an explanatory letter recommending them to address their objections to the local education authority. Copies of the correspondence were retained.

In considering the authority's proposals for Burnham school my right hon. Friend will take careful account of the points made by all objectors.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC (Food Sales)

Mr. Terlezki asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has had recent discussions with the Foreign Ministers of European countries about the sale of European Comission surplus wheat, beef, butter and wine to the Soviet Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I have spoken to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Sales of surplus agricultural products to the USSR have not been discussed recently in the Council of Ministers.

EC (Food Surpluses)

Mr. Ian Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to extend the distribution of European Economic Community food surplus to those in receipt of housing benefit.

Mr. Gummer: No. The Community legislation provides for distribution of food to the most needy, whereas I am advised by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services that housing benefit can be received at levels of income equal to or exceeding average earnings.

Co-responsibility Levy

Sir Anthony Grant asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the operation of the co-responsibility levy in the United Kingdom; what proportion of the levy has been deducted by merchants from growers; and how much has been collected by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce to date.

Mr. Gummer: The levy is payable on all grain that is bought into intervention, exported to non-community countries or which undergoes processing, except that processed by a producer on his holding for use as animal feed on that holding.

The EC regulations require that the levy be passed back to the cereals producer and shown in the documentation relating to each transaction through the marketing chain. How this is done is for the participants to individual transactions to agree. Information on the proportion deducted by merchants from growers is not available.

Up to 31 December 1986 the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce had collected £6·95 million.

Food Production

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in which areas of food production the United Kingdom is self-sufficient; and what proportion these represent of total production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Data on supply, usage and self-sufficiency (production as a percentage of total new supply) in the United Kingdom for individual food commodities may be found in tables 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 17, 18 and 19 of the "Annual Review of Agriculture 1987" (Cm. 67), which is available in the Library of the House.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Ashdown asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the average length of time from an application for removal from intervention stores and the carrying out of this request from (a) July 1986, (b) December 1986 and (c) the mean average for the year 1986.

Mr. Gummer: Purchasers of intervention commodities must take responsibility for the goods within the period specified in the regulations, but may choose to leave them in store at their own expense. Calculations of the average period before removal would entail checking the date of each discharge from store, numbering about 123,000 during the 1986 calendar year, and would involve disproportionate cost.

Sludge (Sea Dumping)

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations Her Majesty's Government have received and from what sources regarding the United Kingdom's continued practice of dumping sludge at sea.

Mr. Gummer: A wide variety of points of view have been expressed from time to time on this matter, both in the United Kingdom and elsewhere. I set out the position of Her Majesty's Government when the House debated a proposal from the European Commission on dumping at sea on 4 February 1986, at columns 245-59.

Pesticides

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will indicate the time taken to process the registration for pesticides under the Control of Pesticide regulations 1986; and what was the equivalent period before they were introduced.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An accurate comparison cannot be made because we are still dealing with applications received before the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. However, during the five years before the entry into force of these regulations processing time varied from three weeks to 10 months depending on the type of application. The current estimates for the processing time of applications received since October 1986 is between three and 11 months.

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will consider appointing additional staff at his Department's Harpenden station to cope with the implementation of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have already increased by 10 the complement of staff at Harpenden laboratory to deal both with the implementation of the new pesticides controls and with an increasing work load. Nine of these additional officers are now in post. Unfortunately, the effect of these increases has been modified by the departure of two experienced senior scientists to the agrochemical industry. The need for further increases is currently under review.

Chemical Imports

Mr. John Carlisle asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he has received evidence of chemicals being imported into the United Kingdom whose labelling contravenes existing copyright regulations;

(2) what action he intends to take against agricultural chemical imports that have been repackaged and substituted for identical products approved by registration.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has received and carefully considered reports that certain imported pesticide products may be being sold or supplied contrary to the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. No similar reports about breaches of copyright have been received.

Anti-fouling Compounds

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a statutory ban on the use of TBT anti-fouling compounds on salmon netting.

Mr. Gummer: I am asking the Advisory Committee on Pesticides for advice as to what measures should be taken under part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to regulate the use of these and other TBT anti-fouling compounds. The Government will decide on the action to be taken in the light of its advice.

Food Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent sales of food have been negotiated in relation to the provision of butter and beef to the Soviet Union; and what is the sale price in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

EC (National Budgets)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the net additional cost to the national budget expenditure of member states of the European Economic Community in 1987 in consequence of the Council decisions of 16 December on milk and related issues.

Mr. Jopling: It is estimated that the decisions on milk quotas and beef will reduce United Kingdom public expenditure in the financial year 1987-88, including the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget, by about £60 million. The programme for disposing of butter stocks with delayed reimbursement of losses to member states is estimated to have a neutral effect on United Kingdom expenditure, as the delay in reimbursement will be balanced by a saving in contributions to the Community budget. The effects in other member states will depend on their shares of disposals and contributions to the budget.

North Sea (Report)

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the United Kingdom's most recent quality status report on the North sea before the ministerial conference in November 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom's contribution to the quality status report being prepared for the North sea conference will not be in final form until the summer of this year. I would then expect it to be made publicly available.

WALES

Job Losses

87. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for Wales, what is the net loss of jobs in manufacturing in the Principality of Wales since June 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information on the net change in employment levels is best obtained from the quarterly estimates of the number of employees in employment compiled by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment and published regularly in Employment Gazette. These estimates indicate that between June 1979 and June 1986 (the latest available figures) there was a decrease of 112,000 in the number of employees in employment in the manufacturing sector in Wales.

EC (Regional Development Fund)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the projects in Wales that have received financial assistance under article 15 of the European regional development fund.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: No projects in Wales have received financial assistance under article 15 of the European regional development fund regulation.

Buses

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library details of the research project into deregulation of bus services that is being carried out jointly by the Department of Transport and the Welsh Office in west Glamorgan and parts of Powys and Clwyd.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The west Glamorgan study is being undertaken by the Cranfield Institute of Technology. In the Powys and Clwyd study areas (the districts of Colwyn, Rhuddlan, Glyndwr and Montgomery) the study is being undertaken by Saint David's university college, Lampeter. Both research projects are due for completion in December 1987, though they are extendable.

Copies of the job specification applicable to both research projects have been placed in the Library of the House.

Caravan Sites Act

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the source of funds for the setting up of sites under the Caravan Sites Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Grants may be payable by the Secretary of State under section 70 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 for approved capital expenditure incurred by any local authority under section 24 of the Caravan Sites and Control of Development Act 1960 in respect of caravan sites provided for the accommodation of gipsies.

Killan Fach Farm, Dunvant

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate the current position regarding the planning appeal on land at Killan Fach farm, Dunvant.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The decision on this appeal is expected to be announced this month.

Road Accidents

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the total number of cyclists (a) killed in road accidents and (b) injured in road accidents in Wales in 1985.

Wales 1985

| Class of road user | Severity of casualty Killed | Injured |
|---|---|---|
| Pedal cyclists | 6 | 827 |
| Mopeds | 1 | 345 |
| Motor scooters | — | 121 |
| Motor cycles[1] | 36 | 1,674 |

[1] Includes motorcycle combinations.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of child pedestrians who were (a) killed and (b) injured on their way to or from school in Wales in 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During 1985 there were five child pedestrians aged 16 or under killed, and 288 injured on their way to or from school in Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of children aged 16 years or under who were (a) killed and (b) injured while riding pedal cycles in Wales in 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: During 1985, one child aged 16 years or under was killed and 455 were injured while riding pedal cycles in Wales.

ENERGY

Nuclear Accidents

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 21 January, Official Report, column 569, mentioning formal registers of accidents, incidents and untoward occurrences at licensed nuclear installations, what is the name of such registers; what are the instructions governing whether an entry is made in such a register; for what period such registers are retained in use; and what relevant copies or extracts are held either by his Department or by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 21 January, Official Report, column 569, mentioning formal registers of accidents, incidents and untoward occurrences at licensed nuclear installations, what is his policy with regard to openness of information in relation to such registers of events; if he will review the requirements imposed on licensees in order to make copies of such registers available for public inspection; if he will hold discussions with licensees on making such registers available without a review of licence requirements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The arrangements for reporting and publishing incidents at civil nuclear installations are currently under review. An announcement will be made shortly.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Unemployment Costs

Mr. Parry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest estimate of the anual net cost to the Exchequer of an unemployed person.

Mr. MacGregor: The latest estimate of the cost of unemployment and supplementary benefit paid to the unemployed in 1986-87 is £6·16 billion, or about £2,150 per head. In addition, it is estimated that £1·26 billion will be paid in housing benefit, a benefit which can continue to be paid if the recipient finds employment. It is not possible to estimate the revenue forgone.

European Community (Budget)

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom's value added tax share of the allocated European Economic Community Budget in 1986 and in 1987 and the corresponding receipt.

Mr. Brooke: The United Kingdom's VAT share of the 1986 allocated budget — that is what our VAT contributions would have been it all our contributions were in the form of VAT and we did not pay traditional own resources, but before allowing for VAT adjustments, the United Kingdom VAT abatement and contributions by other member states to our abatement — can be estimated, on the basis of Commission figures, at 6,199 mecu. The Commission has estimated our receipts from the allocated budget in 1986 at 3,724 mecu. The Community has not yet adopted a budget for 1987; estimates of our 1987 VAT share of the budget and our allocated receipts from it are not therefore available.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each year since 1980 the amount by which United Kingdom gross contribution to the European Economic Community budget exceeds receipts, excluding refunds and rebates, together with (i) the average amount of rebate or refund applicable to that year and (ii) the average amount of refund owed but not paid in respect of previous years.

|---|---|---|---|
| 1980 | 804 | 799 | — |
| 1981 | 1,090 | 1,011 | 8 |
| 1982 | 1,624 | 807 | — |
| 1983 | 1,454 | 589 | — |
| 1984 | 1,184 | 605 | 61 |
| 1985 | 2,035 | [3]1,262 | 439 |
| 1986 | n/a | [4]1,125 | [5]— |

[1] This column shows refunds and abatements against the year to which they relate, not the year in which they are paid. Figures for 1984 onwards are abatements.

[2] Refunds and abatements should be paid a year in arrears. Figures in this column are the amounts outstanding at the end of the year in which they should have been paid.

[3] This figure may need to be revised in due course.

[4] This is the 1,633 mecu abatement in the 1987 draft budget. It will need to be revised upwards in due course.

[5] At 31 December 1986 there was no unpaid refund or abatement outstanding, but any correction to the abatement in respect of 1985 would still enter the accounts.

Small Businesses

Mr. Walters asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received from small businesses about relief from value added tax on bad debts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he intends to implement the proposals in the customs and excise consultation document on value added tax on small businesses, particularly the cash accounting option for suppliers with a turnover of up to £100,000.

Mr. Brooke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Cash limit

Dr. Twinn asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether there will be any changes to the cash limit on the Treasury's 1986-87 vote for economic and financial administration.

Mr. Lawson: The cash limit for the Economic and Financial Administration (Her Majesty's Treasury) Vote (Class XIX, Vote 12) will be reduced by £745,000 from £45,985,000 to £45,240,000. This reduction comprises:

—£245,000 as a result of the transfer of responsibility for the Review Board for Government Contracts to the Secretary of State for Defence with effect from 1 July 1986.

—£500,000 as an offsetting saving against an increase on the non-cash limited United Kingdom Coinage Vote (Class XIX, Vote 13) for which a Spring Supplementary Estimate will be sought to provide for extra payments to the Royal Mint as a result of higher than expected demand for 1 and 2p coins. A further £1,000,000 will be found to offset the Coinage Vote from the non-voted provision for parliamentary election expenses.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Royal Ulster Constabulary

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of the members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary are Catholics; and if he will make a statement on recruitment policies;

(2) how many senior positions in the Royal Ulster Constabulary are held by Catholics.

Mr. Scott: The religious denominations of members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary are not recorded. It is, however, believed that approximately one tenth of the force (including its full-time reserve) are Roman Catholic. The Royal Ulster Constabulary will continue to try to attract suitably qualified recruits from all parts of the community.

Promotions within the RUC are made on merit alone.

Orders in Council

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the measures introduced by his Department since 1979 that have been enacted by Order in Council; and which have not been debated in the House of Commons.

Mr. Tom King: In the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986, 25 such Orders in Council were made under the Northern Ireland Act 1974 without debate. All were subject to negative resolution under the provisions of a related Great Britain Act to which the Northern Ireland Order in Council corresponds. The purpose of including such provisions in Great Britain Bills is to enable Parliament to debate the provisions of the Bill in the knowledge that corresponding provisions will be applied in Northern Ireland by Order in Council.

A further five Orders in Council were made subject to negative resolution under other legislation, without debate.

A list of these Orders in Council is as follows:

Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1979
Bees (Northern Ireland) Order 1980
Social Security (No. 2) (Northern Ireland) Order 1980
Social Security (Contributions) (Northern Ireland) Order 1981
Companies (Northern Ireland) Order 1981
Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1981

Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1986
Health & Personal Social Services (Amendment) (Northern Ireland) Order 1986
Northern Ireland Assembly (Allowances) (Variation) Order 1986

THE ARTS

"Perdition" (Play)

Mr. Marlow asked the Minister for the Arts, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Northampton, North of 29 January, if he is satisfied that the decision of the board of the Royal Court Theatre to cancel "Perdition" was taken on artistic grounds.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 29 January. This is not a matter for me but for the board of the Royal Court Theatre, which is responsible for decisions about what is to be included in its programme.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Attorney-General if he has any plans to give general public access to the Land Registry and to make information held on it public; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Government will make a decision on the proposals contained in the Law

Commission's report No. 148 on opening the Land Register when they have completed their consideration of the representations received.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Seasonal Workers

81. Mr. Hicks asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to change the conditions for unemployment benefit entitlement with reference to the position of seasonal workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Social Security Advisory Committee is at present reviewing the operation of the additional conditions applying to the receipt of unemployment benefit by seasonal workers, at the request of my right hon. Friend, and the position will be considered in the light of its eventual report and any recommendations that it may make.

Mentally Handicapped Children

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date his Department received the letter dated 18 April 1986 sent by the special interest group on mental handicap of the British Association of Social Workers, concerning the need to get mentally handicapped children out of long-stay hospitals; on what date his Department replied; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The letter of 18 April to which the hon. Member refers was received in the Department on 25 April, and was in reply to a letter of 17 February 1986 from my noble Friend to regional health authority chairmen and others concerned with mentally handicapped children. I am sorry that a reply was not sent to the special interest group.

As I indicated in my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 4 November 1986 at columns 402-403, we have asked health authorities to ensure that by the end of 1988 more suitable alternatives are available so that no mentally handicapped child receiving long-term care is required to live in a large mental handicap hospital. All the replies received to my noble Friend's letter of 17 February have been taken into account in deciding what further action is necessary and my noble Friend will soon be meeting representatives of organisations concerned with provision for mentally handicapped children. A copy of the information paper for the meeting will be placed in the Library and sent to all those concerned. I would also draw the hon. Member's attention to "The Law on Child Care and Family Services" (CM. 62) presented to Parliament by my right hon. Friend earlier this month, which discusses the local authority responsibilities for caring for children living away from home, including those in National Health Service establishments.

Wrightington Hospital

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital, Lancashire.

Mr. Hind asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of the children's ward at Wrightington hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The children's ward at Wrightington hospital will continue to treat in-patients and out-patients, as required, while proposed new facilities for children with juvenile arthritis are developed at the Royal Preston hospital. Hon. Members for Lancashire constituencies, including my hon. Friends the Members for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) and for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) have been sent copies of my letter of 27 January 1987 to Sir John Page, chairman of the north western regional health authority, on this matter. I am also placing a copy in the Library.

Board and Lodging

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants were living in ordinary board and lodging in Ipswich on the last convenient date when information was available; and how many of these are having to pay more for their accommodation than the upper ceiling laid down by the current regulations.

Mr. Major: Information on the number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit and living in ordinary board and lodging accommodation is not available for specific areas of the country. Information, drawn from special returns by local offices, on the number of claimants whose charge fell outside the ordinary board and lodging limit in the board and lodging area which includes Ipswich during the period April to July 1985 is available in a Department of Health and Social Security document "Supplementary Benefit Board and Lodging Allowances, Results of a Special Statistical Exercise (29 April—29 July 1985)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Mr. Weetch asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants living in ordinary board and lodging in Ipswich are 25 years of age or younger.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not collected by individual local offices and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Donald Cotterill

Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate when the decision of the adjudicating officer at the Department of Social Security mobility allowance unit will announce his decision in the case of Mr. Donald Cotterill of 3 Brownsfield road, Lichfield (Mobility Allowance No. 0316111).

Mr. Major: Mr. Cotterill was notified on 28 January that an award of mobility allowance has been made by the adjudication officer.

Consultants (Fees)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services further to his reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 19 November 1986, Official Report, columns 221-222, whether he will break down the expenditure on consultants' fees between the National Health Service and social services.

Mr. Major: The expenditure by the Department in 1984-85 and 1985-86, and the estimated expenditure for 1986-87, on fees and expenses for outside consultants is as follows:

£ million

| Year | Health matters | Social security matters |
|---|---|---|
| 1984-85 | ·911 | 6·689 |
| 1985-86 | 1·7 | 11·946 |
| 1986-87 | 4·525 | 12·437 |

The figures are approximate. In some cases expenditure on health/social security has been apportioned where consultants have been employed on both. The figures for health matters include social services consultancy. The figures for expenditure by individual health authorities have not been given as they are not kept centrally by the department.

Expenditure

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total public expenditure on health and personal social services in 1978-79; what it is in the current year and what is the projection for 1988-89, measured in real terms; and, in each case, what percentage of total public expenditure and of gross domestic product these figures represent.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mortality and Handicap (Statistics)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the perinatal mortality and handicap figures for 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and 1986 for England and Wales, the north-west region, Greater Manchester, the city of Salford and the Eccles constituency; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys does not produce statistics on handicap. Because of boundary changes, information for the Eccles constituency for 1985 can be produced only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Breast and Cervical Cancer

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements are made in the Eccles constituency, the city of Salford, the Greater Manchester and the north-west region for cervical cancer smear tests for women up to the age of 30 years, 30 to 40 years, 40 to 50 years, 50 to 60 years and over 60 years of age; if he will provide the figures for these tests and these age groups for 1970, 1975, 1980, 1985 and any later figures; what new proposals on these tests have been made by the North West health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider extending payments to general practitioners for cervical smears to include all women of the 25 to 35 years age group; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Item of service payments for cervical cancer screening are reserved for women in the priority group to give general practitioners an incentive to screen women over 35 who are still most at risk from cervical cancer and who may be more reluctant to come forward for a smear test than younger women. Women over 35 still contribute 94 per cent. of the deaths from cervical cancer. Payment for the screening of women under 35 is provided for in the generality of fees and allowances paid to general medical practitioners.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allocate funding for the Health Education Council to extend programmes designed to increase public awareness of the case for regular cervical and breast screening attendances.

Mrs. Currie: The Health Education Council produces a number of useful leaflets aimed at increasing public awareness of the importance of prevention and early detection of cancer. The Department and the HEC are discussing possible further action, but no additional funding is available in this financial year. The new Health Education Authority will be asked to consider this matter when deciding its priorities for 1987-88.

Disabled People (Expert Meeting)

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representation his Department will be sending to the European region expert meeting on the implementation of the world programme of action concerning disabled persons at the mid-point of the United Nations Decade of Disabled Persons which will take place in Ljubljana, Yugoslavia from 10 to 13 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Information about the meeting has just been received and we are now considering Departmental representation.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the percentages of severe weather payment claims dealt with by each benefit office by 24 January.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. Statistics on the number of exceptionally cold weather payments made and those refused are being maintained and will be published in due course.

"Pregnancy Book"

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department will be providing the Health Education Council with funds to supply audio-tapes of the "Pregnancy Book" in Asian languages to enable Asian women to benefit from this publication.

Mrs. Currie: The Department and the Health Education Council have been discussing the possibility of producing audio-tapes for this purpose, but no additional funding is available in this financial year. The new Health Education Authority will consider this project when deciding its priorities for 1987-88.

Hip Replacement

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the waiting times for hip joint replacements in each district health authority.

Mr. Newton: I am sorry I cannot give the right hon. Member the information that he seeks. The numbers in the central data sample are too small for reliable estimates to be made below regional level.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are being taken to reduce hospital waiting lists in the Bolton area.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Ativan

Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what information he as concerning the addictive qualities of the drug Ativan; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the banning of the drug Ativan;

(3) whether he has any plans to seek to ban or restrict the sale or use of the drug Ativan.

Mrs. Currie: Ativan is one of the brands of lorazepam, a benzodiazepine tranquilliser. Since 1964, the Committee on the Safety of Medicines has received 346 reports of adverse drug reactions, including three fatalities associated with the administration of lorazepam. Of the total reports, 24 relate to drug dependence and 29 to withdrawal syndrome. It is very important to note that a report does not necessarily indicate a causal relationship between a medicinal product and the reported reaction.

Representations have been received from a medically-qualified journalist calling for the drug to be banned. Lorazepam is an effective medicine for the treatment of anxiety but, like all benzodiazepines, it can cause dependence and withdrawl can be difficult. In common with all marketed medicinal products, the safety of lorazepam is monitored by the CSM, which is currently giving further consideration to the available information on the drug. When it has completed its deliberations we will consider in the light of its advice whether any regulatory action on the drug is necessary.

Psychiatric and Mental Handicap Hospitals, Epsom

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the plans for the 3,500 patients and 4,000 staff at the five psychiatric and mental handicap hospitals near Epsom; to whom these plans have so far been made known; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many beds in the National Health Service have been earmarked specifically for drug addicts in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: In-patient beds are not set aside specifically for the treatment of drug addicts and most people admitted for the treatment for drug misuse are treated in general psychiatric wards. The number of beds available in England in special in-patient units for the treatment of drug misuse during the years 1979-85 is given in the table.

| Year[1] | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 93 |
| 1980 | 100 |
| 1981 | 84 |
| 1982 | 84 |
| 1983 | 86 |
| 1984 | 84 |
| 1985 | 87 |

[1] As at 31 December

Leukaemia

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why the report by the Office of Population Census and Surveys on the alleged link between leukaemia and nuclear power stations has still not been published; and when he now expects to publish it.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Cash Limits

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any changes will be made to Department of Health and Social Security and Office of Population, Censuses and Surveys cash limits or running cost limits for 1986-87.

Mr. Lyell: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XV vote 5 will be increased by a net amount of £546,000 made up as follows:

Increased expenditure by Department of Employment in connection with the administration of the unemployment benefit service. (Offsetting reductions announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Paymaster General on 30 January 1987)

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 30 January 1987 | 1,000,000 |
| less | |
| (1) a proportion recoverable from the NI Fund | 360,000 |
| (2) a transfer to OPCS | 94,000 |
| Net increase | 546,000 |

The cash limit on class XV vote 5 will, therefore, be increased by £546,000 from £1,173,868,000 announced on 6 November 1986 at c.601-602, to £1,174,414,000. Of this the transfer to OPCS represents a reduction in running costs. DHSS gross running cost limit will accordingly be reduced by £94,000 from £1,820,040,000 also announced on 6 November 1986 at c.601-602, to £1,819,946,000. The OPCS gross running cost limit for class XX vote 19 will be correspondingly increased by £94,000 from £30,636,000 to £30,730,000 reflecting increased expenditure by OPCS on services provided to DHSS. There is no overall increase in public expenditure or gross running costs as a result of these changes.

National Health Service (Beds)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how the reduction in the average daily number of National Health Service beds between 1979 and now is distributed (a) by region and (b) by each district health authority.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 21 January 1987, c. 623]: The information requested is given in the table. Between 1979 and 1985 the total number of in-patient cases rose by 17·7 per cent. from 5,400,120 to 6,353,812. Many of the bed reductions are in mental illness and mental handicap as a result of the push for community care.

Meningitis

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the total number of diagnosed cases of meningitis which have occurred in each of the last three years; and how many of this number were found in the eastern regional health authority area for each of these years.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 February 1987]: Figures are not available in the precise form requested, but the notifications of acute meningitis recevied were as follows:

| | England and Wales | East Anglian RHA |
|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 1,230 | 38 |
| 1985 | [1]1,531 | [1]61 |
| 1986 | [1]2,161 | [1]50 |

[1] provisional figures.

The term acute meningitis includes meningococcal, pneumococcal, influenzal (haemophilus influenzae) and viral meningitis, as well as other specified and unspecified forms of the disease. The incidence of meningitis has changed quite sharply from year to year, both increases and decreases, in recent years, for no discernible reason.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the broad conclusions to be drawn from the occupational mortality decennial supplement published in July 1986; whether figures for mortality by social class will be given in the 1991 supplement; and in what document information about infant mortality by social class is published.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 February 1987]: The main conclusions of "Occupational Mortality decennial supplement 1979-80, 1982-83" are given in chapters 6, 7 and 8 of "Part I commentary" of the material published on 30 July 1986. Copies of this volume, together with "Part II microfiche tables" which contains some 22,000 pages of results are in the Library.

Decisions on the scope and content of any 1991 decennial supplement have not been taken.

Information on infant mortality by social class for legitimate births only is published routinely in "Mortality Statistics perinatal and infant: social and biological factors. Series DH3" tables 5, 7 and 18, copies of which are also in the Library. A further publication in the decennial supplement series on childhood mortality, including infant mortality, is in preparation.

Perivale Hospital

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, what is his estimate of the value of the Perivale hospital and its associated buildings, separate from the land attached to it; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 February 1987]: Based on information received from the district valuer reflecting the agreed sale to Ealing council the figure is as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Sale value of site agreed with Ealing council | 6·19 |
| DV's value of land to be retained for NHS use | 1·25 |
| Value of whole site | 7·44 |
| Less Sale value of first parcel of vacant land to Ealing council | 3·50 |
| Value of site occupied by the existing hospital and associated buildings | 3·94 |

EMPLOYMENT

Job Clubs

11. Mr. Canavan asked the Paymaster General what has been the success rate of job club participants in finding jobs.

13. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Paymaster General how many claimants have been assisted into work by job clubs.

Mr. Lee: Since April 1986, 8,581 people (60 per cent.) have left job clubs to go into work. A further 1,871 people (13 per cent.) have found temporary work on the community programme, taken up training or joined the enterprise allowance scheme. The figures are for all job club members of whom 95 per cent. are estimated to be claiming benefits.

14. Miss Maynard asked the Paymaster General how many job clubs have been set up; how many are in operation; how many are run by Manpower Services Commission staff; and how many by voluntary organisations.

64. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Paymaster General how many job clubs have been set up; how many are currently in operation; how many are run by Manpower Services Commission staff; and how many are run by voluntary organisations.

Mr. Lee: On 26 January 1987 342 job clubs had been set up and were operational. All are run by Manpower Services Commission staff.

57. Mr. Clelland asked the Paymaster General how many claimants have been referred to job clubs; and what is the average length of stay.

Mr. Lee: There is no record of the number of people referred. However since April 1986, 14,200 people have passed through job clubs. A recent survey found that the average length of stay was between four and five weeks.

These figures apply to all job club members of whom 95 per cent. are estimated to be claiming benefits.

Labour Statistics

15. Mr. Ron Brown asked the Paymaster General how many young people under the age of 25 years are currently unemployed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, the number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 in the United Kingdom was 1,145,500.

16. Mr. Harry Greenway asked the Paymaster General what was the number of employable people at the last recorded date; what was the comparable figure 10 years ago; what is his projected figure for 1988; and if he will make a statement.

The number of people of working age, that is between the minimum school leaving age and the state retirement age, is estimated to have been 33·7 million in 1985. This compares with a figure of 31·8 million in 1975 and a projection of 34·2 million for 1988.

Information is also available on the number of people in the civilian labour force—in employment or seeking work. This is estimated to have been 26·6 million in 1985, compared with 25·3 million in 1975 and a projection of 27·2 million for 1988.

30. Mr. Hunter asked the Paymaster General what are the latest unemployment figures for the Basingstoke travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: On 11 December 1986 the number of unemployed claimants in the Basingstoke and Alton travel-to-work area was 3,836.

59. Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many men aged between 60 and 65 years are now at work.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated from the labour force survey conducted in the spring of 1985 that, at that time, there were 718,000 men aged 60 and under 65 in paid employment, in Great Britain.

78. Mr. James Lamond asked the Paymaster General how many people have been unemployed for more than 12 months at the latest available date; and what percentage of the total unemployed this represents.

Mr. Lee: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by duration is available, the number of claimants in the United Kingdom who had been unemployed for over 12 months was 1,340,985 which represents 41·4 per cent. of the total.

Mr. Watts asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the latest trend of unemployment.

Mr. Lee: The current trend in the unemployment series is a fall of the order of 20,000 a month. The seasonally adjusted level of adult unemployment has fallen on average by 17,200 a month over the past six months to December, and by 25,400 a month over the past three months.

Skillcentres

17. Ms. Richardson asked the Paymaster General, following the closure of the Deptford skillcentre's women into manual skills course, how many women into manual skills courses, which provide creche facilities, now exist in England and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: Courses which introduce women to manual skills may be mounted by local education authorities as part of their further education provision and by other training providers, but information about numbers and access to creche facilities is not collated centrally. The three courses currently run in MSC skillcentres in England and Wales do not have creche facilities. The course which was run at Deptford skillcentre and recently transferred to a local technical college continues to have access to local authority funded creche facilities.

Adult Training

18. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the adult training strategy.

67. Mr. Sheerman asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the adult training strategy.

Mr. Trippier: During 1986 the Manpower Services Commission has continued to progress the adult training strategy in three main ways. First, through promoting more positive attitudes to training and awareness of the means for taking action. Secondly, through projects to enhance the effectiveness of the training infrastructure and systems, and thirdly through programmes to make an immediate contribution to the supply of skills in current and future demand.

Job Creation

19. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General what are the latest figures for the percentage of the jobs created since 1983 which are part-time or temporary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Analysis of the 1983 and 1985 labour force surveys suggests that about 55 per cent. of the net increase in the number of persons in employment in Great Britain between spring 1983 and 1985 occurred among those in part-time or temporary employment.

28. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Paymaster General how many young people under the age of 25 years have been placed on job creation schemes in the London borough of Newham in the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: The available information for the year ending December 1986 is as follows: community programme: 1,415 people were placed into the community programme in Newham by the Manpower Services Commission's employment and enterprise group jobcentres. Survey information suggests that just under 60 per cent. of those taking part in the programme in the London area were under 25.

Community industry: 176 young people took part in community industry in the Newham and Tower Hamlets area during the same period.

Young workers and new workers scheme: In the area covered by the Manpower Services Commission's vocational education and training group's London north east area office, which includes Newham, 983 young people were accepted for support under the young workers and new workers schemes.

34. Mr. Hirst asked the Paymaster General what is his most recent estimate of the net number of new jobs created since June 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1983 and September 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available) there was a net increase of 1,079,000 in the employed labour force in Great Britain.

Tourism and Leisure

20. Mr. Gale asked the Paymaster General how many people are now employed in activities underpinning tourism and leisure.

Mr. Trippier: There were 1·3 million employees in September 1986 in the tourism-related industries (for example hotels, catering, sports and other recreational services) which serve the needs of tourism and leisure.

72. Mr. Alexander asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate how much employment in tourism and leisure has grown since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the number of employees in those sectors which most directly serve tourists (hotels and catering, and leisure services) showed an increase of 147,000 to just over 1·3 million between September 1979 and September 1986.

Restart Scheme

21. Mr. Evennett asked the Paymaster General whether he will make a statement on the operation of the restart scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. I am thoroughly satisfied with the operation of the national restart programme to help those unemployed for 12 months or over. I am impressed with the dedicated work of the Manpower Services Commission staff who have already interviewed 779,051 people who have been unemployed for over a year and have made a worthwhile offer that might lead to employment to around 90 per cent. of them. That is why my right hon. and noble Friend and I announced that the programme would be extended to provide interviews for those reaching six months' unemployment and, thereafter, at regular six-monthly intervals for at least the first three years of unemployment.

25. Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Paymaster General how many referrals to adjudication officers there have been from restart counsellors since October.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No one can lose their benefit entitlements solely as a result of the restart programme. Under long-standing legal rules, people can lose their entitlement to benefit if they fail to attend an interview, are no available for work or refuse an offer of suitable employment.

The information available is not in the exact from requested, but between 10 October and 11 December 1986 (the lastest date for which figures are available), restart teams referred to unemployment benefit offices 21,454 cases of claimants who failed to attend restart counselling interviews; 8,057 cases where a doubt about availability for work had been indentified and 153 cases where claimants had refused suitable employment.

During the same period independent adjudication officers actually disallowed benefit in the cases of 9,506 claimants who failed to attend ther restart interview; 644 claimants considered not available for work and 42 claimants who had refused suitable employment.

31. Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General under the restart programme, how many people have been called to interview, and how many have been interviewed and how many were placed into (a) jobs, (b) the community programme, (c) job clubs, (d) enterprise allowance scheme, (e) the job training scheme, (f) restart courses and (g) voluntary work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: By 8 January 1,032,340 people had been called for interview and 779,051 people had been counselled under restart. 165,514 subsequently ceased to claim benefit as unemployed but we have no means of knowing how many of these found jobs or training places. If the hon. Members question is referring to the immediate outcome of the interviews then the figures were:

—5,478 were placed directly into jobs.

—19,916 were placed directly on the Community Programme.

—6,489 were placed in jobclubs of whom most would subsequently move into jobs.

—1,760 were placed directly on the Enterprise Allowance Scheme and so became self-employed.

—12,598 started training (of whom 188 were placed specifically on the new Job Training Scheme in the pilot areas).

66,968 started Restart courses and many of those would subsequently go on to employment and training.

—1,375 joined the Voluntary Projects Programme or began other Voluntary work.

— Many others were referred to other MSC programmes and services.

The above figures for "placings" reflect only those arising directly from referrals made at the time of the restart interview. They do not reflect people who later find jobs, or other solutions of their unemployment, wholly or partly as a result of advice given by counselling staff or Restart courses. The Manpower Services Commission does not follow the progress of individuals once they have been counselled under restart.

70. Mr. Deakins asked the Paymaster General how many claimants have left the register during the period in which restart has been running.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 10 July 1986 and 11 December 1986, the estimated number of claimants in Great Britain who ceased to claim benefit as unemployed was 2,172,740.

People are constantly leaving unemployment for a variety of reasons, including finding work or training with or without the assistance offered by the restart programme, which applies to long-term unemployed people only.

52. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the role of the restart programme in adult training.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The restart programme offers counselling interviews at which long term unemployed people are helped to identify possible ways of getting back to work including suitable training opportunities. By 8 January over 96,000 people had been referred to training courses.

The restart interview after six months of unemployment, which I announced to the House on 28 January, will be the normal route into the new job training scheme.

Training Levy

22. Mr. Stern asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to seek to introduce a compulsory training levy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. Such a levy would increase the burdens on industry, cause job losses and offer no guarantee of more effective training.

Management Training

23. Mr. Tom Clarke asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on management training in British industry.

Mr. Trippier: Effective management training is an essential element in ensuring the competitiveness of British industry. Employers have the primary responsibility for training and developing their own managers. However, the Manpower Services Commission has a key role to play in helping to achieve improvements—particularly in small businesses. Two major studies on the future of management training will be published during 1987, and we will consider whether, in the light of their recommendations, we should take further action.

Manufacturing Industry

24. Mr. Dixon asked the Paymaster General what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs in the northern region since June 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between June 1979 and June 1986, there was a net decrease of 140,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in the northern region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufactures' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

65. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Paymaster General what was the net loss or gain of manufacturing jobs in Britain and the north-west region, respectively, in 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between September 1985 and September 1986 (the latest date for which regional figures are available) there was a net decrease of 142,000 in the numbers of employees in employment in manufacturing in Great Britain. Over the same period there was a net decrease of 21,000 in the north-west region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufactures' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

66. Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many jobs in manufacturing have been lost in the United Kingdom since 1979; and what information he has as to how many have been lost in the rest of the European Economic community 10.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department does not produce statistics about job gains and job losses but an indication of the net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employment at different dates. Between June 1979 and September 1986 there was a net decrease of 1,951 thousand in the number of employees in employment and self-employed in manufacturing industries in the United Kingdom. Some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufactures' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

The latest information for the rest of the European Community 10 (excluding Luxembourg and Greece for which there are no comparable figures) shows that between 1979 and 1984 manufacturing employment fell about 2,250,000. However international comparisons should always be made cautiously because of differences in methodology.

75. Mr. Eastham asked the Paymaster General what was the net loss in manufacturing jobs in the north-west region since June 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between 1979 and June 1986, there was a net decrease of 337,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in the north-west region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufactures' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

YTS

26. Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General what special provision is made by the Manpower Services Commission to enable trainees in remote areas of the United Kingdom to participate fully in YTS off-the-job training courses.

Mr. Trippier: YTS is intended to be mainly a locally based scheme. Where trainees necessarily incur travel or lodging costs. There is provision for managing agents to make the appropriate payments to trainees and claim reimbursement from the Manpower Services Commission.

39. Mr. Nelli[illegible] asked the Paymaster General when the level of [illegible]ance for participants of youth training schemes will next be increased.

Mr. Trippier: The YTS allowance for first year trainees will increase from £27.30 to £28.50 per week from 6 April 1987. There are no plans at present for further increases in the YTS allowance.

47. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Paymaster General whether he will estimate how many places in hotels, travel, and catering the Manpower Services Commissions youth training scheme provided in 1986.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available as the Manpower Services Commission's management information system is not currently collecting YTS statistics by occupation.

YTS does however, make a significant contribution to training in tourism related industries, and at the end of 1985 was providing around 11,000 places in hotel and catering and the travel trade.

62. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Paymaster General what training has been given to Manpower Services Commission staff employed as programme managers and programme assessors at the area offices to enable them to carry out the monitoring role required by the two year YTS.

Mr. Trippier: Staff of the Manpower Services Commission receive a comprehensive range of training designed to equip them with the necessary knowledge and skills to operate effectively.

Staff involved in monitoring YTS undertake a six month training programme linked to individual training needs.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Paymaster General how many people are presently engaged in the YTS in Britain.

Mr. Trippier: On 31 December 1986 there were around 340,000 young people in training on YTS schemes throughout Great Britain.

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress of the YTS in the Altrincham and Sale area with regard to the one-year and two-year schemes.

Mr. Trippier: I am very pleased with the progress on YTS. Nationally over 1 million young people have joined the youth training scheme since it was introduced in April 1983 and in Altrincham and Sale the position is equally encouraging. Nearly 1,200 joined the one-year youth training scheme in 1985-86 and already over 1,300 have joined YTS since April 1986.

Further, of those who left YTS schemes between April 1985 and March 1986 in Trafford local authority district, which contains Altrincham and Sale, 57 per cent. were in work and 69 per cent. were in either work or further education-training, three months after leaving.

In addition, over 3,000 organisations nationally have applied for approved training organisations status including all 16 organisations currently delivering YTS in the Altrincham and Sale area.

All this demonstrates not only the success of the two-year programme, building on the achievements of the one-year youth training scheme, but also the willingness of employers to play their part, and the benefits to young people of YTS.

Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently working (a) in his Department, (b) in the Manpower Services Commission and (c) in his Department's other associated public bodies and agencies under the aegis of the YTS programme.

Mr. Trippier: There are none at present in the Department of Employment Group. However, the Department of Employment and the Manpower Services Commission propose to introduce a YTS scheme this Easter in which initially there will be places for 120 clerical trainees in four different parts of the country.

Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently working for British Rail under the YTS programme.

Mr. Trippier: At 28 January 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1,387 young people in training on YTS with British Rail.

Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently working in the water industry under the YTS programme.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information requested is not available as the Manpower Services Commission's management information system is not currently collecting YTS statistics by industry classification.

Mr. Favell asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently working in (a) the coal industry and (b) the electrical supply industry under the YTS programme.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that information is not available in precisely the form requested because the Manpower Services Commissions management information system is no currently collecting YTS statistics by industry classification.

However, at 31 December 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 89 young people in training on YTS with British Coal.

At 14 January 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 1,324 young people in training on YTS with Central Electricity Generating Board.

Tourism

27. Mr. Porter asked the Paymaster General what action is proposed to encourage tourism from the far east to come to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: Earnings from far east visitors increased by 10·5 per cent. in the first half of 1986. Although there was a slight decrease of 0·9 per cent. in visitor numbers, compared to the same months in 1985. The British Tourist Authority offices in Tokyo, Singapore, and Hong Kong will continue to promote the United Kingdom as a tourist destination both for holiday makers and business visitors.

33. Mr. Roger King asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the contribution likely to be made to employment in tourism by the tourism and the community programme.

55. Mr. Gregory asked the Paymaster General if he will outline the tourism projects with which the community programme will be primarily concerned.

Mr. Trippier: The latest estimate is that there are 724 community programme projects providing almost 16,000 jobs which are directly related to providing tourism. In addition, many other projects and jobs within the Community programme contribute indirectly. Our recently launched tourism and the community programme national initiative aims to provide 2,500 jobs within the programme on projects which provide tourist information and improve coastal resorts and other areas. Projects in partnership with the private sector will also be developed.

35. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the present proportion of European Community regional aid devoted to tourism projects in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The European regional development fund has been used to support a wide range of public expenditure in the United Kingdom much of which has been of both direct and indirect benefit to tourism. The Government are satisfied that the United Kingdom is making the fullest possible use of opportunities to assist tourism under the ERDF.

41. Mr. Weetch asked the Paymaster General how many jobs he estimates will be created by tourism in 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Future development levels depend on many factors, some of which are difficult to predict. In recent years, there has been a substantial growth in the number of employees in those industries which most directly serve tourists (up by 100,000 in the hotel, catering and leisure and recreational services sectors between September 1984 and September 1986).

If long-term trends in tourism continue, I would expect to see further growth in 1987 in employment in the sectors serving tourists.

48. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Paymaster General what action is proposed to encourage tourists from Europe to visit the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The number of visitors to the United Kingdom from western Europe rose by 3 per cent. in the first 10 months of last year, compared to the same months in 1985. The British Tourist Authority has 11 offices in major European cities, and will continue to promote the attractions of the United Kingdom to both holidaymakers and business visitors.

Earnings

29. Mr. Caborn asked the Paymaster General what was the average percentage increase in earnings among the top and bottom 10 per cent. of workers in Britain in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between April 1985 and April 1986 the highest decile of the weekly earnings distribution for full-time adult employees in Great Britain increased by 8·3 per cent. for men and by 10·7 per cent. for women. Over the same period the lowest decile increased by 6·0 per cent. for men and by 6·1 per cent. for women.

Job Training Scheme

32. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Paymaster General what indications he has so far received from the pilot areas concerning the progress of the job training scheme.

46. Mr. Madel asked the Paymaster General when he expects to extend the new job training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Member to my statement on 28 January 1987 at columns 337-54.

36. Mr. Ashley asked the Paymaster General what are the training allowances paid to job training scheme participants.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on 26 January at columns 30-31.

40. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General how many 18 to 25-year-olds and how many persons aged 25 years and over are enrolled on the job training scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of the 1,203 starts on the new job training scheme to 30 January, 53 per cent. (638) are under 25 and 47 per cent. (565) are over 25.

58. Mr. O'Brien asked the Paymaster General how many people are enrolled on the job training scheme in the 10 pilot areas; and what is the expected number of filled places at the end of March 1987.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 26 January, 1,008 people were taking part in the new job training scheme pilots. At present about 150 people are joining new JTS every week.

We have asked the Manpower Services Commission to expand the scheme nationally and to seek to provide 110,000 places by September 1987.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many entrants and filled places there were to the new job training scheme in each of the nine pilot areas at 6 January and the most recently available date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Figures are not available for 6 January. Those for week ending 9 January and week ending 23 January are as follows:

| | 9 JanuaryEntrants | On Scheme | 23 JanuaryEntrants | On Scheme |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Dundee | 51 | 49 | 110 | 100 |
| Billingham | 57 | 39 | 70 | 51 |
| Huddersfield | 69 | 54 | 83 | 68 |
| Stoke | 104 | 99 | 129 | 116 |
| Port Talbot | 100 | 85 | 128 | 98 |
| Plymouth | 128 | 104 | 199 | 153 |
| Crawley | 72 | 61 | 76 | 65 |
| Ealing | 18 | 16 | 4032 | |
| In addition a further pilot started in Leicester on 12 January | | | 34 | 33 |

Mr. Wainwright asked the Paymaster General how many formerly unemployed persons have been placed with employers under the job training scheme pilot project in Huddersfield; and how many of these were still employed under the scheme at the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All participants in the job training scheme pilots were previously unemployed for six months or more. On 30 January, the latest date for which information is available, practical training on employers' premises have been received by 63 participants on the Huddersfield pilot. Of these only one has left the scheme so far.

Young People (Training)

37. Mr. Lawler asked the Paymaster General what is the proportion of young people receiving training (a) now and (b) at a comparable date in 1983.

Mr. Trippier: At the end of January 1986 the latest date for which such an analysis is available a total of 265,000 16 and 17-year-olds had entered YTS which is 15·3 per cent. of those young people in the population. The comparable figure entering YOP and YTS in spring 1983 was 122,523 which is 6·7 per cent. of those 16 and 17-year-olds in the population.

West Midlands

38. Miss Boothroyd asked the Paymaster General what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs in the west midlands region since 1979.

79. Mr. Park asked the Paymaster General what has been the net loss in manufacturing jobs in the west midlands since June 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between June 1979 and June 1986, there was a net decrease of 282,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in the west midlands region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by subcontractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

"Hands across Britain"

42. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Paymaster General what assessment he has made of the effect the "Hands across Britain" campaign will have on the level of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lee: A precise assessment of the effect on unemployment of the "Hands across Britain" campaign would not be possible. The campaign may help to draw employers' attention to the talents available among unemployed people. We believe that the policies followed by the Government are the best way to encourage growth and the generation of the new jobs.

Household Bleach

43. Mr. Terry Fields asked the Paymaster General if the Government will now reconsider their decision not to include household bleach in the classification packaging and labelling of dangerous substances regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The provisions of the Classification, Packaging and Labelling of Dangerous Substances Regulations 1984 apply to household bleaches in concentrations at which they are dangerous.

Job Seekers (Mobility)

44. Mr. Martin asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement concerning the record of Government schemes to help the unemployed move in order to find jobs.

Mr. Lee: During the year ended 31 March 1986 3,300 unemployed people were helped by the employment transfer scheme and a further 11,350 received free forward fares to enable them to take up new jobs. Both these schemes were abolished from April 1986 because they were found not to be cost effective either in reducing unemployment or in helping employers fill vacancies. From June 1986 the job search scheme which assisted about 4,000 people a year with the cost of attending job interviews in other areas was replaced by the travel to interview scheme which has fewer and simpler eligibility rules and therefore helps four or five times as many people.

Skill Shortages

45. Mr. Fatchett asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the engineering industry.

Mr. Trippier: I am disappointed that, despite a statutory training levy, problems in fully meeting the skill needs of the industry are still occurring. My right hon. and learned Friend announced last week a major new initiative to help in the task of re-skilling Britain.

Small Businesses

49. Mr. MacKenzie asked the Paymaster General what action he proposes to take to assist small and medium-sized businesses in the course of the next year.

Mr. Trippier: Small businesses will continue to benefit from the steady expansion of the economy and the favourable climate that now exists for businesses of all sizes in this country. We shall maintain our efforts to reduce the administrative burden that is imposed on businesses. Amongst the specific assistance to small businesses for which my Department is responsible:

- The enterprise allowance scheme which is the main Government measure to encourage unemployed people to start their own business will be expanded for 1987-88 to allow 102,500 people to take advantage of its support in starting their own businesses.

- Up to £2 million will be provided to the Prince's Youth Business Trust in 1987-88 to assist young people starting businesses.
- The Department will continue to encourage the provision of training for small business men and women. The Manpower Services Commission's training for enterprise budget has increased from £11·6 million in 1985-86 to £18·8 million in 1986-87 and the number of training places from 19,700 in 1985-86 to 46,300 in 1986-87.
- The small firms service will make its information database available to other support agencies.
- The small firms development service, which provides guidance and counselling for established small and medium sized businesses with growth and development potential will be expanded.
- Links between the small firms service and local enterprise agencies will be strengthened.
- The local enterprise agency grant scheme will be continued with a further £2·5 million.
- Support for the Co-operative Development Agency will be maintained.

Manufacturing (Yorkshire and Humberside)

50. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Paymaster General what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs in Yorkshire and Humberside since June 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between June 1979 and June 1986, there was a net decrease of 248,000 employees in employment in manufacturing and industries in the Yorkshire and Humberside region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufactures' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

British Telecom (Dispute)

51. Mr. Adley asked the Paymaster General if he has any plans to meet the employers and union leaders involved in the British Telecom dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no such plans. I regret that the National Communications Union has decided to take industrial action and I hope that negotiations between management and the union can be pursued urgently to bring the dispute to an end.

Construction Industry

53. Mr. Litherland asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on skill shortages in the construction industry.

Mr. Trippier: I am disappointed that, despite a statutory training levy, problems in fully meeting the skill needs of the industry are still occurring. My right hon. and learned Friend announced last week a major new initiative to help in the task of re-skilling Britain.

Tied Accommodation

54. Mr. Livsey asked the Paymaster General if he will publish figures for the number of people working in the public sector who live in tied accommodation as a condition of their employment.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Manufacturing Jobs

56. Mr. Parry asked the Paymaster General what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs on Merseyside since June 1979.

The available figures are from the June 1978 and the September 1981 censuses of employment. In that period there was a net loss of 45,600 employees employed in manufacturing industries as defined according to the standard industrial classification 1968 in the county of Merseyside. The September 1984 census estimates for counties are not yet available. Between censuses, employment statistics are based on small scale sample enquiries which cannot produce reliable results for areas smaller than the standard economic regions.

Employment Creation Programmes

60. Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General what funds he proposes to allocate to each of the Government's employment creation programmes in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Details of planned provision for my Department's enterprise and job creation, labour market efficiency and employment measures programmes are contained in chapter 3.7 of "The Governments Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90 Volume II" (Cm. 56-II) a copy of which is in the Library. On 28 January I announced a further expansion of certain programmes which will increase my Department's total provision beyond what shown in Cm. 56-II, without adding to total public expenditure. A detailed breakdown of the new total expenditure will be contained in Class VII of the Government's expenditure estimates, to be published on March 17.

Inner City Task Forces

61. Mr. Spencer asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the most recent progress of the inner city task forces.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The task forces set up in eight small inner city areas under the inner cities initiative are making substantial progress. This initiative aims to experiment with new projects and policies in inner city areas and achievements to date are many and varied.

Some 63 projects, involving around £2·5 million of earmarked task force funds have been approved for support, and the task forces are ensuring that existing Government resources from many other Government programmes are targeted more effectively on their areas.

A particular aim of the initiative is to encourage job creation and enterprise. A large number of projects address this aim. I am supporting small businesses, including those owned by ethnic minorities through inner city based enterprise agencies in Birmingham and Bristol, and intend to promote similar agencies in the other areas.

I have recently announced our intention to establish special Development Funds, each set up in partnership with a major clearing bank, to help small businesses in the eight areas to gain more ready access to the finance they need. The first two such funds have been launched in Bristol (with the National Westminster bank) and Leeds (with the Yorkshire bank). Funds in the remaining areas will, I anticipate, be set up soon.

I have given a grant of £150,000 to the Cleveland youth enterprise centre to support its work in inner city Middlesbrough.

I have contributed £77,000 to support the headstart programme, under which, in collaboration with the Industrial Society and the Manpower Services Commission, we will give access to business training to 3,000 inner city youngsters in most of the eight areas.

I also announced in October a new arrangement in co-operation with the Association of British Insurers, to help businesses in the eight areas overcome difficulties in arranging insurance.

I am also giving support to projects to improve the employability of inner city residents. This includes:

> a grant of £93,000 to PATH in Leeds to provide high quality vocational training in banks, building societies and insurance companies mainly for young people from ethnic minorities;
>
> a grant of £55,000 to Handsworth Technical College to convert and equip a workshop to provide a base for skill training in personal services such as hairdressing, beauty therapy, food preparation and retailing;
>
> a grant of £325,000 over two years to allow the Association of Marine and Related Charities (AMARC) to expand their training agency in Middlesbrough, creating over 250 new training places in a range of technical skills;
>
> £42,000 to South East Training, North Peckham towards setting up a 100 place training scheme which provides employed-based, customised training in a number of skills, reflecting job opportunities in the travel to work areas.

I have approved a grant of £47,000 to an opportunities industrialisation centre (UK) project in Handsworth, a United States-bred scheme which aims to reintegrate young people through a programme of training, outreach, placement and continuity of support involving over 300 clients every year.

In addition we are developing innovative targeted training schemes such as one for the new Copthorne hotel in Birmingham. Sixty young people from in and around Handsworth will be given training over a four-week period in hotel and catering skills at the City of Birmingham College of Food abd Domestic Art. The Copthorne hotel has agreed to interview all those completing the course with a view to offering them jobs.

A major theme in all the task force areas is the need to ensure that future urban development projects in inner cities provide work opportunities and skill training for local people. At the end of November I announced an important and experimental scheme in Handsworth, under which local people will be employed by a major contractor (Tarmac) to refurbish a street of run-down Victorian houses at a total cost of £1·5 million. Local sub-contractors will employ and train local people to do the bulk of the work. We intend to develop this approach with other building and refurbishment work in other Task Force areas.

This is an interdepartmental initiative, and task forces are receiving support and co-operation from other Departments and agencies. I am pleased that the Manpower Services Commission is working with us to ensure that its programmes are better targetted to the needs of the eight areas, and the people living in them.

Additional community programme places have been made available to the task forces and we are currently aiming to fill many of them through private-sector led schemes with the accent on the construction industry. In addition task forces are participating in a pilot to encourage suitable CP schemes to turn themselves into viable independent businesses.

The advances and achievements the initiative has made to date have only been possible with the co-operation of the public and private sector, the voluntary organisations and local communities. I am pleased to say that most task forces have received wholehearted support from all groups in their areas. I hope that in areas where co-operation has been less forthcoming. The local authorities and community groups concerned will now work with the task forces to join with us in reversing economic decline in the inner city and providing lasting benefits for the residents.

Jobcentres

63. Mr. Garrett asked the Paymaster General how many staff are employed in jobcentres; and what are the planned totals for March 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Lee: Statistics on the allocation of staff are maintained by programme rather than location. In March 1987, there will be 9,835 people employed, mainly in jobcentres, on programmes which cover the principal jobcentre activities, including helping long-term unemployed people through jobclubs and the restart programme. The comparable planning figure for 1988 and 1989 is 10,318 in each year.

Area Manpower Boards

68. Mr. Freud asked the Paymaster General how many members of the area manpower boards who took up their appointments last year were registered unemployed.

Mr. Trippier: I regret that the information is not available.

Training Schemes

69. Mr. Flannery asked the Paymaster General how many people who would otherwise have been claimants for unemployment benefit have been engaged on Government training schemes in each successive year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: Since 1979 the numbers of young people in training on YTS are as follows:

For The Financial Year

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 100,700 |
| 1980-81 | 160,900 |
| 1981-82 | 226,100 |
| 1982-83 | 257,942 |
| 1983-84 | 287,485 |
| 1984-85 | 286,830 |
| 1985-86 | 283,391 |

Some of these trainees may have had employee status and it cannot be assumed that they were all unemployed.

Since 1979 the numbers of people on Training Opportunities Schemes were as follows:

For The Financial Year

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 90,700 |
| 1980-81 | 82,600 |
| 1981-82 | 71,200 |
| 1982-83 | 72,600 |
| 1983-84 | 80,100 |
| 1984-85 | 87,200 |

The vast majority of these people were unemployed but it cannot be assumed that if they were not an a TOPS course they would otherwise have claimed unemployment benefit. During the 1985-86 financial year there were 210,900 adult training starts, approximately 67,700 of this total were unemployed.

The forecast starts for adult training in 1986-87 were 327,900 with approximately 153,900 unemployed.

Tourism (Israel)

71. Mr. Butterfill asked the Paymaster General whether he has any proposals to encourage the flow of tourism between Britain and Israel.

Mr. Trippier: I recently visited Israel and discussed with the Israeli Minister for tourism a number of initiatives to improve the flow of tourism between our two countries. We have agreed to hold an "Israeli week" in the United Kingdom later this year to promote Israel as a winter holiday destination and Israel will hold a British week in October-November to promote travel to the United Kingdom. The British Tourist Authority and the Israeli Tourism Ministry are to hold joint promotions in the USA during March-April to encourage United States tour operators organising trips to Israel to incorporate a visit to the United Kingdom and vice versa. I also made representations to the Israeli Government on a number of issues of concern to the British tourism industry and in particular fiscal measures which restrict outward travel from Israel.

An invitation has been extended to the Israeli Minister for Tourism to visit Britain later in the year when he will have the opportunity to visit tourist attractions in all regions of the country.

East Midlands

74. Mr. Haynes asked the Paymaster General what was the net loss of manufacturing jobs in the east midlands since June 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Between June 1979 and June 1986, there was a net decrease of 109,000 employees in employment in manufacturing industries in the east midlands region.

However, some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the decline of manufacturing employment.

Employment Creation (EC Funds)

76. Mrs. Shields asked the Paymaster General what cash has been received in the past 12 months from European Community funds to assist in creating new employment, and new opportunities; and how these moneys have been disbursed.

Mr. Lee: Allocations from the European social fund for projects taking place in 1987 have yet to be made by the European Commission. During the calendar year 1986 new allocations totalling some £34 million were approved under the European social fund for projects in the United Kingdom taking place in 1986 specifically related to employment creation. In addition, a further £246 million was approved for other, mainly training, projects in the United Kingdom which also helped to create new employment opportunities. European social fund funds are paid to the sponsors of the particular projects for which assistance is sought. Apart from social fund support, the United Kingdom also receives considerable assistance under the European regional development fund towards projects which help to increase overall employment opportunities.

Industrial Relations Legislation

77. Mr. Torney asked the Paymaster General when he next proposes to meet trades union leaders to discuss industrial relations legislation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no plans to do so at present.

Labour Mobility

80. Mr. Colvin asked the Paymaster General if he is satisfied with the mobility of labour in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The ability of unemployed (and employed) people to move to other labour markets is an important factor in reducing unemployment and eliminating skill shortages. It also helps to contribute to the flexibility of the labour market, which itself affects our ability to adapt and compete in an expanding and developing economy.

For these reasons the Government provide assistance aiming to help people to find out about jobs in other areas, to travel to job interviews in areas beyond daily travelling distance of their homes, and to move home to other areas. Some of this assistance is provided through the Manpower Services Commission and some through the Department of the Environment, with whom my officials keep in close touch. At the end of last year the Government announced two initiatives of particular relevance to people wanting to take up work in other parts of the country—a planned expansion of "shared ownership", using private finance, and a new scheme of rented housing for young job movers provided by Housing Associations.

Financial Services

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Paymaster General if he will identify the employment trends in the financial services industries since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The information is as follows:

Employees in Employment: Banking and Finance[1] in Great Britain

| | Number |
|---|---|
| June 1979 | 434,000 |
| June 1980 | 454,000 |

| | Number |
|---|---|
| June 1981 | 464,000 |
| June 1982 | 467,000 |
| June 1983 | 484,000 |
| June 1984 | 499,000 |
| June 1985 | 513,000 |
| June 1986 | 527,000 |

[1] Class 81 of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many jobs have been lost in manufacturing in London since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. My Department's statistics can give an indication of the net changes in employment by comparing levels of employment at different dates.

Separate figures for Greater London are not available for 1979. Between June 1978 and June 1986 there was a net decrease of 255,000 employees in employment in manufacturing in Greater London.

Some of the decrease in the figures for manufacturing industry will be the result of the re-classification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, catering, computer services and road haulage previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

New Workers Scheme

Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General what expenditure has been incurred on the new workers scheme since its inception; and what was the level of expenditure for the Government young workers scheme in a comparable period in 1985-86.

Mr. Lee: The new workers scheme opened to employers for jobs which started on or after 1 April 1986. Cumulative expenditure to the end of December last year was (provisionally) £2·2 million. Expenditure on the young workers scheme for the period April to December 1985 was some £22·4 million. These figures are not comparable in that they reflect the retrospective and cumulative nature of support under each scheme, one of which had been operating almost four years and the other only 10 months.

Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General how many young people in each travel-to-work area in Scotland have taken advantage of the new workers scheme in each travel-to-work area in Scotland in the year 1985-86.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

The new workers scheme was not announced until the Budget Statement of March 1986 and was therefore not available to young people during the financial year 1985-86. However, at the end of December 1986, there were a total of 2,317 young people in Scotland benefiting from the new workers scheme.

I regret that the information is not available on a travel-to-work area basis.

Manpower Services Commission

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General what regulations govern the outside business interests of individuals employed in the Manpower Services Commission or who sit as representatives on area manpower boards; and whether any business interests have to be declared.

Mr. Trippier: The regulations governing the outside business interests of individuals employed by the Manpower Services Commission are contained in Department of Employment Group Staff Memorandum 1: Staff Rules and Conditions of Service, which is issued to all staff employed within the Department of Employment Group including the Manpower Services Commission. It is a requirement that outside interests which do or could conflict with official business must be disclosed. I have placed a copy of this Memorandum in the Library.

Members of area manpower boards who have an interest in a particular project or scheme under discussion are required to declare that interest and refrain from voting on the issue. This requirement is contained in a guide on the work of area manpower boards which is given to all Board members. The rules governing declaration of interest are currently under review.

Radiation Exposure

Dr. David Clark asked the Paymaster General, further to his reply to the hon. Member for South Shields on 12 January, Official Report, column 53, concerning public levels of radiation exposure, whether maximum annual exposure of five millisieverts is the only recommendation or guidance given by Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in relation to a new nuclear power station; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987]: No. There is a general requirement for exposures to be kept as low as reasonably practicable. Assessors considering the design estimates for a new nuclear power station are given guidance on the assessment reference levels for radiation exposure to members of the public in a booklet "Safety Assessment Principles for Nuclear Power Reactors" published by the Health and Safety Executive. For normal operations the assessment level for any person outside the site boundary is a maximum at 0·17 mSv per annum.

A copy of the booklet has been placed in the Library.

Gas Supplies

Dr. Glyn asked the Paymaster General if he will introduce regulations to provide for a minimum depth at which gas mains pipes made of plastic may be laid under streets and pavements.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987]: The Health and Safety Executive is currently reviewing safety controls over the gas transmission and distribution system, including the standards to be applied.

Young Workers Scheme

Mr. Wallace asked the Paymaster General in respect of how many young people employers were given assistance under the Government's young workers scheme in each travel-to-work area in Scotland in the year 1985-86.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply.

The number of young people in Scotland to whom employers were providing assistance under the young workers scheme in 1985-86 was 7,101.

I regret the information is not available on a travel-to-work area basis.

ENVIRONMENT

Labour Mobility

84. Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are available to assist employers in the home counties to recruit and relocate persons from areas of high unemployment elsewhere.

Mr. John Patten: The Government are discussing with employers ways of meeting the difficulties which may arise because of regional house price differences. A new "job movers" scheme will allow housing associations to provide flat sharing, at relatively low rents, using a mixture of public and private sector finance. Priority in such schemes will be given to young single people moving to an area to take up employment. People wishing to move to the south-east and become home owners will be helped by provisions in the recent Housing and Planning Act which are designed to help make shared ownership schemes more widely available.

Rural Areas (Job Opportunities)

85. Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to increase job opportunities in rural areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's general strategy is designed to provide economic conditions conducive to the creation of employment opportunities in both urban and rural areas. In relation to rural areas in England, the Secretary of State is advised and assisted by the Development Commission and its agency, the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas. The Government have raised the Development Commission's grant-in-aid by about a fifth in real terms since 1983 in recognition of the part the commission plays in stimulating investment and creating jobs. For 1987-88 a further £2 million has been secured for the commission to further its role of encouraging and supporting the diversification of the rural economy. The commission also seeks increasingly to involve and encourage the private sector through support for local enterprise agencies, close co-operation with financial institutions and pump priming investment.

Local Authorities (Manpower)

86. Mr. Gerald Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people are currently employed by local authorities; and what was the comparable figure for 1978.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Local Authority employees in England at September

| | Number | Full Time Equivalents |
|---|---|---|
| 1986 | 2,398,732 | 1,894, 091 |
| 1978 | 2,440,653 | 1,947,432 |
| | per cent. | per cent. |
| Change 1978 to 1986 | −1·7 | −2·7 |

East Sussex

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the housing investment programme allocation for each district and borough council in East Sussex in each year since 1974, showing the annual percentage change in cash and real terms, using 1974 as the baseline;

(2) if he will show for each borough and district council in East Sussex expenditure in cash and real terms, respectively, for each year since 1974 on (a) new building, (b) modernisation, repairs and maintenance and (c) assistance to housing associations, trusts and co-operatives.

Mr. Tracey: Tables are being placed in the Library showing, for each authority in East Sussex, the housing investment programme allocations from 1978-79, the first year allocations were made, and the requested expenditure figures from 1974-75. Since 1981-82, authorities have been able to augment their HIP allocations by using the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why there has been further delay in the transfer of assets of Thamesmead from the London Residuary Body to Thamesmead Town Ltd; when the transfer is now expected to take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The terms and timing of this transfer are a matter for negotiation between the London Residuary Body and Thamesmead town. Negotiations have taken longer than expected and are still continuing in consultation with the Department. We wish to see the transfer take place as soon as possible and expect the parties shortly to agree a revised timetable for its completion.

Defective Housing (Removal Costs)

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with existing arrangements to deal with temporary removal costs incurred by PRC owners and local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: It is for the local authority to decide, in any particular case, whether costs of temporary accommodation during repair might be eligible for assistance, in accordance with the provisions of the housing defects legislation. The Department has given guidance on this to the local authority associations and will continue to monitor the position.

Pollution (North Sea)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest assessment of the state of pollution in the North sea; and what information he has about assessment by other Governments.

Mr. Waldegrave: An assessment of the state of pollution in the North sea is currently being undertaken by an international group of experts in preparation for the forthcoming North sea conference. I anticipate their interim report will be made available on its completion in the spring of this year.

Nitrogen Dioxide (London)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those London boroughs in which nitrogen dioxide levels in 1986 were such that the European Commission limit value will have been exceeded.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available data for 1986 indicate that the provisions of directive 85/203/EEC on air quality standards for nitrogen dioxides were not exceeded in Greater London.

Homelessness

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest information he has for the first three quarters of 1986 on (a) the number of households accepted as homeless by local authorities in England whose homelessness resulted from mortgage arrears and (b) the percentage of all homeless households which these represented, in each of the first three quarters of 1986.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is contained in "Homeless Households Reported by Local Authorities in England: Results for the third quarter 1986", which was published on 16 January and a copy is held in the House of Commons Library. Table 6 gives the analysis of reasons for homelessness.

Design Services

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the current design programme of work of the design office of the Director General of Design Services, indicating any change since 24 July 1984 arising either from completion of the work or the postponement of the scheme on economy grounds.

Mr. Chope: The current programme of work for the design office of the Director General of Design Services comprises some 60 projects with a capital value of over £700 million. The table below gives a breakdown of the projects and also shows that since 24 July 1984, 39 projects have been completed and 16 projects have been postponed due to lack of funds. During the same period a further seven projects were deferred for similar reasons but have now been re-introduced into the current programme.

| | Civil | | Defence | | Prisons Programme | | Totals | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Projects Number | Estimated value £ million | Projects Number | Estimated value £ million | Projects Number | Estimated value £ million | Projects Number | Estimated value £ million |
| Current programme | 23 | 40·6 | 17 | 32·6 | 20 | 632·0 | 60 | 705·2 |
| Completed since 24 July 1984 | 30 | 23·8 | 6 | 9·6 | 3 | 40·3 | 39 | 73·7 |
| Postponed due to lack of funds | 11 | 17·7 | 5 | 5·1 | — | — | 16 | 22·8 |
| Postponed due to lack of funds now in current programme | 2 | 15·4 | 5 | 9·5 | — | — | 7 | 24·9 |

Property Services Agency

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of dwellings completed by the Property Services Agency in 1984, 1985 and 1986 respectively; and what is the programme for 1987.

Mr. Chope: The PSA completed 215 dwellings in 1984, 45 dwellings in 1985, 477 dwellings in 1986 and expects to complete 1,051 dwellings in 1987.

Sports Council

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has had on the proposed merger of the Play Board with the Sports Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I have received some 60 representations from various organisations and individuals about proposals to merge the role and functions of Play Board with those of the Sports Council, the reasons for which were set out in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) on 26 November, at column 264.

Heritage Coastline (Devon)

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for Environment if, in the light of his decision of October 1986 revoking planning approval for development on the heritage coastline adjacent to Kittery Court, Kingswear, Devon, granted by Mr. P. R. O. Young and the turning down of a request for a public inquiry on 13 January, he will replace Mr. Young as the inspector appointed to hear the new appeal on an application relating to the same premises, reference APP/V1125/A/85/028856.

Mr. Tracey: Yes, in the light of the representations received by the Department, another inspector will be appointed to redetermine this appeal.

Urban Development Grant

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which authorities are invited to submit applications for urban development grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Urban development grant has been successful in bringing about private investment which will contribute to the economic and physical regeneration of inner urban areas. 226 approved projects represent £544 million of investment brought about by £105 million of public expenditure. Provision for UDG will continue to be made within the urban aid expenditure block.

Priority will continue to be given [illegible] those areas where there are severe problems of urban deprivation. Invitations to submit further applications for UDG are being sent to those local authorities in England which have been invited to draw up inner area programme for 1987-88. In addition to 49 authorities which have previously been invited to put forward projects for UDG, the following authorities have been invited for the first time:

Bristol
Derby
Halton
Kensington & Chelsea
Kirklees
Plymouth
Preston
Stockton

Applications may be submitted by other authorities, but will be considered in the light of the priority mentioned above.

Water Pollution

Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to include further waters within the scope of the European Economic Community bathing water directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following consultations with the water industry and the European Commission, the Government have decided to include 362 more waters within the scope of article 1(2)(a) of directive 76/160/EEC. The list of these waters for England, Wales and Northern Ireland, is as follows. My hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Ancram), the Minister with responsibility for Local Government and the Environment in Scotland, is publishing the corresponding list for Scotland.

We have taken the opportunity to add to the list of waters included in the survey which I announced on 18 December 1985, at column 223. All these waters will in future be surveyed according to the directive's regime. The results of each year's montioring will be reported to the Commission in accordance with article 13 of the directive. I expect soon to publish the results of the 1986 survey.

More than half the waters surveyed already meet the standards set by the directive. Remedial works are in hand or planned for many of the remaining waters which do not at present conform. Our aim is for all these waters to meet the directive' standards, although inevitably this will take a number of years.

Land Register

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land, belongs to the Ministry of Defence and how much has been sold in each of the last five years, and if he will make a statement;

(2) how much land is currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to the Department of Transport, and how much has been sold in each of the last five years, and if he will make a statement;

(3) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land belongs to (a) his Department (b) regional health authorities or (c) district health authorities; and how much has been sold in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how much land currently on the register of vacant and derelict public land, belongs to the Department of the Environment and how much has been sold in each of the last five years, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c. 244]: Following is the information:

Notes:

[1] Information about sales in the individual years 1981 and 1982 is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

[2] Sales by these organisations in the years 1981-1983 are not identified separately.

SCOTLAND

Manufacturing Jobs

82. Mr. James Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the net loss in manufacturing jobs in Scotland since June 1979.

Mr. Lang: The number of employees in employment in manufacturing in Scotland is estimated to have fallen on a seasonally adjusted basis by 195,000 between June 1979 and September 1986. The seasonal adjustment factors used are provisional.

Travel-to-Work Areas

83. Mr. Bill Walker asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to change the status of the Blairgowrie, Pitlochry, Aberfeldy travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lang: There are no plans to change the status of the Blairgowrie, Pitlochry, Aberfeldy travel-to-work area.

The present assisted area structure was established only two years ago after a comprehensive review of regional policy and the assisted area map. In the interests of maintaining stability in regional incentives, the Government have concluded that it is too early for changes in the map to be considered

Infant Deaths

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Scotland the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42 plus weeks and with unstated gestational age.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is set out in the table. In this and subsequent tables when a number is less than 10 the corresponding rate is regarded as unreliable and has not been provided.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for (a) first twins and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Scotland the total number of live birth and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant death with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: (i) under 22 weeks, (ii) 22 to 24 weeks, (iii) 25 to 27 weeks, (iv) 28 to 31 weeks, (v) 32 to 36 weeks, (vi) 37 to 41 weeks, (vii) 42 plus weeks and (viii) with unstated gestational age.

Mr. John MacKay: The available information is set out in the table. There is difficulty in identifying which twin died in the late neonatal and post-neonatal deaths and in excluding the data on triplet births and deaths. Accordingly in this and subsequent tables data are given for multiple births.

Tobacco Addiction

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent in Scotland in the last calendar year for which figures are available on curing people addicted to tobacco smoking; and if he will give a breakdown of this figure.

Mr. Rifkind: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths were recorded in Scotland from diseases normally associated with tobacco smoking in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: In a report published in 1983, the Royal College of Physicians estimated that at last 90 per cent. of deaths from lung cancer, bronchitis and obstructive lung disease are attributable to smoking, and that perhaps 20 per cent. of coronary heart disease deaths are related to smoking.

The table shows the total deaths in Scotland in 1985 from these causes.

| ICD[1] Nos | Deaths in Scotland, 1985 | Number |
|---|---|---|
| 162 | Malignant neoplasm of trachea, bronchus and lung (lung cancer) | 4,307 |
| 490-492 | Bronchitis and emphysema (bronchitis) | 969 |
| 496 | Chronic airways obstruction, not elsewhere classified (obstructive lung disease) | 1,480 |
| 410-414 | Ischaemic heart disease (coronary heart disease) | 18,758 |

[1] International Classification of Diseases.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital beds were taken up by patients suffering from diseases normally associated with tobacco smoking in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: The three major diseases generally accepted to be associated with tobacco smoking are ischaemic heart disease, lung cancer and chronic respiratory conditions. The average daily number of beds in Scottish general hospitals occupied by patients with these conditions was 823 for 1985, the latest year for which the information is available.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent in Scotland on research into cures for tobacco addiction in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: Although the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Scottish Health Education Group are at present funding several research projects directly related to smoking, they are not currently funding any research in Scotland specifically related to cures for tobacco addiction. Information about independent research conducted by universities and other bodies is not held centrally.

Regional Aid

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total annual value of regional aid paid to firms in Dundee in each year since 1980; and if he will also express these figures at constant prices.

Mr. Lang: Total payments of regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 to firms in Dundee city are set out in the table:

| Year | Payments at current prices (£ million) | Payments at constant (1986) prices (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 1·4 | 2·0 |
| 1981-82 | 1·5 | 1·9 |
| 1982-83 | 1·2 | 1·4 |
| 1983-84 | 2·2 | 2·4 |
| 1984-85 | 2·4 | 2·6 |
| 1985-86 | 2·0 | 2·1 |

Comprehensive information on payments of regional development grant (RDG) on a local authority basis is not available. However, payments of RDG exceeding £25,000 to firms in the Dundee employment local office area are set out in the table:

| Year | Payments at current prices (£ million) | Payments at constant (1986) prices (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 1·4 | 1·9 |
| 1981-82 | 1·8 | 2·3 |
| 1982-83 | 3·4 | 4·0 |
| 1983-84 | 4·3 | 4·9 |
| 1984-85 | 5·4 | 5·9 |
| 1985-86 | 3·6 | 3·7 |

Health Boards

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current membership of each health board; how he determines each of the categories from which membership is drawn; and, if for each health board, he will indicate the category into which each member falls.

Mr. John MacKay: Schedule 1 to the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 sets out the groups which the Secretary of State must consult before making appointments. In making his decisions my right hon. and learned Friend has regard to the guidelines in the paper "The National Health Service and the Community in Scotland" published in 1974. This suggests the categories of nominating bodies from which each board's membership might be drawn. The lists indicate the category of nominating body which relates to each member. I am arranging for a list of the current membership of each health board to be placed in the Library of the House and published in the Official Report.

Drugs

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent in Scotland in the last calendar year for which figures are available on curing people addicted to drug-taking; and if he will give a breakdown of that figure.

Mr. Rifkind: The cost of treatment provided for drug misusers by the primary care services and general, psychiatric and other hospital services is not separately identified. Grants from central funds totalling £875,390 in the financial year 1986-87 have been made available to statutory and voluntary bodies in Scotland to support 25 projects concerned with the treatment and rehabilitation of drug misusers.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent in Scotland on research programmes on drug-taking in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mr. Rifkind: Information covering all research projects in this field is not available centrally. However, the Scottish Home and Health Department has awarded grants totalling over £230,000 to seven current research projects related to drug misuse of which approximately £42,000 will be spent in the current financial year.

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many deaths were recorded as due to drug taking in Scotland in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

| ICD[1] Code | | 1985 deaths |
|---|---|---|
| 304 | Drug dependence | 10 |
| 305.2—305.9 | Non-dependent abuse of drugs | 1 |
| E850—E858 | Accidental poisoning by drugs, medicaments and biologicals | 17 |

| ICD[1] Code | | 1985 deaths |
|---|---|---|
| E950 | Suicide by solid and liquid substances | 157 |
| E962 | Assault by poisoning | — |
| E980 | Poisoning by solid or liquid substances, undetermined whether accidentally or purposely inflicted | 74 |
| | Total | 259 |

[1] International Classification of Diseases.

Hunterston

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his Department makes of the ability of the relevant services successfully to extend the emergency plans for Hunterston beyond the immediate area for which a detailed plan exists under severe weather conditions.

Mr. Lang: It is for the relevant services themselves to ensure their capability for responding to any civil contingency, whether in good or bad weather conditions. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced on 18 December in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash), Official Report, c. 612-13, existing plans provide a valid basis for the response to any nuclear accident in the United Kingdom.

Surplus Food (Distribution)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much European Economic Community intervention fund food is to be distributed in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow; and which voluntary and statutory agencies will supervise the distribution of such food in each of the above.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. and learned Friend on 30 January to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar).

Radiation

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 13 January, Official Report, column 161, concerning critical groups of members of the public exposed to radiation in the vicinity of British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Chapelcross, whether the Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin contains details of exposure from direct emissions of radiation from the plant as are measurable at the perimeter fence; what is the critical group of members of the public exposed to the highest doses from such direct emissions; whether any member of that group is also exposed to radiation by other pathways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin No. 4/1984 is mainly concerned with monitoring in respect of radioactive waste discharges, but it also confirms that exposure of the public in the vicinity of Chapelcross, taking account also of direct radiation from the reactors themselves, has remained within internationally recommended limits.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the estimated maximum exposures of any member of the public in the vicinity of British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Chapelcross, showing: (a) the dose equivalent in each year of operation, expressed in millisieverts and (b) the average dose equivalent of the 10-year period ending in each recent year, expressed in millisieverts; what changes in such maximum exposures are expected to take place following the revised certificates of authorisations for Chapelcross issued in April 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: No. Doses are calculated in relation to critical groups and not to individuals. Assessments of critical group doses resulting from waste disposals are published regularly. The information for 1984 and 1985, which will be published shortly, confirms that doses arising from discharges from Chapelcross remain very small and well within internationally recommended limits. No significant change is anticipated following the revision of the certificates of authorisation in April 1986.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 13 January, Official Report, column 161, concerning the new certificates of authorisation for radioactive discharges from British Nuclear Fuels Limited, Chapelcross, what maximum annual exposure expressed in millisieverts has been calculated for any member of the public in the case that annual discharges occured at 100 per cent. of the maximum authorised levels; what exposure pathways contribute to such a calculated dose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The authorised limits are set in accordance with the relevant standards with sufficient margin in hand to ensure that critical group doses will not exceed the recommended limits even if discharges continue at the maximum permitted levels. Exposure pathways are described in statistical bulletin No. 4/1984.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 13 January, Official Report, column 161, concerning the table on page 2 of the Scottish Development Department's statistical bulletin No. 4 1984, if he will publish a table showing a summary of exposure pathways in the vicinity of Chapelcross in each year from 1981 to 1983, expressing the effective dose equivalents in millisieverts rather than percentages; whether such calculated exposures in each year take account of the 1982 habits survey and the latest physiological uptake factors now available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The bulletin to be published with monitoring results for 1984 and 1985 will include assessments of critical group doses in the terms requested and will take account of all available relevant information. Bulletin No. 4/1984 contains the information necessary to convert dose assessments for previous years.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley on 13 January, Official Report, column 161, concerning an updated table similar to that on page 2 of the Scottish Development Department's statistical bulletin No. 4 1984, in what month he expects a new bulletin to be published containing information for years up to and including 1985.

Mr. Ancram: I hope that the new bulletin will be published next month.

Loch Ryan

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to amend the regulation concerning Loch Ryan under the terms of the Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to do so.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Corrie asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received the results of the monitoring, in the 1986 bathing season, of the quality of bathing water of the 20 Scottish beaches listed in the 14 February 1986 Official Report, columns 561-2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: The results of the monitoring, in line with the regime set out in the EC bathing waters directive, have been submitted by the river purification boards and are being considered by the Scottish Development Department. The preliminary assessment is encouraging, but some adjustment to monitoring frequencies will be necessary for the 1987 bathing season. My right hon. and learned Friend expects to publish the results following the two-year monitoring programme which ends in September 1987.

My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to identify 23 waters off Scotland as bathing waters in terms of the EC directive. These waters will be monitored each year to the regime set out in the directive, and the results will be conveyed through the Scottish Development Department to the European Commission. Those waters which fail to meet the directive's standards will require to be improved as necessary.

The list of waters includes the 20 covered by the current two-year programme and three others: Montrose, Dunbar and Turnberry. The full list, which will be subject to review from time to time, is as follows:

Nairn
Cullen
Fraserburgh
Aberdeen
Montrose
Arbroath
Carnoustie
St. Andrews
Kinghorn
Aberdour
Gullane
North Berwick
Yellowcraigs
Dunbar
Pease Bay
Sandyhills
Girvan
Turnberry
Ayr
Prestwick
Troon (south)
Irvine-Gailes
Saltcoats/Ardrossan

CIVIL SERVICE

YTS

Mr. Favell asked the Minister for the Civil Service how many people are currently working in the Civil Service under the YTS programme.

Mr. Luce: A survey of YTS approved places in the Civil Service was carried out in May 1986. This showed that there were 1,123 places available, of which 1,027 had actually been taken up.

TRANSPORT

Light Dues

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the level of light dues in 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: In recent years the annual expenditure of the general lighthouse authorities has increasingly exceeded income from light dues, but it has been possible to cover the difference by drawing on the considerable cash reserves which has accumulated in the general lighthouse fund. These cash reserves are now reducing rapidly and it will be necessary for light dues to be increased in 1987-88 in order to bring revenue into line with current operating costs. In addition, there is a new requirement to make provision for the costs of operating the United Kingdom transmitters of the Decca navigator system. Taking all those factors into account, I have concluded that light dues should be increased by just under 14 per cent. in 1987-88.

This increase follows a long period in which light dues have been held well below the rate of inflation, so that even after the increase has been brought into force light dues will still be 18 per cent. lower in real terms than they were in 1981-82. Almost half the revenue from the increase in dues is required to meet the costs of operating the United Kingdom Decca navigator transmitters.

The necessary order will be laid before Parliament shortly. I am conscious of the burden which light dues impose on ships calling at United Kingdom ports, and I have a number of measures in hand which I hope will reduce the need for increases in future years. First, given the considerable use which the fishing industry makes of the Decca navigator system, as an aid to fishing as well as an aid to navigation, I am considering proposals to extend light dues liability to the larger fishing vessels. Secondly, I am inviting the authorities to prepare running costs budgets for 1988-89 on the basis of nil cash growth after making allowances for the cost reductions to be achieved from automation projects. Thirdly, we have commissioned a joint study by consultants into ways in which the authorities' tender fleets requirements can be met. I hope the study will lead to further costs savings.

I much regret the need for this increase, and I recognise that will be unwelcome to shipowners and to the ports' industry.

Manchester (Rail Links)

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport when the Windsor link to the Manchester railway system will be completed; and what is the current estimated cost of the work.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that work on the Windsor link scheme which I approved in April 1985 is expected to be completed by May 1988. The estimated cost of the project is £12·5 million.

Vehicle Emissions

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many prosecutions were carried out in 1986 against the operators of diesel-fuelled vehicles as the result of road-side testing for excess smoke emissions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 675 prosecutions for smoke offences in England and Wales. In addition, the Department's vehicle examiners at roadside checks prohibited a number of vehicles from further use until they had passed a full test at a heavy goods vehicle testing station.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are currently used for assessing the level of emissions from diesel-fuelled vehicles; on what tests these criteria are based; and whether the health effects of particular hydrocarbons were considered in the setting of the criteria.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Requirements are usually expressed for gaseous emissions or particulates in terms of the rate of mass emitted, and for smoke in terms of opacity, during a standard test applied to new engines. The current limits for smoke are set out in European Community directive 72/306. Limits for gaseous emissions from large diesels and particular emissions from diesel-engined cars have been proposed by the European Commission. In making its proposals in regard to particulates the Commission refers to the interests of providing better public health protection.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce an objective road-side test for assessing the acceptability of emissions from diesel-fuelled vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Excessive smoke emissions under free acceleration can be judged visually by an experienced examiner. Measurement of gaseous emissions or particulates by weight, or smoke by opacity, cannot be done without sophisticated equipment to enable the engine to be tested under load and its emissions analysed. This would not be practicable at the road-side.

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to promote the fitting of pollution-reducing technology on all new cars in Britain.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All new cars have to comply with regulations controlling vehicle exhaust emissions. The Government are continuing to review the need for more stringent controls which could require manufacturers to use more costly pollution control technologies.

Mr. Livsey asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for seeking to reduce air pollution from car exhaust fumes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tighter vehicle emission standards are currently under discussion in the European Community. Subject to final agreement being reached, the Government intend to achieve reductions in pollution from vehicle exhaust emissions consistent with the use of cost-effective technology.

Traffic Flow (Residential Areas)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to help local councils introduce road traffic schemes to reduce traffic flow in residential areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We offer general guidance from time to time and seek to ensure that up-to-date technical material is available for local authorities to use in discharging their responsibilities.

We believe it is right where possible to put through traffic on through routes and give an emphasis for residents in residential areas.

Railways (Electrification)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what rail lines he expects to be electrified in the next five years.

Mr. David Mitchell [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987 c. 523]: The answer given was incomplete and should have read as follows. The following railway electrification schemes are due to be completed within the next five years:

| | Year |
|---|---|
| Ayr-Largs | May 1987 |
| Bishops Stortford-Cambridge | May 1987 |
| Blackfriars-Farringdon | May 1987 |
| Ipswich-Norwich | May 1987 |
| Sanderstead-East Grinstead | September 1987 |
| Canonbury Link | December 1987 |
| Bournemouth-Weymouth | January 1988 |
| North London Line | October 1988 |
| East Coast Main Line | Spring 1991 |

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Deaf People (Teachers)

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest figure for the total number of people employed as teachers of the deaf; if he will analyse what proportion of these admitted into training courses for teaching the deaf come from (a) certified teachers with experience in teaching, (b) qualified teachers direct from college or university, (c) non-certified graduates, (d) undergraduates and (e) other; what effect he estimates the implementation of the White Paper, "Better Schools", would have on the numbers of teachers of the deaf being trained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 11]: Information is not collected in the form requested by the hon. Member. The available information is as follows. On 31 March 1985, 783 full-time teachers were employed at maintained and direct grant special schools who were qualified under the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982 to be teachers of classes for deaf or partially hearing pupils. The number of those who were actually teaching such classes is not available. Four hundred and seventeen of these are known to have obtained specialist qualifications through in-service teacher training, 85 through initial teacher training, and 232 through other routes (primarily through the National College of Teachers of the Deaf).

On the same date 500 full-time teachers who were recognised as qualified teachers for the deaf or partially hearing pupils were teaching for at least part of their time in special classes for the partially hearing or partially sighted in other maintained schools. Three hundred and forty four of these are known to have obtained specialist qualifications through in-service training, 51 through initial training and 83 through other routes. In September 1986, 17 students were admitted to postgraduate initial teacher training and 22 to undergraduate initial teacher training courses leading to specialist qualification in teaching classes of deaf pupils.

The policy outlined in the White Paper, "Better Schools" will be implemented with the aim of maintaining the supply of teachers qualified to be employed as the teacher of a class for deaf or partially hearing pupils.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Virgin Islands and Montserrat

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has received from the British Virgin Islands and Montserrat to his request that judicial corporal punishment should cease.

Mr. Eggar: We have instructed governors concerned to attempt to obtain the local administration's agreement to remove judicial corporal punishment from the statute book. But we understand that there is a strong opposition to such a move.

We have obtained assurances that judicial birching will be used in the territories only in exceptional circumstances.

Convention on Human Rights

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to extend the first protocol of the Convention on Human Rights to the dependent territories.

Mr. Eggar: Those territories which have not yet adopted the first protocol have been invited to do so at the earliest opportunity.

EEC (Spanish Accession)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the proposals and concessions agreed with the United States of America following their complaint under the general agreement on tariffs and trade rules on the Spanish accession to the European Economic Community; and what will be the estimated reduction in European Economic Community revenue in consequence over the anticipated period of the settlement.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1987, c. 571]: For the period 1 January 1987 to 31 December 1990, the Community will open annual reduced-levy quotas for imports into Spain of 2 million tonnes of maize and 300,000 tonnes of sorghum and reduce tariffs on various products with a total trade volume of 400 million ecu. The Community will also drop the requirement that 15 per cent. of the Portuguese grain market be reserved for Community suppliers, and reinstate, subject to the transitional arrangements for Spain and Portugal, the tariffs bound in GATT by the previous Community of Ten. These measures recognise that the United States was entitled to compensation under GATT following the terms of Spanish and Portuguese accession. In return, the United States agreed not to increase to 200 per cent. tariffs on certain Community exports, including British-bottled gin, and to relax its non-trade restrictive quantitative restrictions on certain other Community exports, including bottled beer and wine. The implications for Community revenue are unclear, since reductions in import charges may be offset by increased trade. A copy of the agreement has been placed in the Library of the House.

EC (Palestinian Imports)

Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to monitor the results of recent European Economic Community policies to encourage the flow of Palestinian products into the European Economic Community.

Mr. Alan Clark [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1987, c. 571]: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has introduced a system for recording imports originating in the occupied territories which benefit from the tariff arrangements introduced by Council regulation (EEC) 3363/86 of 27 October 1986. This will enable us to monitor developments closely. There have as yet been no such imports.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgages

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current estimated level of use of top-up mortgages by individuals as an illicit means of raising cheap loans; and what is the estimated cost to the Treasury.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not illicit for individuals to top-up their mortgages in order to borrow more cheaply than otherwise possible. If the hon. Member has in mind the extent of abuse of tax relief on loans ostensibly but not actually used for home improvement purposes, I would refer him to paragraph 32 of the Treasury minute in response to the Public Accounts Committee's 52nd report 1985-86 (published as Cmnd. 9846).

European Community (Budget)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will bring up to date the figures given in his written answer dated 13 May 1985, Official Report, column 28, to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby concerning the United Kingdom contribution to the EEC budget, together with his forecast for 1987.

Mr. Peter Brooke: Since my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary's reply of 13 May 1985, at column 28, the Commission has again revised the figures for the 1 per cent. yield from the VAT base for the years 1982 to 1984. The new information for these years and the updated information requested is set out in the table. Information concerning 1987 has been derived from the Commission's revenue estimates contained in the 1987 draft budget.

2. The VAT figures show the VAT yield if VAT were levied at a rate of 1 per cent. in the United Kingdom and in all member states for the years 1982-85, and at 1·4 per cent. in 1986 and 1987. They ignore the effects of the United Kingdom VAT abatement. The 1986 figures are taken from the 1986 Budget. The 1987 figures are taken from the 1987 draft budget.
3. Portugal joined the Community on 1 January 1986. It does not pay VAT, but financial contributions linked to its GNP share. The VAT figures for 1986 and 1987 take account of these financial contributions.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table revising and bringing up to date the table provided in his answer to the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) dated 7 July 1983, Official Report, column 173, showing receipts from and payments to the EEC budget, together with an estimate for 1986 and a forecast for 1987.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested is set out in the table. An estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution in 1987-88 is contained in pages 68 to 71 of the public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56-II). An estimate for the United Kingdom's contribution to the Community budget in 1987 will be provided in the "Statement on the 1987 Community Budget" which will be published shortly after a budget for 1987 has been adopted.

Notes

1. For all years sterling figures reflect payments made during the year, not payments in respect of particular budgets. The 1986 net contribution is the estimate contained in the "Statement on the 1986 Community Budget" (Cmnd 9907) published in October 1986.

2. Since 198[illegible] negotiated refunds have been replaced by an abatement of the United Kingdom's VAT contributions. The 1985 budget contained a flat rate VAT abatement for the United Kingdom of 1,000 mecu (£605 million), payable in respect of the United Kingdom's contribution in 1984. £166 million of this was received by the end of December 1985. The balance, £439 million, was received in the first few days of January 1986. The delay in payment reduced the 1986 net contribution figure and increased that for 1985. During 1985 the United Kingdom also received some £61 million in final payment for the refunds negotiated in respect of the United Kingdom's excessive net contribution to the 1983 Community budget.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether he will publish in the Official Report a table updating the information give in table 1 in the sixth report from the Select Committee on European Legislation, Session 1983-84, HC 78-vi, concerning the principle components in United Kingdom payments and receipts from the European Economic Community.

Mr. Brooke: The information requested concerning the outturn for the calendar years 1983 to 1985, together with an estimate for 1986, is given in the table.

[1] Forecast for 1986 as in the "Statement on the 1986 Community Budget", Cmnd. 9907.

[2] Payments by the United Kingdom under the two intergovernmental agreements were both made in the 1985 calendar year.

[3] Since 1985 negotiated refunds have been replaced by abatement of the United Kingdom's VAT contributions. The 1985 budget contained a flat rate abatement for the United Kingdom of 1,000 mecu (£605 million), payable in respect of the United Kingdom's contribution in 1984. £166 million of this was received by the end of December 1985. The balance, £439 million was received in the first few days of January 1986. The delay in payment reduced the 1986 figure and increased that for 1985. During 1985 the United Kingdom also received some £61 million as final payment for the refunds negotiated in respect of the United Kingdom's excessive net contribution to the 1983 Community budget.

Small Businesses

Mr. Walters asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from small businesses about relief from value added tax on bad debts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1987, c. 579]: Virtually all the representations received in response to the Customs and Excise consultation document "VAT: Small Business Review" have welcomed the automatic bad debt relief which would accrue under the proposed cash accounting option. All points made in the representations will be taken into account in the further consideration I am now giving to the consultative document proposals.

Mr. Walters asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he intends to implement the proposals in the Customs and Excise consultation document on value added tax on small businesses, particularly the cash accounting option for suppliers with a turnover of up to £100,000.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1987, c. 579]: The Government are considering the many representations received and hopes to be able to announce their decisions on the consultation document proposals at the time of my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement on 17 March.

Fishing Vessels (Capital Allowances)

Mr. McQuarrie asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to amend the provisions of the Finance Act 1984 with a view to restoring to fishing vessel owners the right to claim 100 per cent. first-year capital allowances on their vessels; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will meet representatives of the Scottish Fishermen's Federation to discuss the impact of the provisions of the Finance Act 1984 in so far as it relates to first-year capital allowances on fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will review the impact on investment in the Scottish fishing industry of the withdrawal of first-year capital allowances on fishing vessels as a result of the provisions of the Finance Act 1984; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what representations he has received from the Scottish fishing industry in relation to capital allowances for fishing vessels, under the Finance Act 1984; what action he proposes to take; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his replies, 2 February 1987, c. 538]: The Scottish Fishermen's Federation has recently urged the restoration of 100 per cent. first-year allowances for the cost of acquiring fishing vessels and have asked for a meeting. Their representations are being considered. I can confirm that the overall effects of the business tax reforms introduced in 1984 are kept under review.

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many television sets there are at his official residence; and who is responsible for paying for the licence fee.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 86]: Three television sets are currently in use at 11 Downing street. No licence fees are payable for television sets which are on Crown property used for Government purposes.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much will be deducted in income tax and national insurance contributions taken together from (a) a single person and (b) a married couple who earn £100, £150, £200, £250 and £300 per week respectively; and what percentage of gross income do the combined payments represent in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 537]: The information is given in the following table. It is assumed that the only allowances and reliefs available are the appropriate personal allowances and that in the case of married couples there are no wife's earnings.

Tax and National Insurance Contributions 1986-87

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Pharmaceutical Industry

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has as to what proportion of the gross output of the pharmaceutical industry comes from Scotland;

(2) how many people are employed in the pharmaceutical industry in Scotland.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The proportion of gross output in the pharmaceutical products industry[1] accounted for by manufacturing units in Scotland in 1985 was 7·1 per cent. of the total for the United Kingdom as a whole. The employment of these units totalled 5,500.

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to what proportion of the research and development fund spent in the pharmaceutical industry comes from Scotland.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I regret that statistics of R and D expenditure on a regional or country basis are not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) if he will list the dates in 1986 of all his communications with Sir Frank Cooper, former permanent under-secretary at the Ministry of Defence;

(2) if he will list the dates in 1986 of all his communications with Sir Ronald Mason, the former chief scientific adviser at the Ministry of Defence.

The Attorney-General: I have no recollection of any communications with Sir Frank Cooper or Sir Ronald Mason in 1986.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) on what date he first knew of Sir Ronald Mason's interview with Mr. Duncan Campbell during which reference was made to the Zircon project;

(2) on what date he first knew of Sir Frank Cooper's interview with Mr. Duncan Campbell during which reference was made to the Zircon project.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's answer to him of 26 January 1987.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General (1) whether he discussed the Zircon project with Mr. Duncan Campbell when he met him in 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what dates in 1986 he met Mr. Duncan Campbell.

The Attorney-General: It is not my practice to answer detailed questions about my engagements, but I met Mr. Duncan Campbell in July and on one other occasion some months earlier. On neither occasion was the Zircon project discussed.

WALES

Hospital Beds

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the average number of beds available in National Health Service hospitals in Wales nationally and for each health authority for 1979 and 1985 and the percentage change in each case for 1979 to 1985 for (a) acute, (b) geriatric, (c) mental illness, (d) mental handicap, (e) maternity and (f) all specialities.

NHS Land and Buildings

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give his best estimate of the current value of National Health Service land and buildings in Wales.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The chief valuer of the Inland Revenue has estimated that the value of the National Health Service estate in Wales for current use, at 1984 prices, is about £720 million.

Health and Social Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and at 1986-87 prices each year since 1979 to the latest available date for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) 0 to four years, (d) five to 15 years, (e) 16 to 65 years, (f) 65 to 74 years and (g) 75 years and over giving the amount spent on (i) personal social services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) hospital and community health services and (iv) total in Wales.

NHS (Efficiency Savings)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total cash releasing cost improvements achieved by each health authority in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Health authorities in Wales have been required to prepare a cost improvement programme from 1987-88 onwards. Prior to this no formal cost improvement programmes were in place in Wales. However, health authorities since 1984-85 have been required to make a minimum efficiency saving of 0·5 per cent. on the authorities' revenue allocation and to redeploy this from the acute to the continuing care sector for the benefit of mentally ill, mentally handicapped and elderly people. The savings reported by health authorities are as follows:

Efficiency Savings

| TOTAL | 2,817·5 | 3,544·4 | 4,159·3 |

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the total cash released through the competitive tendering process by each health authority, giving category of service and total, for each year 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is not available in the form requested. Health authorities were asked to test the cost-effectiveness of their domestic, catering and laundry services by competitive tendering in September 1983. Such information as is held centrally in relation to that was given in the reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 24 November 1986, at column 25. Since then a further domestic services contract, with estimated savings of £36,000 pa has been let by the Powys health authority.

Departmental Research

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is his annual expenditure on research for his Department; what percentage of this is of his Department's total expenditure for each year since 1980; how much his Department has spent on research concerning industry in the years since 1980 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c. 296]: Expenditure on research and development by the Welsh Office since 1981-82 (the earliest years for which figures are available) and these figures shown as a percentage of the Department's total annual expenditure, are as follows:

|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Welsh Office expenditure on research and development | 1·6 | 1·5 | 1·3 | 1·6 | 2·6 | [1]3·6 |
| Percentage of total Welsh Office expenditure | 0·072 | 0·062 | 0·050 | 0·061 | 0·093 | 0·119 |

[1] Estimated outturn.

On industry matters the Department of Trade and Industry runs research schemes which cover Wales as well as England. Expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry in Wales on support for innovation in 1985-86 was over £1·9 million. It is expected that a similar amount will be spent in 1986-87. Information for the years preceding 1985-86 could be separately identified only at disproportionate cost.

Welsh Language

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department expects to publish (a) the revised version of the booklet "Languages at Work" including information on the vocational value of Welsh language qualifications; and (b) Defnyddio'ch Cymraeg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The "Languages at Work" booklet is published jointly by the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office. The present edition was produced in 1983-84 and the revised version is due to be published later this year. The booklet is distributed throughout England and Wales. It is not intended that the revised booklet should include information about the use of Welsh in work situations. However, the Department is preparing a separate publication giving information about the Welsh-medium further and higher education courses which are available and about the types of employment where a knowledge of the Welsh language is considered to be either essential or an advantage. Preparation of the booklet "Defnyddio'ch Cymraeg" is well advanced and it is hoped to publish it within the next few months.

NORTHERN IRELAND

International Fund for Ireland

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the board for the International Fund for Ireland has been formed; who is the chairman; and what money have so far been allocated.

Mr. Scott: Members of the board of the International Fund for Ireland were formally appointed on 12 December 1986, the day the fund came into being. The chairman of the board is Mr. Charles Brett, a past chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, and there are six other members of the board from both parts of Ireland. No moneys have yet been allocated to projects by the board of the international fund. A contribution from the United States of $50 million will be available to the international fund shortly, and further contributions from the United States, Canada and New Zealand have been promised. It will be for the board to decide on the allocation of these resources when they are available.

Women Prison Officers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many full-time women prison officers are employed in prisons in Northern Ireland;

(2) how many auxiliary women prison officers are employed in prisons in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: One hundred and thirty-three women prison offices are employed in the Northern Ireland prison service. Of these, three are employed as prison officer clerks at male establishments and the remainder are employed at Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry (female). The breakdown is:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Governor IV | 1 |
| Chief Officer II | 1 |
| Principal Officer | 5 |
| Senior Officer | 8 |
| Basic Grade Officer | 81 |
| Clerk II | 1 |
| Clerk III | 8 |
| Catering Officer | 1 |
| Hospital Officer | 4 |
| Officer Instructor | 1 |
| Physical Education Instructor | 1 |
| Dog handler | 1 |
| TOTAL | 113 |

There are no auxiliary prison officers (male or female) employed in Northern Ireland.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement indicating the total number, by social security office, of severe weather payments for the relevant two weeks of January 1987 which are not to be paid directly to claimants but to be treated as deductions in respect of fuel arrears from a previous period.

Mr. Needham: None. It is intended that these payments should go towards fuel costs incurred during the relevant weeks.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Fresh Start

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to what feasibility schemes have been considered by his Department prior to the introduction of Fresh Start; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Fresh Start proposals followed consideration of the report by a joint team of prison service personnel and PA Management Consultants on shift and complementing arrangements for prison officers. Since then, considerable development work has been undertaken by experienced operational staff—including refinement exercises at eight further establishments—which has confirmed the feasibility of the proposals. Preparatory work due to begin in establishments next month will further help their development.

Prisoners (Hepatitis)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the incidence of hepatitis among prisoners and if it varies by (a) age of prisoner and (b) type of establishment.

Mr. Mellor: The number of cases of hepatitis reported between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986 in prison establishments in England and Wales was as follows. The ages of the prisoners concerned are not recorded centrally.

| | Acute Hepatitis A | Acute Hepatitis B | Chronic Hepatitis B (i.e. known carrier) | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Males | | | | |
| Remand Centres | 0 | 11 | 21 | 32 |

| Open Youth Custody Centres | 0 | 0 | 0 | 0 |
| TOTAL | 4 | 8 | 14 | 26 |
| GRAND TOTAL | 34 | 165 | 295 | 494 |

Prison Officers and Governors

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black prison officers there are; and how many black governors.

Mr. Mellor: The ethnic origin of civil servants is monitored by voluntary self-classification. The response from prison officers has been insufficient to provide accurate information.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time women prison officers are employed in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 January 1987 there were 1,060 women employed full time in the prison officer class in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many auxiliary women prison officers are employed in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: On 1 January 1987 there were 77 women employed as prison auxiliaries in prisons in England and Wales.

Prisoners (Release)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were released on Christmas Eve; and how many had no home to go to.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that about 900 sentenced and non-criminal prisoners were released from prison department establishments in England and Wales on 24 December 1986. Details of home circumstances are not recorded centrally.

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of home leave for prisoners in 1985.

Mr. Mellor: Figures collected centrally do not distinguish between expenditure on home leave and expenditure on temporary release. In 1985-86, £232,094 was spent on home leave and temporary release. This figure includes travel, subsistence and accommodation allowances for young offenders but excludes expenditure on temporary release to hospital.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what payments are made from public funds to prisoners on home leave.

Mr. Mellor: Adult prisoners on home leave receive all travelling expenses, subsistence for the journey and the cost of accommodation and food during the home leave period up to a maximum of £21 or £41 depending on the length of the leave. The person offering hospitality to the prisoner may also be eligible for financial help.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the maximum amount of money which a prisoner may take on home leave.

Mr. Mellor: £20 for terminal home leave and £10 for short home leave and pre-parole leave.

Deportation

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons currently serving custodial sentences are under threat of deportation; how many are classified in category D; and how many of these are in open prisons.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested, but during 1986 the courts recommended 494 persons for deportation together with a custodial sentence. A further 135 persons were notified of an intention to deport them under section 3(5)(b) of the Immigration Act 1971, which deals with deportation in the public interest. The majority of these would have been serving a custodial sentence at the time.

Civil Defence

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the implementation of the Government's civil defence requirements by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of local authorities are making encouraging progress, but there is still a great deal to be done before there is a satisfactory and balanced state of preparedness. Home Office circular ES1 1986 set out a planned programme for implementation of the 1983 regulations and a timetable for systematic monitoring (a copy is in the Library).

Child Abuse

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the problems related to allegations of child sex abuse in the case of mentally handicapped children and the difficulties in bringing these allegations before the courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend's reply on 18 December 1986 to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Penrith and The Border (Mr. Maclean) and for Slough (Mr. Watts), Official Report, c. 645-46, outlined action to improve the likelihood of prosecution and conviction in cases of sexual abuse of children. We fully appreciate that when the child is mentally handicapped, there are extra difficulties. We are not, however, persuaded that any changes to the law could be made specifically in respect of mentally handicapped children which would be consistent with justice for the accused.

Mr. Trevor Ferguson (Incident)

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the commissioner as to what action has been taken about the incident when Trevor Ferguson lost an eye in the early hours of the morning of 4 January in Exming road, London E.16.; and whether the police are treating this as a racist attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that police inquiries in this case are continuing and that it is being treated as a racial incident.

Mr. Paul Cleeland

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to respond to representations made to him on behalf of Paul Cleeland, a prisoner at Parkhurst, on 29 July 1986 by the hon. Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) and the hon. Member for Stevenage.

Mr. Mellor: We hope to be able to do so shortly.

Alcohol-related Offences

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent research into the actual risk of detection for excess alcohol offences is available to his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There has been no recent research of which results are yet available. However, a study now being carried out by the Department includes an assessment of the relationship between police enforcement practices and the incidence of drink-driving offences.

Police (Pensions)

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the date of the next meeting of committee E of the police negotiating board.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This is a matter for the board's independent secretariat. I understand, however, that the next meeting is scheduled for 27 May.

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the change in the number of police preserved rate widows since 25 February 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cases in which he has failed to implement agreed negotiated decisions of committee E of the police negotiating board.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This has happened once: in the case of the recent recommended increase in the pensions payable to the widows of police officers who retired before 1 April 1956.

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met committee E of the olice negotiating board.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No such meeting has taken place.

Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider granting a place on committee E of the police negotiating board to the National Association of Retired Police Officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Edmund-Davies committee considered carefully, and rejected, the case for the national association to be represented on the negotiating body. We agree with the committee's conclusion.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what investigation is being carried out by the immigration service into advice from staff of Electronic Data Systems, a copy of which has been sent to him by the hon. Member for Linlithgow about their behaviour when undergoing immigration control;

(2) when he expects to reach a decision as to whether to take legal action against Electronic Data Systems in relation to alleged breaches of immigration rules.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1987, Vol. 108, c. 250]: Following allegations in September last year that breaches of the immigration laws had been committed by employees of Electronic Data Systems, careful inquiries have been carried out by the immigration service. Some irregularities were identified, but in none of the cases was prosecution considered practicable by the police.

Visa Regulations

Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what have been the expenditure effects to date for his Department of the introduction of the new visa regulations.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c. 70-71]: Such small additional expenditure as has been incurred has been offset by savings and contained within existing cost limits. But for the extension of visa arrangements, the Department would have incurred unavoidable increased staffing and other running costs. These are difficult to estimate but could have been of the order of £2·5 million in a full year. In the unlikely event that sufficient accommodation could have been made available for use by the immigration service, substantial further staffing and other expenditure would have been needed to provide the level of service that is now available at the ports as a result of the extension of the visa system.

EMPLOYMENT

Benefit Claimant Advisers

Mr. Leighton asked the Paymaster General how many claimant advisers the Department employs; whether they have been recruited from outside his Department; and what are their terms of reference.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Claimant advisers are being introduced into unemployment benefit offices to replace unemployment review officers who have been operating in the Department of Health and Social Security. Their job description is to provide advice and guidance to claimants to help them move out of unemployment; to ensure that they are available for and actively seeking work; advising on the availability condition and alternative benefits for which availability is not a requirement; to encourage and support claimants in the process of looking for work, and advise them of the services available through the MSC; to prepare cases for submission to the adjudicating authorities where availability is in doubt.

On 31 January 1987 there were 466 claimant advisers in post. This will rise to a full complement of 640 by 31 March 1987. Most of the posts are being filled by the transfer or promotion of staff within the Department of Employment, but a small number are also filled by the transfer of staff from other Government Departments or by recruits under the Civil Service direct entrant scheme.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate

Mr. Proctor asked the Paymaster General, in the light of the recommendations by Sir Frank Layfield in the report on the Sizewell public inquiry concerning further work to be undertaken by Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate, what discussions he has arranged with the Director General of the Health and Safety Executive on the resource implications of such further work; when he expects to be informed of such resource implications; if he will publish a report of the potential resource implications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has a quasi-judicial role in respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board's application to construct Sizewell B. It would not be proper to comment on the inspector's report, including the recommendations, before he has taken his decision.

Labour Statistics

Sir David Price asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing (a) the number of people in full-time employment and (b) the total work force for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Lee: The quarterly estimates of the numbers of male employees in employment do not separately identify those in full-time employment for dates prior to September 1984. For the earlier periods, estimates of the numbers of full-time male employees in employment are available only from censuses of employment. Estimates of the numbers of self-employed people do not separately identify those who are employed full time. The available information for the years specified is given in the table.

[1] Usually working more than 30 hours per week (including overtime).

Mr. Knox asked the Paymaster General what proportion of jobs lost since 1979 have been lost in the northern regions, and Scotland.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There are no figures for the number of jobs lost in the country as a whole or in each region. The inaccurate claim that 94 per cent. of jobs lost have been lost in the north is totally misleading. That particular figure uses changes in the net numbers of employees in employment which is the result of both jobs lost and jobs gained. If the same procedure were applied to changes in the net numbers of jobs (i.e. including the self-employed) between 1979 and 1986, that would produce the absurd conclusion that "148 per cent. of jobs lost were lost in the north." The 94 per cent. figure was also arrived at by including Wales, the west midlands and the east midlands in the north rather than the south, which is a definition which might be challeged by the residents of Northampton and Cheltenham.

Quite apart from the odd nature of the statistic recently quoted by the hon. Member for Dunfermline, East (Mr. Brown), the fact is that falls in the number of employees in employment as a result of the recession and improvements in productivity were by no means confined to the north. Even adopting the odd geographical division of the country above, the "south" which had 35 per cent. of manufacturing employees in 1979 experienced 28 per cent. of the net fall in manufacturing employment between 1979 and 1986. And, between 1983 and 1986, 40 per cent. of the net fall in manufacturing employees occurred in the "south". Conversely, gains in employment were by no means confined to the "south". The dramatic increase in self-employment since 1979 has benefited the "north" substantially; 368,000 more people became self-employed in the North, accounting for nearly half the total increase in self-employment.

There is a need to encourage more enterprise in the "north" and to make it a more attractive place for investment in modern industry and commerce. This is being tackled by a whole range of Government policies and by enterprising private initiatives. Exaggerating the extent of job losses in the "north" does nothing to help our endeavours to encourage job creation there.

Community Programme

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to the answer of 23 January 1987 regarding community programme plans in 1987-88, if he will list the areas considered to be most in need; how he anticipates the allocation in these areas will compare with those in 1986-87, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987, c. 349]: In distributing community programme places between regions and areas those considered to be most in need are those which are experiencing the highest relative incidence of long-term unemployment. The allocation between regions and areas for 1987-88 is still being finalised by the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Paymaster General how the total provision of the community programme places in 1987-88 compared with that of 1986-87; what is the percentage change and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987, c. 349]: In December 1986 there were 247,600 filled places nationally and we expect the programmme to level out in the next few months, at around 250,000 filled places. For 1987-88, the Manpower Services Commission is planning to operate the programme at an average level over the year of about 245,000 filled places. We shall continue to provide opportunities for 300,000 participants in this coming year.

Disabled People

Mr. Watts asked the Paymaster General how many schemes have been approved under the Manpower Services Commission scheme for pilot employment initiatives for disabled people; how many jobs are estimated to be provided; and what funds remain to be allocated in the current financial year.

Mr. Lee: Contracts for six projects have been placed, and four other projects have been approved in principle, under the scheme.

Four of the 10 projects have specified the number of placings that they aim to achieve. They expect to place at least 235 people into jobs in the first three years. The 10 projects will employ directly 19 people.

The cost of the 10 projects to the Manpower Services Commission is estimated to be £55,000 in the 1986-87 financial year. Funds available to the scheme in the same financial year amount to £512,000.

Chemical Spillage (Souhampton)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Paymaster General if he will make available the findings of the Health and Safety Executive into the chemical spillage in Southampton which was reported on 15 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Health and Safety Executive investigation into this incident is not yet complete. It is not intended that a formal report will be published. I will write to the hon. Member about the matter and I will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Underpayment (Prosecutions)

Mr. Janner asked the Paymaster General how many prosecutions for underpayment have taken place since his introduction of the Wages Act 1986.

Mr. Trippier: Since 25 July 1986, one employer has been prosecuted. Two other cases are due to be heard shortly.

Mr. Janner: asked the Paymaster General how many prosecutions have been brought against companies for underpayment for each of the last 10 years; and how many prosecutions have been successful.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is given in the following table.

| | (a) Number of prosecutions for underpayment | (b) Number successful |
|---|---|---|
| 1977 | 7 | 7 |
| 1978 | 16 | 16 |

ENERGY

Power Stations

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate last observed an exercise of emergency procedures at Sizewell nuclear power station; if he will publish the exercise scenario used on that occasion; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate last observed an exercise of emergency procedures at Bradwell nuclear power station; if he will publish the exercise scenario used on that occasion; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate last observed an exercise of emergency procedures at Dungeness A nuclear power station; if he will publish the exercise scenario used on that occasion; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(4) when one or more inspectors of Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate last observed an exercise of emergency procedures at Dungeness B nuclear power station; if he will publish the exercise scenario used on that occasion; if he will describe each accident or fault said to have occurred for exercise purposes; whether any fire or explosion was said to have occurred for exercise purposes; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what part Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate plays in determining the reference accident for the off-site emergency plan of a nuclear power station; what are the material factors taken into account by the nuclear installations inspectorate in relation to approval of the reference accident in considering approval of an off-site emergency plan; and if he will make a statement;

(6) what is the reference accident for the off-site emergency plan of (a) Sizewell A nuclear power station, (b) Bradwell nuclear power station, (c) Dungeness A nuclear power station and (d) Dungeness B nuclear power station; when each reference accident was last revised or restated; whether in each case fire or explosion is said to occur in the reference accident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate has observed exercises of emergency procedures as follows:

| Site | Date of observed exercise | Postulated incident |
|---|---|---|
| Sizewell | 27 August 1986 | failure of standpipe closure |
| Bradwell | 18 June 1986 | failure of standpipe |
| Dungeness A | 4 June 1986 | burst bottom duct |
| Dungeness B | 20 May 1986 | $CO_2$ by-pass duct safety valve failure |

It is not the practice to publish detailed scenarios. These scenarios are submitted to the nuclear installations inspectorate for acceptance, and are discussed in general terms with chief officers of emergency services when seeking their participation. The scenarios incorporate a wide variety of accident conditions including, to the extent relevant to the type of reactor, depressurisation, fire and the release of radioactive fission products. A report on each emergency exercise is made to the local liaison committee.

The Health and Safety Executive's published booklet "Emergency plans for civil nuclear installations" describes how the accidents used for emergency planning purposes are determined. Those for all gas-cooled reactors involve loss of coolant; for Magnox reactors they also involve a fuel channel fire. The fault studies defining releases in accidents are subject to periodic revision. They were last revised in May 1986 for Sizewell, in January 1983 for Bradwell and in March 1986 for Dungeness A. Revision is currently in hand for Dungeness B.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total financial sum and manpower effort invested to date by the electricity supply industry in engineering, economic and site evaluations and planning for the programme of retrofitting flue-gas desulphurisation equipment to three power stations.

Mr. Goodlad: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I am arranging for the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he is satisfied that there has been sufficient co-operation between countries involved in European collaboration on commercial demonstration fast reactor safety;

(2) what progress has been made in the European collaboration on commercial demonstration fast reactor safety; and whether he is satisfied with the progress made.

Mr. Goodlad: Programmes on fast reactor safety are an integral part of the fast reactor collaboration, and are co-ordinated by a working group on safety. The United Kingdom is fully involved in this work.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what the load reactor of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay has been over the last two years; and what problems have resulted in any reactor shutdowns.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that the load factor of the prototype fast reactor in 1985 was 41 per cent. and in 1986 44 per cent.

The causes of significant unplanned loss of output were: in 1985, replacement of the main generator transformer, removal of development fuel and blockage of the condenser's seawater intake; and in 1986, condenser leak repair and replacement of superheater tubing.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what delays have been experienced in the Scarabee-N programme of the European collaboration on commercial demonstration fast reactor safety; and what have been the consequences for the United Kingdom's involvement.

Mr. Goodlad: I understand from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority that there has been a lower rate of testing under the Scarabee-N programme than originally envisaged, but that this has not affected the authority's involvement.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether, as part of collaboration with the United States of America on fast reactor safety, he is satisfied with progress being made under the PFR-TREAT and safety design principle agreements; and whether he expects such agreements to continue;

(2) what progress has been made in collaboration with the United States on fast reactor safety since January 1986; and whether he is satisfied with progress made.

Mr. Goodlad: Contacts continue between the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and the United States Department of Energy on various aspects of fast reactor research, including safety research. Various tests have been successfully completed under the PFR-TREAT programme. An agreement on safety design principles expired in November 1986 and has not been renewed. The United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority considers that adequate opportunities exist for further exchanges of information in this area.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy what decision has been made as part of the European collaboration on commercial demonstration fast reactor safety on the CABRI 2 programme; and what financial, technical and manpower contribution is planned from each of the collaborating countries, including the United Kingdom.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by the UKAEA that decisions on levels of participation in the CABRI 2 programme have not yet been taken.

Geothermal Energy

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on research programmes on geothermal energy.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government have supported research programmes on geothermal energy since 1977. At present, research is concentrated on hot dry rock technology. Work on hot dry rocks has been carried out in granite rocks at a site in Cornwall. Holes were drilled to 300m and then to 2000m and a large reservoir of hot fractured rock was established by explosive and hydraulic fracturing. A further phase of work involving a third experimental hole was approved in 1983. Expenditure to date has been over £20 million.

Last year the programme was extended for a further two years at a cost of some £7 million. Industrial participation in the project has started and commercialisation studies are under way.

The long-term aim of the programme is to have a commercial prototype operating at 6km depth with suitable industrial partners by about the mid 1990s. This will depend on full achievement of technical targets at the present depth of 2km and demonstration that the technology has sound prospects for commercial viability. A full-scale review of the programme will be made in the course of this year.

Electricity Consumption

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the figures for the last complete year for which he has records of electricity consumption for England and Wales.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1985, the last complete year for which information is available, electricity consumption in England and Wales amounted to 211·38 terrawatt hours. A detailed breakdown of this total, which excludes industrial producers' consumption from own generation of conventional thermal electricity, is published in the Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 1986, table 52.

Sizewell B Power Station

Mr. Allen Adams asked the Secretary of State for Energy when he now expects contracts for Sizewell B power station to be placed with Babcock Power Ltd.

Mr. Goodlad: Such contracts are a matter for the CEGB. However, I understand that it has been the board's policy for some time not to release the manufacturing phases of contracts until after my right hon. Friend has decided whether or not to give consent to the station. As my right hon. Friend informed the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 22 January, he wishes to hear the views of the House before he takes his decision. My right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal informed the House on 29 January that he is arranging a debate in the week beginning 23 February. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will take his decision as soon as possible thereafter.

Mr. Irving asked the Secretary of State for Energy, in the light of recommendation 6(a) of the report on the Sizewell public inquiry by Sir Frank Layfield, concerning the review by the Health and Safety Executive of the extent of the area covered by emergency plans, if he will make it his policy to consider the potential cost implications of extending such areas before making a decision on the consent application for Sizewell B; if he will publish information of potential cost implications before the report is debated in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: My right hon. Friend has a quasi-judicial role in respect of the Central Electricity Generating Board's application to construct Sizewell B. It would not be proper for me to comment on the inspector's report, including the recommendations, before my right hon. Friend has taken his decision.

SOCIAL SERVICES

AIDS

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report (a) how much the Government have budgeted to spend on their AIDS advertising campaign during the current financial year and (b) the items on which the Government have spent money on any other aspect of AIDS, together with the sums allocated.

Mr. Newton: Of the £20 million over 12 months which is being made available for publicity and information about AIDS, it is expected that some £6 million to £7 million will fall into the financial year 1986-87. This is in addition to about £1 million which was spent before the major campaign was launched. Details of the aspects of AIDS on which other expenditure in England is planned or has been allocated were given in my right hon. Friend's replies to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 1 December 1986, at column 525-26, and to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 18 December 1986, at column 703.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to increase the number of medical and nursing staff to meet the increasing burden of AIDS patients on the hospital service.

Mr. Newton: All health authorities are expected to take account of present and future needs for services for AIDS patients in their plans. At present the great majority of such patients is being treated in three of the Thames health regions. These regions are receiving an additional allocation of £2·5 million this year towards the costs of treating AIDS patients. We are considering what additional resources should be allocated to assist them in dealing with this work in 1987-88. It will be for the health authorities to determine the way in whch they are spent.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents (a) in England and (b) in England and Wales and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the age of the mother in the following age ranges: under 16, 16 to 19, 20 to 24, 25 to 29, 30 to 34 and 35-plus years;

(2) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the age of the mother in the following age ranges: under 16 years, 16 to 19 years, 20 to 24 years, 25 to 29 years, 30 to 34 years, and 35 years plus;

(3) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents in Wales and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the age of the mother in the following age ranges: under 16 years, 16 to 19 years, 20 to 24 years, 25 to 29 years, 30 to 34 years and 35-plus years.

Mrs. Currie: Tables giving the information for the age-groups under 16 years and 16 to 19 years have been placed in the Library. Statistics for the remaining age groups requested are given in table 7b of "Mortality Statistics perinatal and infant: social and biological factors 1984", a copy of which is in the Library. These statistics are derived from records which link the details of the infant's death with the details collected at birth registration.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(2) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 plus-g and unstated birthweight;

(3) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents (i) in England and (ii) in England and Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000 g plus and unstated birthweight;

(4) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postnatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations ICD 740-759; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories, under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 4,000-plus g and unstated birthweight;

(5) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority (i) the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with congential malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories, under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000-plus g, and unstated birthweight;

(6) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000-plus g, and unstated birthweight;

(7) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759); and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000-plus g, and unstated birthweight;

(8) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) as their underlying cause; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000-plus g, and unstated birthweight;

(9) if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales (i) the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to the following birthweight categories: under 1,500 g, 1,500 to 1,999 g, 2,000 to 2,499 g, 2,500 to 2,999 g, 3,000 to 3,499 g, 3,500 to 3,999 g, 4,000-plus g and unstated birthweight.

Mrs. Currie: Tables giving this information have been placed in the Library. The statistics are derived from records which link the details of the infant's death with the details collected at birth registration.

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for (a) singleton and (b) all births in 1984 to residents in Wales the total number of live births and the number and rate per 1,000 of neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths with underlying causes other than congenital malformations (ICD 740-759) tabulated according to the following gestational ages: under 22 weeks, 22 to 24 weeks, 25 to 27 weeks, 28 to 31 weeks, 32 to 36 weeks, 37 to 41 weeks, 42-plus weeks and unstated gestational age.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not available in the form requested. Period of gestation is not collected at the registration of live births.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number and rate per 1,000 live birth of post neo-natal deaths by months of occurrence (a) from sudden infant death syndrome, (b) from respiratory diseases, (c) congenital abnormality, (d) others and (e) total for England and Wales (i) nationally, (ii) by district health authority and (iii) by regional health authority for each month from 1981 to the most recent available date.

Mrs. Currie: I very much regret that the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mucodyne

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now completed his consideration of the recommendation of the Advisory Committee on National Health Service Drugs in relation to Mucodyne; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 21 January, at column 635.

Maternity Pay

Mr. Sims asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce the arrangements by which employers will be reimbursed for payments of statutory maternity pay and compensated for their share of the national insurance contributions paid on them, and the rates of such compensation for both statutory maternity pay and statutory sick pay from 6 April 1987.

Mr. Major: The arrangements for reimbursing employers for their payments of statutory maternity pay and compensating them for the associated secondary (employers') national insurance contributions will be the same as those now operating for statutory sick pay. For the year beginning 6 April 1987 the compensation for secondary national insurance contributions will be at a rate of 7 per cent. of the statutory maternity pay paid to employees. This rate will also apply to payments of statutory sick pay. It has been calculated from estimates of aggregate payments of statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay in 1987-88 and the total secondary national insurance contributions payable on them.

I have today laid the necessary regulations.

Allowances

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many are in receipt of (a) mobility allowance and (b) attendance allowance; how many mobility allowance and attendance allowance recipients receive supplementary benefit or are dependants of someone receiving supplementary benefit; and what is his estimate as to the proportion of such people who either receive a higher-rate heating addition for themselves or have one paid to the head of the household on their account for the latest available year.

Mr. Major: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he will state, for each regional health authority, the allowance made for demographic factors and technical and service developments in determining (a) the total current expenditure and (b) the total capital expenditure for each year from 1979 to date;

(2) whether he will state, for each regional health authority, the difference between the amount requested and the amount actually spent on capital expenditure, broken down by new building and repair to existing capital stock, for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will state, for each regional health authority, the difference between the amount requested and the amount actually spent on capital expenditure on local authority personal social services, broken down by new building and repair to existing capital stock, for each year from 1979 to date.

Mr. Newton: Available information for England, including separate figures for new construction and works, is set out for the period 1979-80 to 1984-85, the latest year for which we have comprehensive data. An analysis of the figures on a regional health authority basis could be supplied only at disproportionate cost, but the tables provide data by individual local authority for 1984-85.

Local authority personal social services capital
(England figures in £ million cash)

| 1984-85 | 137·666 | 100·145 | 85·176 |

[1] The present capital expenditure control system commenced with effect from 1981-82, and data about bids under the loan sanction system which operated for earlier years are not available on a comparable basis.

[2] "New building" and "repair to existing capital stock" figures are not separately identified on local authority capital expenditure return forms.

[3] Health authority contributions to jointly financed schemes have been deducted in arriving at the gross spend figures in order to put them on a comparable basis with the bids figures.

[4] Separate figures for health authority contributions towards new construction and works expenditure are not available, so the new construction and works figures shown above include health authority contributions to jointly financed schemes.

Children (Disabilities)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the prevalence of (a) cerebral palsy and (b) other disabilities for children born in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not held by the Department on the incidence of cerebral palsy, but a study is currently being conducted on the standardisation of the recording and reporting of this condition. As regards other disabilities, I refer the hon. Member to the various OPCS publications available in the Library, including the "Monitoring on Congenital Malformation, Register (General Class)" up to 31 March 1984 AF/84/19, "Register of Blind and Partially Sighted" up to 31 March 1982 AF/82/7, "Register of Deaf and Hard of Hearing" up to 31 March 1983 AF/83/20.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated total cost and cost per capita of introducing free needles to drug addicts.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend announced in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Halifax (Mr. Galley) on 18 December 1986, at column 703, the establishment of a small number of schemes where drug misusers will be able both to receive counselling and exchange used needles and syringes for sterile equipment. Discussions about the operation of these schemes are currently under way in a number of locations. The costs involved will depend upon the detailed arrangements which have yet to be finalised but we expect them to be small.

With regard to the cost of supply free injecting equipment to drug misusers on a wider basis, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed (Mr. Beith) on 5 December 1986, at column 822.

Births (Medical Facilities)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number and rate for England and Wales, of (a) intensive care places and special care places per 1,000 live births weighing under 2,500 g for each regional and district health authority and nationally and (b) intensive care places per 1,000 live births weighing under 1,500 g for each regional health authority and nationally giving (i) the number of nursing and midwifery staff, whole-time equivalent, per place, (ii) the number of medical staff, whole-time equivalent, per place, (iii) the number of sites in which the places are available within each district and region, (iv) the number of places for which the equipment funding was provided by sources other than the National Health Service and (v) the number of whole-time equivalent (a) nurses/widwives and (b) medical staff per place provided by sources other than National Health Service funding for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry I cannot give the hon. Member the information he seeks. Although statistics are routinely collected on the availability of cots in special care baby units, there has been no generally agreed definition of "intensive care" to enable the provision made for it, the related staffing levels or other details requested to be recorded separately.

Expenditure

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report table 3.14.6 of the Government's expenditure plans 1987-88 to 1989-90 giving (a) the number of patients treated in each specialty and category, (b) the rate per 1,000 population of both cases/attendances and patients treated in each speciality and category, (c) the average percentage change per annum for (a) and (b), and (d) the cumulative percentage change for each speciality and category.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and at 1986-87 prices each year since 1979 to the latest available date for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) 0 to 4 years, (d) 5 to 15 years, (e) 16 to 65 years, (f) 65 to 70 years and (g) 75 years and over giving the amount spent on (i) personal social services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) hospital and community health services and (iv) total in England.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total public expenditure on health and personal social services in 1978-79; what it is in the current year and what is the projection for 1988-89, measured in real terms; and, in each case, what percentage of total public expenditure and of gross domestic product these figures represent.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 3 February 1987, c. 584]: The information is as follows:

Health and Personal Social Services (UK)

| | 1978-79 outturn £ million | 1986-87 estimated outturn £ million | 1988-89 cash plans[5] £ million |
|---|---|---|---|
| Capital and current expenditure[1] | | | |
| (i) in cash terms | 9,231 | 22,318 | 24,690 |
| (ii) at 1985-86 prices[2] | 17,413 | 21,668 | 22,323 |
| Percentage of public expenditure planning total[3] | 13·9 | 15·1 | 15·9 |
| Percentage of GDP[4] | 5·3 | 5·9 | 5·7 |

[1] Excludes income from charges and land sales.

[2] Revalued using the GDP deflator at market prices.

[3] Includes proceeds from privatisation and housing receipts but excludes reserve.

[5] For PSS 1988-89 plans will be reviewed in the light of LA budgets for 1987-88 and demographic and other factors.

NHS (Property Value)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his best estimate of the current value of National Health Service land and buildings in England.

Mrs. Currie: The chief valuer's office of the Inland Revenue estimates that the value of the National Health Service estate at current use is about £12·7 billion. The replacement value of the building stock is in the region of £20 billion.

Health Authorities (Economies)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total cash releasing cost improvements achieved by each health authority in each year from 1979 to the latest available date for England.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the regional totals of efficiency savings and cash releasing cost improvements for each year from 1981-82 to 1985-86 and the aggregate savings made by the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals in 1985-86. Figures for earlier years, and for individual districts, are not available centrally.

[1] Cash savings reported by regions.

[2] In 1983-84, regional health authorities were expected to achieve the efficiency savings shown, equivalent to some 0·5 per cent. of their cash allocations, but detailed returns on their achievement were not requested.

n/a = Not available.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total cash released through the competitive tendering process by each health authority, giving category of services and total, for each year from 1979 to the latest available date for England.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services pursuant to the reply of 23 January, giving the average number of available beds in National Health Service hospitals, if he will give the estimated saving to the National Health Service of cutting available beds for the mentally ill by 14·8 per cent. and for the mentally handicapped by 17·1 per cent. between 1979 and 1985; and what proportion of this saving has been transferred to developing community services for the mentally ill and handicapped for (a) children, (b) adults and (c) both.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

SCOTLAND

Electricity

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the figures of maximum demand for electricity consumption in Scotland on 12, 13 and 14 January, indicating the amounts of electricity exported to England on each of these days; and if he will give the total capacity of the Scottish generating system.

Mr. Lang: The information set out below has been obtained from the Scottish electricity boards. The total capacity of the Scottish generating system is 8794 MW; the table below shows the capacity which was available for use on the days in question.

|  | 12 January 1987 | 13 January 1987 | 14 January 1987 |
|---|---|---|---|
| (i) Maximum demand for electricity in Scotland (MW) | 6,053 | 6,042 | 5,942 |

| | 12 January 1987 | 13 January 1987 | 14 January 1987 |

| (iii) Total capacity of usable generating plant on Scottish system (MW) | 7,961 | 7,688 | 7,603 |

Labour Statistics

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current number of men currently unemployed in Dundee; and what number and percentage of them have been out of work for one year or more.

Mr. Lang: On 9 October 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of male unemployed claimants in the city of Dundee district was 10,227, of whom 4,860 (47·5 per cent.) had been unemployed for one year or more.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the latest unemployment figures for Dundee by district ward boundary; and if he will express each figure as an unemployment rate based upon data available from economic activity rates.

Mr. Lang: On 11 December 1986, the latest date for which information is available, the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward in the city of Dundee district was as shown in the table below.

City of Dundee district

| Ward name | Total unemployed |
|---|---|
| Ancra[illegible] | 181 |
| Ardler | 428 |
| Balgillo | 130 |

| Whitfield | 806 |
| Total | 14,803 |

Comparable figures for the economically active are not available, and it is therefore not possible to provide meaningful unemployment rates. However, as at the same date, the unemployment rate for the Dundee travel-to-work area, the smallest relevant geographical area for which a rate can be given, was 15·8 per cent.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish data showing the average length of time a person spends on the unemployment register by age group for Dundee, Tayside and Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the form requested. The table below relates to the median, and not the average, duration of unemployment for claimants in each age group who had completed a period of unemployment in the city of Dundee district, Tayside region and Scotland in December 1986, the latest date for which information in available.

Median duration of unemployment (weeks)

| Age group | City of Dundee district | Tayside region | Scotland |

Fish Farming (Grants)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now provide further details of the new grant schemes, agreed at the latest meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers, to be made available to fish and shellfish farming projects over the next 10 years.

Mr. John MacKay: The implementation of the structural measures under the EC regulation approved in December requires thorough examination in consultation with the other fisheries Departments and with the industry and this is now proceeding. We are not yet in a position to provide details about a new grants scheme which will have to be laid before Parliament for approval.

NHS (Private Patients)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how the cost of associated services for operations carried out privately within the National Health Service are calculated.

Mr. John MacKay: Charges to private patients treated in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland are based on the average cost of treating all patients (both National Health Service and private) in each hospital class. The charges include elements for nursing, medical and support costs; hotel services; other general services, including administration; capital overheads; and, where appropriate, blood handling costs. The charges are reviewed annually.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money health boards are written off as bad debts from private patients in the latest available year.

Mr. John MacKay: The figure for 1985-86 was £26,721.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many of the following type of operations have been carried out on private patients within the National Health Service (a) hip replacement, (b) general surgery and (c) other specialties; and if he can provide a breakdown by health board.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pay beds there have been within Tayside health board in each year since 1983; and what information he has on future trends in pay bed provision.

Mr. John MacKay: In each year since 1983 there have been 11 pay beds authorised within the Tayside health board area. I am not aware of any proposals which would change this figure.

Manufacturing Jobs

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate of the number of manufacturing jobs lost since June 1979.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Mr. Hamilton) on Tuesday 3 February 1987.

Private Homes for the Elderly

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the private homes for the elderly within Tayside region and the charges they levy.

(a) Private residential homes for the elderly registered by Tayside Regional Council as at 31 March 1986 (by local authority districts):

Perth and Kinross
Solsgirth House
Stormont Lodge
Dunearn House
Moncrieff
Glenhelenbank
Northlands
Parkhill House
Rigifa
Dalginross House
Craigmill House
Kincarrathie House
Ivy Lodge

Angus
Turin House
Mundamalla
Parklands
Lochbank House
Knockview House
Torkillie House
Caenlochan
Bracknowe

Dundee
Whitehorns
St. Helens

(b) Private nursing homes registered by Tayside Health Board as at 31 December 1985:

1. Fernbrae, Dundee
2. Moncrieff, Bridge of Earn
3. Roundelwood, Crieff
4. St. Johnston, Perth
5. West Bay, Dundee

Information on charges made by individual homes is not held centrally.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources central Government grant to regions and health boards for monitoring standards in private homes for the elderly.

Mr. John MacKay: Regional and islands councils have specific statutory duties in connection with the registration and inspection of voluntary and private residential homes and other accommodation provided under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968. Health boards have similar duties in connection with private nursing homes. The authorities concerned in both cases are expected to find the funds they require for these purposes from within general resources (including income from registration fees in the case of health boards).

Farm Workers (Tied Houses)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate how many farm workers are accommodated in tied houses; and if he will estimate how many of those houses' rates are paid by the employer.

Mr. John MacKay: It is estimated that out of 21,000 regular hired workers in Scottish agriculture about 14,000 occupy tied cottages, and of those about 11,000 have their rates paid by the farmers.

Regional Aid

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total annual value of regional aid paid to firms in Greenock and Port Glasgow in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Total payments of regional selective assistance (RSA) under section 7 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 to firms in Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency are set out in the table:

| Year | Total Payments (£ million) |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 1·0 |
| 1980-81 | 2·6 |
| 1981-82 | 2·8 |
| 1982-83 | 1·5 |
| 1983-84 | 0·9 |
| 1984-85 | 0·9 |
| 1985-86 | 3·8 |

Comprehensive information on payments of regional development grant (RDG) on a parliamentary constituency basis is not available. However, payments of RDG exceeding £25,000 to firms in the Greenock and Port Glasgow employment local office areas are set out in the table:

| Year | Total Payments £ million |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 0·5 |
| 1980-81 | 1·0 |
| 1981-82 | 5·1 |
| 1982-83 | 7·6 |
| 1983-84 | 2·4 |
| 1984-85 | 8·1 |
| 1985-86 | 8·8 |

Prison Officers

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full-time women prison officers are employed in Scottish prisons.

Mr. Lang: There were 174 full-time women prison officers employed in the Scottish prison service on 1 January 1987.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many auxiliary women prison officers are employed in Scottish prisons.

Mr. Lang: There were 18 auxiliary women prison officers employed in the Scottish prison service on 1 January 1987.

Children (Disabilities)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the prevalence of (a) cerebral palsy and (b) other disabilities for children born in each of the last five years.

Mr. John MacKay: At present comprehensive information on the prevalence of disability is not available centrally. Some information about the prevalence of certain disabilities is available from the handicapped children's register maintained by the information services division of the Common Services Agency, from which the information set out in the table has been extracted. Methods of improving the collection of data of this nature are currently being investigated.

Age at 31 December 1985

| | Cerebral palsy | Other disability |
|---|---|---|
| <1 | 3 | 144 |
| 1 | 28 | 284 |
| 2 | 41 | 326 |
| 3 | 63 | 479 |
| 4 | 64 | 525 |

Births (Medical Facilities)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number and rate of 1,000 live births of (a) intensive care and special care places per 1,000 live births weighing under 2,500 g for each regional and district health authority and (b) intensive care places per 1,000 live births weighing under 1,500 g for each regional health authority and nationally giving (i) the number of nursing and midwifery staff, whole-time equivalent, per place, (ii) the number of medical staff, whole-time equivalent, per place, (iii) the number of sites in which the places are available within each district and region, (iv) the number of places for which the equipment funding was provided by sources other than the National Health Service and (v) the number of whole-time equivalent (a) nurses or midwives and (b) medical staff per place provided by sources other than National Health Service funding for each year since 1979 to latest available date.

Neo-natal Deaths

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number and rate per 1,000 live births of post neo-natal deaths by month of occurance (a) from sudden infant death syndrome, (b) respiratory diseases, (c) congenital abnormality, (d) others and (e) total for Scotland (i) nationally, and (ii) by health board for each month from 1981 to the most recent available date.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Health and Social Services (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and 1986-87 prices each year since 1979 to the latest available date for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) 0 to four years, (d) five to 15 years, (e) 16 to 64 years, (f) 65 to 74 years and (g) 75 years and over giving the amount spent on (i) personal social services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) hospital and community health services and (iv) total in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average number of beds available in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland nationally and for each health board for 1979 and 1985 and the percentage change in each case from 1970 to 1985 for (a) acute, (b) geriatric, (c) mental illness, (d) mental handicap, (e) maternity and (f) all specialities.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is as follows.

NHS (Property Value)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give his best estimate of the current value of National Health Service buildings and land in Scotland.

Mr. John MacKay: The information which is held centrally relates to NHS residential accommodation in Scotland which, on the basis of a study in 1985, was valued at about £180 million. The current market value of property in Scotland is assessed only when it is decided to dispose of surplus land.

NHS (Cash Release)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total cash-releasing cost improvements advanced by each health board in each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. John MacKay: Information on cash-releasing cost improvements has been sought from health boards only since 1985-86. The cash-releasing cost improvements achieved in 1985-86 and boards' estimates for 1986-87 are as follows.

£'000

| Health Board | 1985-86 | 1986-87 |
|---|---|---|
| Argyll and Clyde | 515 | 1,666 |

Boards are permitted to retain the sums released by cost improvements.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total cash released through the competitive tendering process by each health board, giving category of service and total, for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. John MacKay: Scottish health boards and the Common Services Agency were first asked in 1983 to test the cost-effectiveness of their domestic, catering and laundry services by putting them out to tender. They have been asked to adopt a programme of competitive tendering which should be completed by April 1988. Boards' latest estimates of savings directly attributable to competitive tendering are given below. In addition significant savings have been made by efforts to improve the efficiency of the relevant in-house services.

The three island health boards — Orkney, Shetland and the Western Isles — were exempted from seeking tenders because of size and geography.

Hypothermia

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the number of deaths attributed to hypothermia in each year since 1979 in (a) Orkney and (b) Shetland.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce the statistics for the assisted places scheme in the 1986-87 school session in Scotland, and the income scale which will apply to the scheme in school session 1987-88.

Mr. John MacKay: At the beginning of the current school session there were 2,574 pupils receiving assistance under the assisted places scheme. Additional pupils will be admitted to assisted places throughout the 1986-87 school session.

Of the 2,574 pupils now in the scheme, 1,198 (46·5 per cent.) attended a fee-paying school prior to taking up an assisted place. The corresponding proportion for the new intake of pupils joining the scheme at the beginning of the current session was 38 per cent.

The scheme continues to concentrate assistance on lower income families. In 1986-87, 1,275 pupils (49·5 per cent. of those in the scheme) will be receiving full fee remission because they have a family income of £6,806 per annum or less. A further 253 pupils (10 per cent.) have family incomes between £6,807 and £8,000 per annum and 109 (4 per cent.) between £8,001 and £8,500.

For school session 1987-88 my right hon. and learned Friend proposes to lay regulations before the House in due course providing for progressive parental contributions for one assisted pupil in relation to family income as follows:

|---|---|
| That part (if any) which exceeds £6,806 but does not exceed £7,400 | 9 |
| That part (if any) which exceeds £7,400 but does not exceed £8,005 | 12 |
| That part (if any) which exceeds £8,005 but does not exceed £9,204 | 15 |
| That part (if any) which exceeds £9,204 but does not exceed £11,049 | 21 |
| That part (if any) which exceeds £11,049 but does not exceed £13,458 | 24 |
| That part (if any) which exceeds £13,458 | 33 |

The relevant income scale is open-ended, but the remission can, of course, be given only where the parental contribution is less than the school tuition fee.

Legislation

Mr. Sean Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Scotland on what occasions since June 1979 his Department had to (a) introduce amending legislation to legislation introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such legislation had been successfully challenged in the courts and (b) amend or withdraw orders introduced since June 1979, because of doubts about legality or because such orders had been successfully challenged in the courts.

Mr. Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 63]: The costs of a comprehensive reply would be disproportionately high, but the following cases appear relevant.

Clauses 14 and 15 of the Local Government Finance Bill presently before Parliament do not purport to amend existing statute but are concerned to confirm existing administrative practices in ascertaining local authority expenditure or estimated expenditure in Scotland.

Section 4 of the National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1986 followed a successful challenge to a determination made under powers conferred by regulations made under section 7 of the Health and Social Security Act 1984.

Section 26 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1985 clarified an ambiguity in sections 58B(3) and 58(E)1 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, as inserted by the Health and Social Services and Social Security Adjudications Act 1983, revealed in a sheriff court decision in 1984.

The Control of Pollution (Territorial Sea) (Scotland) Revocation Regulations 1985 (No. 1985/178 (s.9)), made following queries by the Joint Committee on Statutory Instruments, revoked the Control of Pollution (Territorial Sea) (Scotland) Regulations 1984 (No. 1984/867 (s.86)).

Scottish Development Agency

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will update his answer of 6 March 1986, Official Report, c. 251, to show at 1986 prices Government expenditure on the Scottish Development Agency in each year since the agency was established; and what is his estimate for each year until 1988.

Mr. Lang [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 534]: Net public expenditure on the agency for the financial years 1976-77 to 1985-86, together with the estimated outturn for 1986-87 and the planned level for 1987-88, all at 1985-86 prices, are shown below.

|  | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1976-77 | 37·5 |
| 1977-78 | 83·1 |
| 1978-79 | 99·0 |
| 1979-80 | 104·0 |
| 1980-81 | 107·0 |
| 1981-82 | 94·0 |
| 1982-83 | 116·6 |
| 1983-84 | 97·8 |
| 1984-85 | 81·2 |
| 1985-86 | 94·9 |
| 1986-87 | 88·9 |
| 1987-88 | 88·9 |

As Government expenditure on the SDA is expressed in net terms, the figures are not illustrative of total agency resources over the years. This also partly explains the variations between years.

DEFENCE

Research Establishments

Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will define the terms of reference of the small firms members on the management boards of defence research establishments.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Small firms members will participate in the work of the management boards of defence research establishments on the same basis as other external members, serving on an individual basis and not as representatives of their company. They will bring to the boards the benefit of their experience of industry and commerce in general, and of the small firms sector in particular. Their role will be advisory, but they will be encouraged to participate actively in the discussion of the establishment's plans for the future.

Multi-launch Rocket Project

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on the multi-launch rocket system project; when he expects the first regiment will be equipped; how many regiments in total will be equipped with multi-launch rocket systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The contract for European production of MLRS was signed in May 1986. The United Kingdom requirement is to equip three regiments with MLRS, commencing around the end of the decade.

One-tonne Vehicle (Replacement)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make a decision on the replacement of the one-tonne vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The assessment of the competitive proposals for this vehicle is still continuing. A decision will be made when it is complete.

All-terrain Battlefield General Purpose Vehicle

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about trials of an all-terrain battlefield general purpose vehicle.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Competitive evaluation trials of vehicles to meet this requirement started in September 1986 and will complete shortly.

Defence Projects (Costs)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 26 January, if he will indicate the number of projects within each of the specified expenditure bands, details of which have not been publicised on grounds of national security or on other grounds.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The expenditure bands listed by the hon. Member in his earlier question cover a very large number of projects. Some of these have been publicised, others have not. It would not be possible without disproportionate effort to identify those in the latter category.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence if Sir Gordon Downey or an official of the National Audit Office has been informed of each defence project where the project definition cost has exceeded £10 million since 1981.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee was notifed of each defence project where the project definition cost exceeded £10 million before 7 October 1986;

(2) if the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee has been notified of each defence project where the project cost has exceeded £250 million.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since 1983 the PAC has been informed of all such projects through the major projects statement except where this was precluded on grounds of national security. The arrangements for informing the Chairman of the PAC of projects excluded from the major project statement were set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) on 2 February, at column 517.

AIDS

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the pamphlet on AIDS is being distributed to members of the armed services.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 22 January 1987, at columns 731-32. In addition to those detailed measures to educate and inform service personnel of the dangers of AIDS, we are currently examining the supply of copies of the DHSS pamphlet "AIDS: Don't Die of Ignorance" for distribution to all single personnel, those in barracks or aboard ships, or serving overseas who might not otherwise have been covered by the recent postal drop. All personnel will, in any event, receive the comprehensive Health Education Council booklet "AIDS—What Everybody Needs to Know".

Falklands Fisheries

Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis the charter for the patrol vessels for the Falkland Islands fishery patrol was placed; and what plans he has to encourage competitive tendering for charters and contracts for vessels to meet his Department's requirements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I shall write to my hon. Friends.

Mr. Duncan Campbell

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates in 1986 he sent letters to Mr. Duncan Campbell.

Mr. George Younger: None.

ENVIRONMENT

Beaches (Cleanliness)

12. Mr. Sedgemore asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the quality of bathing water at the beaches in the United Kingdom, in regard to the European Economic Community regulations related to coastal bathing water.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the answers which my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for local government and the environment in Scotland and I gave yesterday, we are now under a formal obligation to ensure that a much larger number, namely 389, of our bathing waters meet the directive's quality standards. We have been surveying the great majority of these in the last year and first indications are that more than half of them already comply with the standards set in the EEC "bathing water" directive.

37. Sir Peter Blaker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about measures taken to ensure that the waters around Britain's coast meet the European Community's standards of cleanliness.

Mr. Waldegrave: Some £70 million is being spent annually on schemes related to the improvement of bathing water quality in the United Kingdom. Of the waters included in the survey I announced in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 18 December 1985, more than half already meet the standards set out in the EEC "bathing water" directive. We expect the spending programme to lead to a steady improvement in the quality of our coastal bathing waters. One of the major schemes is at Blackpool, where the intention is to bring the waters up to the directive's standards. Details of the scheme are being finalised. It will involve substantial re-sewering and probably the disposal of sewage a long way out to sea. In total, it is estimated that some £35 million will be spent and that the scheme will be fully operational by 1993.

On 3 February I announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend that 366 bathing waters in England and Wales and Northern Ireland were acknowledged to be within the scope of the EEC "bathing water" directive (76/160/EEC) including four at Blackpool. On the same day my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Scotland, with responsibility for local government and the environment, in a reply to a question from my Friend the Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Corrie) announced that 23 waters in Scotland were acknowledged to be within the scope of the directive. We are under an obligation to see that all these waters meet the directive's standards.

Bed-and-breakfast Accommodation

19. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make more resources available to local authorities in respect of bed-and-breakfast cost for homeless people.

Mr. John Patten: Local authorities have been asked to concentrate their available resources on homeless people and others in special need; it is for them to decide how to accommodate people they have accepted as homeless. Recent Government measures to help reduce reliance on bed-and-breakfast accommodation were set out in answer to a question by the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 16 January. Further steps are continually being considered by us and, I am sure, by the authorities most concerned.

Housing Investment Programme

20. Miss Boothroyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the reduction in real terms in total housing investment programme allocations since 1979-80.

Mr. John Patten: The housing investment programme allocation total has been reduced in real terms by 69 per cent. since 1979-80. However, since 1981 local authorities have been making increasing use of the proceeds from the sale of council dwellings to finance housing capital expenditure. In 1987-88 it is expected that more than half their capital expenditure will be financed in this way.

63. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in response to the announcement of housing investment programme allocations for 1987-88.

Mr. Tracey: A number of representations have been received.

Building Controls

21. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on building controls in green belt and rural areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain firmly committed to our policy for the protection of green belts as set out in DOE circular 14/84, and to the need to conserve environmentally valuable countryside.

Council Houses

22. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses were completed in each successive year from 1979 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. John Patten: The figures for England for the years 1979 to 1985 are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 74,000 |
| 1980 | 74,000 |
| 1981 | 55,000 |
| 1982 | 31,000 |
| 1983 | 30,000 |
| 1984 | 29,000 |
| 1985 | 23,000 |

The provisional number of completions in January to November last year is 17,000.

36. Mr. Andrew MacKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the number of empty council-owned dwellings in London.

Mr. Tracey: Figures on vacant council dwellings were provided by local authorities in their housing investment programme returns and the totals appear in column A99 of the "HIP1 (1986) all items print", which is in the Library.

42. Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will discuss with local government organisations the opportunities for improvements to council housing offered by his Department's urban housing renewal unit.

Mr. John Patten: Yes. I have already had discussions with representatives of the local authority associations—most recently at a meeting with them on 19 January. At that meeting I offered further discussions between officials about the opportunities being opened up by estate action (as the urban housing renewal unit is now known) for improving council housing. Members of the estate action team are in constant touch with individual local authorities; so far over 130 local authorities have had detailed discussions and visits from estate action.

Urban Regeneration Grant

23. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to pay the first urban regeneration grant.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Lawler) on 26 January, at column 49.

Local Government Finance

24. Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes to meet the local authority associations to discuss local government finance.

Mr. Chope: We have made clear our willingness to discuss the Government's proposals for the reform of local finance, if the associations wish to do so.

Structure Plans

25. Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it remains his policy to uphold statutory structure plans in determining planning appeals; and what are the factors which might lead him to accept departures from such plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: So far as they are material to the particular proposal, development plans must by law be taken into account in determining planning appeals. That does not mean, however, that they cannot be overriden by other material considerations.

Local Authorities (Tenders)

26. Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government propose to introduce legislation to stop local authorities imposing political conditions on firms tendering for contracts.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible this Session.

Water Rate

27. Mr. Jack Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the representations he has received from water authorities in respect of the 1987-88 water rate.

Mr. John Patten: It is not normal practice to publish such representations.

Local Government Reform

28. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of manpower savings as a result of the abolition of the Greater London council and metropolitan counties.

Mr. Chope: The Government forecast in November 1984 that 7,000 posts would be saved. Our most recent analysis suggests that some 6,300 posts were saved immediately on abolition as compared with the figure of 7,000 which my right hon. Friend gave on 18 December 1986 on the information then available to him.

I remain confident that the original forecast will be fully realised as the residuary bodies wind down. For example, the London residuary body alone still employs over 3,000 staff.

North of England

29. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the measures which he has taken since June 1983 to assist the north of England.

Mr. Ridley: My Department deploys a range of measures to assist those areas of England, including many northern industrial areas, which are experiencing difficulties in adjusting to changing economic and social circumstances.

I have announced the establishment of four new urban development corporations. These are in addition to the existing measures which include the urban programme; enterprise zones; and grants for urban development, urban regeneration and derelict land, the vast proportion of which go to northern industrial areas. The introduction of the uniform non-domestic rate will also cut rate bills substantially for businesses in most parts of the north. In addition rate support grant redistributes about £1 billion from London and the south-east.

Cowboy Builders

30. Mr. Burt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the Government doing to help protect home owners against cowboy builders.

Mr. John Patten: To help prevent the problems caused to many thousands of home owners by the activities of so-called cowboy builders, I am settng up, with the National Home Improvement Council and Care and Repair Ltd., 50 new centres that will offer practical advice and help, particularly to the elderly, about finding reputable builders and ensuring that work is carried out satisfactorily. The Government are meeting half the £6 million cost of this project. I have also set up a working party to look at the many problems associated with smaller building works. The working party will focus particularly on steps that might be taken by the industry to improve its performance in this area. I have asked it to reply by the end of the year.

Political and Sexual Propaganda

31. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce details of the Government's further proposals to prevent local authorities using ratepayers' money to fund political and sexual propaganda; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: We intend to include proposals to reinforce part II of the Local Government Act 1986 in the Bill which will contain the proposals to promote efficiency in local government mentioned in the Gracious Speech.

Party Political Expenditure

32. Mr. Spencer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received on the provisions of the Local Government Act 1985 dealing with expenditure for party political purposes.

Dr. Boyson: My right hon. Friend has received numerous representations about one-sided publicity on matters of political controversy issued by local authorities at the expense of ratepayers and taxpayers, and in favour of the Government's stated intention of reinforcing the ban on party political publicity in section 2 of the 1986 Act.

UK 2000

33. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of UK 2000.

Mr. Waldegrave: By next month UK2000 expects to have 92 projects under way. A total of 2,600 community programme workers and 5,500 volunteers will be working on these projects. Further major projects also coming forward include reclaiming and improving many sites along the west midlands railway and canal networks, and an "environment week" in April or May. UK2000 is seeking to ensure that projects are of high quality and that good training and work experience is offered to participants. To date, £500,000 private sector sponsorship in cash and kind has been attracted. UK2000 now operates in both England and Wales. The Prince of Wales committee represents the Welsh participating organisations. Arrangements are being made to extend UK2000 to Scotland.

Ramsar Convention

34. Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list information available to him on all current contracting parties to the Ramsar convention on wetlands of international importance, the number of sites each has designated and the total area this covers.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am advised by the Ramsar convention secretariat that the information is as follows:

Contracting Parties to the Ramsar Convention

| | Number of Wetlands Designated | Areas of Wetland (Hectares) |

Surplus Land

35. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about his policy of encouraging local authorities to release surplus land for development.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has received representations from individual local authorities, hon. Members and others in respect of over 160 sites, where he has given notice of his intention to direct those local authorities to dispose of their interest in the land. He has also received representations, some supporting and some opposing his policy, from the local authority associations, the House Builders Federation and from professional organisations, companies and individuals concerned with the development of under-used land. Representations have also been received from members of the public requesting my right hon. Friend to use his powers to register sites and to direct disposal.

Sports Council

38. Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss the council's grant for the coming year.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 17 December, at column 582. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet the chairman to discuss the Sports Council grant. I do, however, meet him on a regular basis to discuss issues relating to the developing of sport.

71. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last had an official meeting with the chairman of the Sports Council and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Tracey: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry). I last met the chairman on Thursday 22 January.

Rate Support Grant

39. Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received from local authorities in response to his rate support grant statement of 13 January.

Mr. Chope: We have received representations from eight local authorities in response to the rate support grant statement of 13 January.

Widdicombe Report

40. Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a statement on his response to the Widdicombe report on abuses in local government.

Dr. Boyson: My right hon. Friend invited comments on the Widdicombe report by the end of December 1986. So far we have received 334 representations. We shall need to examine these in full before reaching conclusions.

Nuclear Waste

41. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what developments have taken place over the last six months with regard to feasibility studies into the sub-sea disposal of nuclear waste.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department has been participating in an internationally co-ordinated programme of research into sub-sea disposal of nuclear waste, conducted under the auspices of the Nuclear Energy Agency of the OECD. The United Kingdom research will be complete by 31 March 1987, and reports on feasibility should be available by the middle of the year.

Rural Areas (Land Use)

43. Mrs. Shields asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received asking him to relax planning restrictions in rural areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

Housing Defects Act 1984

44. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made by local authorities in implementing the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Tracey: The latest information available to the Department indicates that by the end of September 1986 local authorities in England had repurchased some 3,700 properties and had given 400 grants for reinstatement under the legislation. Local authorities are now making good progress with an increasing proportion of properties being reinstated as more approved repair methods become available. The National House Building Council's subsidiary, PRC Homes Ltd., has now approved 28 repair systems, for eight different house types, covering over two thirds of all designated houses.

Litter

45. Sir Anthony Grant asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many convictions there were in each of the last three years for breaches of the Litter Act; what progress has been made by the committee chaired by Mr. Richard Branson; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of convictions for breaches of the Litter Act, in the last three years for which figures are available, are given in the table.

Mr. Richard Branson's committee—UK2000—has no responsibility for enforcing the Litter Act, and action to tackle the problem of litter is only one of its concerns.

A report on the progress of UK2000 is given in my answer today to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd).

Table

Persons convicted under the Litter Acts

| Year | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 1,684[1] |
| 1984 | 1,427[2] |
| 1985 | 1,355[2] |

[1] Under Litter Acts 1958, 1971.

[2] Under Litter Act 1983.

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to increase the penalties for dropping litter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. The maximum fine for littering is tied to the Home Office standard scale, which was increased to £400 in 1984. In 1985 the Government made it an arrestable offence for a person suspected of littering not to give his name and address to a policeman on request.

The Government believe that the long-term solution to the litter problem must lie primarily in persuading the public not to drop litter. To this end we give financial support to the Keep Britain Tidy Group, which campaigns continuously against littering, in collaboration with local authorities, voluntary groups, industry and commerce.

Rates

46. Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the likely level of local authority rate increases in 1987-88.

60. Mrs. Roe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what average level of rate increases his Department is expecting for the year 1987-88.

Mr. Chope: We estimate that if authorities spend at the settlement spending assumption, the average percentage increase in rates in 1987-88 will be 1·2 per cent. Some authorities will have higher increases, while some will be able to reduce their rates. For most authorities, the settlement spending assumption allows for an increase in current expenditure of 5¼ per cent., which is well above inflation. This does not take account of the teachers' pay settlement.

Homeless and Badly Housed People

47. Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to help local authorities provide accommodation for homeless and badly housed single people below pensionable age.

Mr. Tracey: It is for local authorities to decide whom they are going to provide accommodation for, taking into account their statutory obligations to the homeless and people in unsatisfactory housing conditions. Recent Government measures from which single people among others stand to benefit were set out in replies to my hon. Friend the Member for South Ribble (Mr. Atkins) on 26 November and to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 16 January.

Private Rented Housing

48. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning measures to halt the decline in the private rented sector.

Mr. Tracey: We continue to receive a steady flow of representations on this issue.

New Towns

49. Mr. Dormand asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the three north-east new towns.

Mr. John Patten: As required under section 41 of the New Towns Act 1981, the Secretary of State is consulting the relevant local authorities on a proposal to wind up the Aycliffe and Peterlee and the Washington new town development corporations on 31 March 1988. Responses have been requested by 28 February 1987.

Housing (Right to Buy)

50. Mr. Powley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to inform people about the new right-to-buy provisions which have been introduced as a result of the Housing and Planning Act.

Mr. Tracey: The Department's booklet "Your right to buy your home" has been revised to take account of the changes, and copies are about to be sent to tenants of council flats and maisonettes. Later this month advertisements in the national press will draw attention to the new booklet, which tenants will be able to obtain by sending in a freepost coupon.

Pollution

51. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends meeting colleagues in the European Economic Community to discuss atmospheric and marine pollution and methods of reducing it.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall be attending an informal meeting of European Community Ministers on 13 February. It is expected that the Belgian presidency will put atmospheric pollution on the agenda.

52. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the Government's current plans to deal with pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave: We place a high priority on preserving and enhancing the quality of our environment, which we believe to be fully compatible with economic growth. We are taking a number of measures to deal with pollution in the United Kingdom and abroad. They include the following.

We are setting up a new unified pollution inspctorate. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution will come into being on 1 April. Its objectives will be to develop a more coherent approach to the control of industrial emissions and discharges to air, water or land in England and Wales and to provide advice that will help the other pollution control authorities to carry out their statutory responsibilities.

To tackle the problem of acid rain, we have authorised the CEGB to retrofit 6,000 MW of existing generating capacity with flue gas desulphurisation equipment. Any future coal-fired power stations will be required to be fitted with low acid-technology.

We propose new comprehensive legislation covering all aspects of industrial air pollution, as described in our recent consultation paper.

Our consultation paper "The Water Environment: The next Steps" set out the Government's proposals for maintaining standards of environmental protection after privatisation of the water industry. These include stronger safeguards against accidental pollution and statutory quality objectives and standards set by the Secretary of State. The new water pollution inspection function envisaged there is being set up as part of HMIP.

On anti-fouling paints, we will continue to exert pressure on the manufacturers and users of paints containing tributyl tin (TBT). Unless there is a marked improvement in TBT levels in sensitive waters, further action may have to be taken; this could include a ban on their use.

We have reached an agreement with the Paintmakers' Association of Great Britain, under which lead ceased to be added by member companies to white gloss, primer and undercoat paints from January 1986; and member companies will cease to add lead to all coloured gloss paints and varnishes from July 1987. We have tabled a memorandum at the EC's Environment Council calling for tighter controls on lead in paint in all member states and we shall be pursuing this within the Community.

We are taking a number of measures, both in the European Community and here in the United Kingdom, to encourage the sale and use of unleaded petrol and cars capable of running on it. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has announced his intention to create a tax differential in favour of unleaded petrol to offset its higher production costs.

We shall be playing a full part in European Year of the Environment. In that connection, we are sponsoring the international pollution abatement fair and conference in April. We shall continue to support the pollution abatement technology award scheme and the new Europewide scheme which is modelled on it.

We are also looking at ways in which the development of pollution abatement technology can be encouraged.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. is undertaking a multi-million pound capital programme at Sellafield which has already reduced discharges to the environment to one sixth of the levels in 1979; further reductions should be achievable in the 1990s.

Mr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to recast the Government's proposals for the maintenance of water quality and pollution control under a regime of privatised water authorities, to meet the European Commission's four criteria, set out by the Environment Commissioner in the European Parliament on 10 December 1986.

Mr. John Patten: When our detailed proposals for water privatisation are published in legislation in due course it will be possible for the hon. Member to make judgments upon them.

Mr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his policy on water privatisation in the light of representations made to him by the Council for the Protection of Rural England about the legal acceptability in European Economic Community terms of the Government's proposals for water pollution control under a privatised regime.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Newcastle-under-Lyme (Mrs. Golding).

Water Authorities and Environmental Protection Boards

53. Mr. Geraint Howells asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the funds allocated to the water authorities and environmental protection boards for each of the last five years and the relevant estimate for each of the next five years.

Mr. John Patten: Water authorities are given annual allocations of external finance in line with the controls which the Government exercise over all nationalised industries and consistent with industry totals published in annual public expenditure White Papers. External finance limits (EFLs) set for the five years to 1986-87 are set out in the table. EFLs for 1987-88 are also given. With the exception of Welsh water authority the 1987-88 figures exclude allocations for flood defence works which have yet to be notified to authorities. EFLs for later years will normally be notified only after public expenditure totals have been finalised.

External Finance Limits: Water Authorities

Community Charge

54. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what way he expects the proposed community charge for England and Wales to differ from that for Scotland.

Mr. Chope: The main features of the community charge will be the same throughout Great Britain. Inevitably, there will be a number of differences in the operation of the community charge in England and Wales and in Scotland, largely reflecting differences in the legal systems and administrative practice. My right hon. Friends have placed in the Library a document which sets out how they envisage the community charge working in England and Wales.

Lead

55. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest information on concentrations of lead in the air.

Mr. Waldegrave: Air lead levels in the first quarter of 1986 averaged 0·29 micrograms per cubic metre compared with 0·56 micrograms per cubic metre during the same period in 1985. This is a direct consequence of the Government's decision to reduce the maximum lead content of petrol with effect from 31 December 1985. Warren Spring Laboratory has now published a full report on these data and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

International Year of the Homeless

56. Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department has done to support the International Year of the Homeless.

Mr. Tracey: The Department is constantly considering ways of preventing and relieving homelessness in this country and will continue to do so during and after the Year. Measures already announced include the financial assistance we are giving for the International Year of Shelter for the Homeless Trust's leaflet aimed at preventing homelessness by informing young people about accommodation possibilities before they decide to leave home.

Gipsies

57. Mr. Lawler asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of pitches provided on official sites for gipsies by each authority in West Yorkshire.

Mr. Tracey: As at July 1986 the number of pitches provided on official sites in West Yorkshire is: 32 in Bradford; 16 in Leeds; 22 in Wakefield; and a nil return from Calderdale and Kirklees.

Construction Industry

58. Mr. Rowe asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the outcome of the forum on construction industry training held in January by the Minister of Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction, the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten).

Mr. John Patten: There was a wide measure of agreement at this forum which was called by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment, the hon. Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) and myself. As a result, the chairman of the construction industry training board agreed to put together proposals by the end of March to increase the number of entrants into craft training by 4,000. The board also agreed to prepare an action plan by the end of April which will cover: medium-term measures to deal with the skill shortages problem; ways of improving the provision and uptake of training for site managers and supervisors; and ways of improving the industry's investment in the training of experienced operatives and craftsmen.

Housing Statistics

59. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will inform the House of the number of households accepted as homeless, the number of council houses completed, the number of housing association houses coming into letting, whether as a result of new build or rehabilitation, and the estimate of the total number of private sector lettings in England and Wales, respectively, in 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Tracey: The numbers of new dwelling completions for local authorities and for housing associations in 1979 and in the first three quarters of 1986 appear in table 6.1 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1975-1985" and in table 1.2 of "Housing and Construction Statistics No. 27", which are available in the Library. Figures of dwellings renovated by housing associations in England are in tables 7.1 and 2.13, respectively, of the same publications.

In England, the estimated stock of dwellings rented from private owners at December 1979 was around 2,040,000. At September 1986 there were about 1,540,000 private rented dwellings.

English local authorities accepted 57,200 households as homeless in 1979. The figures for the first three quarters of 1986 appear in table 1(a) of press notice No. 13 issued by this Department on 16 January 1987, which is available in the Library.

For Welsh figures, I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Severe Weather Damage

61. Mr. Stan Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a special financial allowance to the local authorities to ensure that damage to pavements and roads caused by the recent bad weather is repaired as soon as possible.

Mr. Chope: No. General deterioration in road and pavement condition caused by a harsh winter is something highway authorities should be budgeting for and mention as they see fit in their annual transport policy and programmes submission to the Department of Transport.

Planning Decisions

62. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change the criteria for determining whether planning decisions are called in.

Mr. Tracey: As explained in paragraph 50 of our recent response to the Environment committee (Cm 43, "Planning: Appeals, Call-in and Major Public Inquiries," of 17 December 1986) my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales are considering this matter. Any resulting changes will be announced as soon as possible.

Liverpool

64. Mr. Heffer asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet Liverpool council leaders to discuss the city's budget proposals.

Mr. Chope: It is the responsibility of the Liverpool city council to balance its budget for 1987-88 within the resources available to it.

69. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay a visit to Liverpool to meet council leaders to discuss the city's budget proposals.

Mr. Chope: It is the responsibility of the Liverpool city council to balance its budget for 1987-88 within the resources available to it. My right hon. Friend has no present plans to visit Liverpool.

Nuclear Accidents

65. Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment his Department has made of the long-term effects on the environment of a worst case nuclear accident under adverse meteorological conditions.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) and for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) on Monday 2 February.

Planning Applications

66. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will monitor and make statistics available about the numbers and types of planning applications on established green belt land and the decisions thereon made by local planning authorities or himself.

Mr. Tracey: There is no central register of planning applications for development in the green belt. The number of appeals which, since 1985, have been recorded in the planning inspectorate's relevant case record system is too small to provide reliable statistical information at present.

Uncollected Council Rents

67. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the average percentage of annual council rents uncollected by local authorities; and what is the average for the inner London boroughs.

Mr. Tracey: According to the latest available comprehensive figures provided by local authorities, the average of cumulative arrears (expressed as a percentage of the annual rent collectable) for authorities in England was 5·7 per cent. and for the inner London boroughs 14·8 per cent.

Water Authorities

68. Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress and plans for privatisation of water authorities.

Mr. John Patten: As my right hon. Friend explained in his statement of 3 July 1986, we are preparing the necessary legislation and intend to proceed with the privatisation of the water authorities as soon as practicable.

London Marathon

70. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received to date about the organisation of the London marathon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Since my answer of 17 December 1986, at column 593, I have received one letter, from the chairman of the London visitor and convention bureau.

Sporting Championships

72. Mr. Ashton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial and other support is offered to cities bidding to host world and European championships in or on sport.

Mr. Tracey: We would wish to offer every diplomatic, promotional and administrative assistance for United Kingdom cities bidding to host international sporting events. Careful planning, skilled marketing and close liaison with potential sponsors by the city authorities and governing bodies of sport should obviate the need for public expenditure on such events.

The Sports Council may also assist local authorities in efforts to attract international events.

Middlesbrough

73. Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the rate base for Middlesbrough has changed for each of the past five years for commercial-industrial ratepayers.

Mr. Chope: Following is the available information on annual changes in non-domestic rateable values for Middlesbrough:

| | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 1982 | +1·4 |
| 1983 | −1·8 |
| 1984 | +2·3 |
| 1985 | +1·3 |
| 1986 | −3·2 |

Note: The underlying rateable values are net of mandatory reliefs on charitable properties and non-domestic voids.

Peak Park Planning Board

74. Mr. McLoughlin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to pay an official visit to the area administered by the Peak park planning board; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has no plans for a visit.

Block Grant

75. Mr. Patchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the cumulative reduction in block grant in real terms since 1981-82.

| | 1 Block grant in cash terms £ million | 2 Block grant at 1986 prices £ million | 3 Reduction from previous year at 1986 prices £ million |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 8,346 | 10,673 | — |
| 1982-83 | 8,349 | 9,955 | −718 |
| 1983-84 | 8,389 | 9,576 | −379 |
| 1984-85 | 8,412 | 9,204 | −372 |
| 1985-86 | 8,439 | 8,692 | −512 |
| 1986-87 | 8,302 | 8,302 | −390 |
| 1987-88 | 8,832 | 8,513 | +211 |
| | | | −2,160 |

Notes:

The figures in column 1 are the entitlements based on the latest RSG report or supplementary report for the year concerned. Those for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 are those included in the Secretary of State's announcement of his firm intentions for the rate support grant report 1987-88, the third supplementary report for 1985-86 and the first supplementary report for 1986-87 made on 13 January.

The figures in column 2 have been produced using the GDP deflator.

Business Rates

76. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what further representations he has received on his proposal for a unified business rate as a replacement for commercial rates.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has placed a summary of responses to the Green Paper in the Library. Since the consultation period ended a number of further representations have been received.

Inner City and Urban Renewal

77. Mr. Freeson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the building industry's Group of Eight to discuss inner city and urban renewal matters.

Mr. John Patten: I last saw the group on 23 July last year, when issues relating to urban regeneration were discussed.

Derelict Land Grants

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of derelict land grants made to the Corby development area in (a) 1985-86 and (b) 1986-87 to date.

Mr. John Patten: Following is the information:

Derelict land grants paid to

| | 1985-86£ million | [1]1986-87£ million |
|---|---|---|
| Corby DC | 2·13 | 2·73 |
| Commission for the New Towns | 0·02 | — |
| TOTAL | 2·15 | 2·73 |

[1] to date.

Home Insulation

Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to tighten up building regulations relating to the insulation of new homes.

Mr. John Patten: A consultative paper on proposals for changes to the regulations was circulated by the Department on 15 December. A copy has been placed in the Library. The proposals envisage higher standards for the conservation of fuel and power, but would allow greater flexibility on how these could be achieved.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out in tabular form for 1 April 1985 and 1 April 1986 (a) the total number of architects, including landscape architects, employed by the Property Services Agency and (b) the equivalent figure for the design office of the directorate-general of design services.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

| | 1 April 1985 | 1 April 1986 |
|---|---|---|
| (a) Architects (including Landscape Architects) in PSA | 419 | 444 |
| (b) Architects (including Landscape Architects) in the Design Office of the Directorate General of Design Services | 31 | 43 |

The figure for the design office at 1 April 1986 includes eight architects in the students training office, which was transferred from the directorate of civil accommodation in 1985-86.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total number of staff in post in the Property Services Agency on 1 April 1985 and 1 April 1986 respectively, identifying separately non-industrial and industrial staff.

Mr. Chope: The numbers of staff in post on 1 April 1985 and 1 April 1986 were as follows:

| | 1 April 1985 | 1 April 1986 |
|---|---|---|
| Property Services Agency | | |
| Non-industrial | 14,491 | 14,710 |
| Industrial | 11,354 | 10,361 |
| Total | 25,845 | 25,071 |
| The Crown Suppliers | | |
| Non-industrial | 1,375 | 1,417 |
| Industrial | 559 | 521 |
| Total | 1,934 | 1,938 |
| Overall Total | 27,779 | 27,009 |

The figures for 1 April 1985 include 1,549 staff wholly engaged on work for United States forces and those for 1 April 1986 include 1,608.

Metropolitan Areas

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made towards the introduction of unitary development plans in the metropolitan areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: I am today issuing for comment draft regulations which prescribe some of the procedures for preparing unitary development plans together with a draft circular and memorandum for local authorities. The drafts are being sent to the local authority associations and others for comment by 3 April. Copies of the letter and drafts are being placed in the Library.

Progress is being made in all the metropolitan areas towards the preparation of strategic guidance which my right hon. Friend will consider issuing to local planning authorities to assist them in preparing their unitary development plans. The London Planning Advisory Committee has been set up and is considering the scope and content of advice which the committee may offer about the strategic guidance for Greater London. In the other metropolitan areas arrangements are being made for the local authorities to prepare advice on the scope and content of the guidance.

Climatic Variability

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to implement the recommendations relating to his responsibilities in the report "Social and Economic Responses to Climatic Variability in the United Kingdom".

Mr. Tracey [pursuant to his reply, 27 January 1987, c. 174]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 5 February 1987

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Reyes Syndrome

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what requests for funding into research related to Reyes syndrome have been made to his Department; and what was the response.

Mr. Walden: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is the main Government agency for the promotion of medical research in the United Kingdom. I understand that the MRC has received two requests from the National Reyes Syndrome Foundation of the United Kingdom outlining proposed research studies. These requests were transferred to the council from the Department of Health and Social Security. The applicants have been invited to submit detailed project grant applications to the council.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what representation he has on each of the 14 Manpower Services Commission sector groups connected with the job training scheme;

(2) what representation he has on the advisory group for the development of the job training scheme;

(3) what representation he has in the modular accreditation development programme for the job training scheme;

(4) what representation he has on the technical control group of the job training scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is not represented on the groups referred to by the hon. Member. They are, I understand, informal groups involving the major examining and validating bodies. The MSC has brought them together with the immediate purpose of examining the qualifications which might most appropriately be made available for the new scheme. I understand that the MSC will be further consulting the National Council for Vocational Qualifications, on which Her Majesty's Inspectorate has an observer, on the issues relating to qualifications which arise from the job training scheme. Mr. Oscar De Ville, chairman of the NCVQ, has said that the council will work closely with the MSC to help ensure that the qualifications are of high quality and are relevant to the standards required by employers.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to involve Her Majesty's inspectorate in ensuring the quality of education and training delivery in the job training scheme.

Mrs. Rumbold: Where Her Majesty's inspectors observe job training scheme provision in the course of their inspections of colleges they will discuss their judgments about its quality with those concerned and comment, as appropriate, in their published reports on the colleges. In addition, I understand that the MSC's training standards advisory service is likely to be involved in inspecting the quality of the new scheme.

Departmental Vote (Cash Limits)

Mr. Pawsey asked the Secretary of State for education and Science if he will give details of any revised cash limits for his Department's votes for 1986-87.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Cash limits for six of the Department's Votes for 1986-87 have been revised to reflect estimated outturn. The adjustments are as follows:

| Class | Vote | Description of Expenditure | Current cash limit | £'000 Revision | Revised cash limit |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| XII | 1 | Schools, further education and other services | 211,094 | −130 | 210,964 |
| XII | 3 | Universities, etc. | 1,564,274 | −1,507 | 1,562,767 |
| XII | 4 | Central Administration | 53,604 | +1,032 | 54,636 |
| XII | 5 | Research Councils etc.: Agricultural and Food Research Council | 52,679 | +4,470 | 57,149 |
| XII | 8 | Research Councils, etc.: Science and engineering Research Council | 315,529 | +658 | 316,187 |
| XII | 9 | Research Councils, etc.: Economic and Social Research Council | 23,634 | +186 | 23,820 |

Supplementary Estimates for Votes 4, 5, 8 and 9 will be presented for parliamentary approval.

The increase on Vote 4 is required to cover the part-year costs of an increase in the Department's manpower ceiling at 31 March 1987 from 2,417 to 2,450 and to meet other increases in the level of activity. The Department's running cost target for 1986-87 has accordingly been revised from £54 million to £55 million.

The increase on Vote 5 is required to assist with staff redundancy costs following the contraction of commissioned research and development work.

On Vote 8 the increase is required to enable the payment by the council of contributions towards the United Kingdom subscription to the European Space Agency on behalf of the department of the Environment and the Department of Transport.

The increase on Vote 9 is required to cover costs arising from unexpectedly high transfers out of the council's superannuation scheme; and to finance 15 new studentships for whom responsibility has transferred from the Department of the Environment to the council.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Flood Defence Work

Mr. Moynihan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is yet in a position to make an announcement about finance for water authorities' flood defence work in 1987-88.

Mr. Jopling: Yes. The Secretary of State for Wales and I have reviewed the arrangements for grant-aid for water authorities' flood defence works. Under current arrangements the grant rates for each water authority are recalculated annually. We have decided to end these arrangements and to substitute a system under which each water authority in England and Wales, or, as appropriate, local land drainage committee, will qualify for one of four grant rates, depending on its resources and flood defence requirements. The grant rates will be 15, 35, 45 and 55 per cent. There will also continue to be a sea defence supplement of 15 per cent.; and we are increasing the maximum rate of grant for sea defence schemes from 61 to 65 per cent. The new arrangements will provide the water authorities with a firmer basis for forward planning.

I am today notifying the water authorities in England of their new grant rates and of their grant earning ceilings for flood defence works for 1987-88. Most areas will qualify for higher rates of grant than in the current year. In particular, all areas with significant sea defence works will receive higher grant rates. In England as a whole this extra grant will amount to £4·5 million, making a total grant commitment of £16·6 million. Almost half the extra money will be devoted to the east coast sea defences. It has been possible to accept in full the Anglian water authority's bid for resources for 1987-88, with the result that Anglian is expected to receive over £3 million more than the sum originally allocated for 1986-87. Most of the remainder of the extra grant will be devoted to a major sea defence scheme at Seaford in Sussex.

The increased grant for 1987-88 follows an increase of £1·25 million in grant-aid in the current year, most of which was spent on works on the east coast.

Monetary Compensatory Amounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby on 17 December 1984, Official Report, column 34, concerning monetary compensatory amounts, what effect the recent realignment of currencies within the European monetary system has had or will have on the coefficient used in calculating the monetary compensatory amounts; what effect this has on the prices paid to farmers in the United Kingdom and in other EEC countries; and if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the increase in the central rate of the European currency unit in each year since 1973, and (b) the increase in the rate for common agricultural policy prices and the corresponding increases for the United Kingdom and West Germany.

Mr. Gummer: Following the EMS realignment on 12 January, the coefficient used in calculating MCAs has been increased by approximately 2·54 per cent. This has no effect on CAP support prices, expressed either in ecus or in national currencies. The ecu, which was created in 1979, has both a central rate and one or more representative rates for CAP purposes (green rates) against the national currencies of each member state. It is therefore not possible to provide the table requested.

Lyminge Forest (Land Purchase)

Mr. Maclennan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has regarding proposals to purchase land on the site of Lyminge forest in Kent; whether discussions have taken place with the Forestry Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 29 October 1986, at columns 165-66.

Outline planning permission for a leisure development at this site was not granted, and the land has not been placed on the market.

Toxic Waste

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there have been any applications to the United Kingdom Government to carry out a test-burn of toxic PCB wastes at sea in 1986 or 1987.

Mr. Gummer: No.

Food Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent sales of food have been negotiated in relation to the provision of butter and beef to the Soviet Union; and what is the sale price in terms of pence per pound.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 3 February 1987, c. 574.]: The most recent sale of butter to the USSR was in November 1986. None was sold from the United Kingdom. Had any sales taken place from the United Kingdom, the price would have been approximately 10p/lb.

The regulation under which intervention beef could have been made available to traders for bulk sales to third countries including the USSR, was agreed in December 1985. No sales have taken place recently from the United Kingdom. The most recent prices (in sterling terms) at which this beef would have been made available to traders are as follows:

Bone-in forequarters: 32/lb.
Bone-in hindquarters: 49p/lb.
Boneless cuts: 38p to 59p/lb depending on the cut.

These prices include export refunds and United Kingdom mcas where applicable.

The prices at which sales to the USSR are concluded are a matter for the traders concerned.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list in the Official

Report those projects supported by Her Majesty's Government which assist African countries to prevent the spread of AIDS;

(2) whether he has received any representations from developing countries requesting help to combat the spread of AIDS;

(3) whether he has received any representations from the World Health Organisation requesting help to combat the spread of AIDS;

(4) what proportion of his Department's overall budget is spent helping African and other developing countries to tackle AIDS;

(5) whether any consideration is being given to increasing resources available to African countries to combat AIDS.

Mr. Eggar: We believe that support for programmes co-ordinated by the World Health Organisation is the most effective way of assisting developing countries to cope with AIDS. We have recently given £250,000 to the WHO's global AIDS programme for work in such countries; this represents about 0·02 per cent. of the estimated net aid programme for 1986-87. The WHO is planning expansion of its work as a matter of urgency. When we have details, we expect to provide some additional support.

In response to a few direct requests for assistance from aid recipient countries, we are providing specialist advice, training and some small items of medical equipment.

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made by his Department on the long-term effect of AIDS on the economic position of eastern and central African countries.

Mr. Eggar: Our assessment is that the spread of AIDS, if unchecked, would have a serious detrimental effect on the economic and social development of any country. ODA officials, in consultation with other concerned organisations, are considering what analytical work is needed to determine the relationship between AIDS and economic and social change in developing countries.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Zircon Satellite

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date he became aware of the involvement of Duncan Campbell in a proposed BBC television programme on the Zircon satellite.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's answer to him on 26 January 1987.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General on what date he consulted Treasury Counsel, as referred to by the Solicitor-General on 27 January, Official Report, column 274, about the possibility of obtaining an injunction against the New Statesman in connection with publication of material about the Zircon satellite.

The Solicitor-General: On 20 January 1987.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if he will place in the Library a record of discussions between his office and Mr. Duncan Campbell in 1986 concerning publication of material about the Zircon project.

The Solicitor-General: There have been no such discussions.

Mr. Duncan Campbell

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General how many written communications passed between himself and Mr. Duncan Campbell in 1986; and if he will place copies in the Library.

The Solicitor-General: Three written communications passed between my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General and Mr. Duncan Campbell in 1986, one from Mr. Campbell and two from the Attorney-General. None of them contained any reference to satellites, intelligence gathering or GCHQ.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falklands Fisheries

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications he has received for fishing licences in the Falkland Islands exclusive fisheries zone; from which countries these applications have been made; and how many from each country.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 532 applications for licences to fish in the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone (FICZ) from 1 February until 30 June 1987 were received by the Falkland Islands Government. The table gives a breakdown by country and fishery. A number of these applications applied to both of the two fishing grounds for which licences have been granted.

| Country | Area A (Illex squid fishery) North of 51°20′ | Area B (Loligo squid fishery) South of 51°20′ |
|---|---|---|
| Japan | 146 | 19 |
| Republic of Korea | 117 | 9 |
| Taiwan | 116 | 0 |
| United Kingdom | 3 | 4 |
| Spain | 29 | 65 |
| Poland | 42 | 27 |
| Netherlands | 9 | 9 |
| France | 1 | 1 |
| Federal Republic of Germany | 2 | 2 |
| Italy | 9 | 9 |
| Greece | 0 | 1 |
| Chile | 1 | 2 |
| (Flags of Convenience) | 15 | 9 |
| TOTAL | 490 | 157 |

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many settlement applications at the post in Dhaka were (a) received, (b) granted, (c) refused, (d) deferred at first interview, (e) lapsed, (f) outstanding and (g) outstanding and awaiting first interview for each quarter since the beginning of 1985.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is given in the following table.

Number of persons[2]

| Applications | 1985 1st quarter | 2nd quarter | 3rd quarter | 4th quarter | Year | 1986 1st quarter | 2nd quarter | 3rd quarter |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Newly received | 1,780 | 1.880 | 2,390 | 1,980 | 8,030 | 1,630 | 1,570 | 1,520 |
| Granted[3] | 1,260 | 1,300 | 1,760 | 1,680 | 6,000 | 1,320 | 900 | 1,050 |
| Refused initially | 1,140 | 900 | 1,080 | 1,140 | 4,260 | 1,170 | 820 | 430 |
| Deferred[4] | 730 | 750 | 1,000 | 990 | 3,470 | 1,430 | 1,300 | 1,320 |
| Lapsed or withdrawn[5] | 120 | 120 | 160 | 210 | 610 | 560 | 990 | 870 |
| Outstanding at end of period | 12,600 | 12,500 | 12,500 | 11,900 | 11,900 | 10,800 | 9,800 | 9,300 |
| Of which: | | | | | | | | |
| Awaiting first interview | 10.500 | 10,400 | 10,400 | 9,500 | 9,500 | 7,700 | 6,500 | 5,500 |

[2] Wives, children, persons for immediate settlement, husbands, male fiancees, and female fiancees since 26 August 1985 (when the entry clearance requirement for female fiancees was introduced).

[3] Including applications granted on appeal.

[4] Including applications referred to the Home Office for decision.

[5] The increase in 1986 reflects applicants for entry clearance who had a claim to the right of abode being considered instead for a certificate of settlement or a confirmation of the right of abode.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the maximum, minimum and average times taken between the deferral of a decision on a settlement application made at the post in Dhaka and the interviewing of the sponsor in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that the information requested is not readily available.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Cash asked the Lord Privy Seal when Her Majesty's Government expect to reply to the first report of Session 1986-87 from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on Ministers and Civil Servants, and to the first report of Session 1986-87 from the Liaison Committee on Accountability of Ministers and Civil Servants to Select Committees of the House of Commons.

Mr. Biffen: The Government's response to both reports is published today as a Command Paper (Cmnd. 78). Copies of the response have been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Terrorism (Syrian Involvement)

Q40. Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if any evidence was provided to the police by Nezar Hindawi regarding Syrian involvement in terrorist activities in Europe; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It would not be in the public interest, nor would it assist our efforts to counter terrorism, to confirm or deny the precise source of evidence in a particular case.

Peterhead

Q132. Mr. McQuarry asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Peterhead.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Football Supporters (Card Scheme)

Mr. Pendry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her correspondence with the Today newspaper about its proposal for a 100 per cent. membership card scheme for football supporters.

The Prime Minister: Today newspaper, and a number of other organisations and individuals, have written to me in support of membership schemes. I have welcomed the support for such schemes which the Government believe will assist in identifying, isolating and deterring troublemakers.

"The Secret Society"

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Prime Minister (1) if, pursuant to her answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 18, she will give details of the sense in which the Government became aware of the British Broadcasting Corporation's plan for one or more programmes entitled "The Secret Society";

(2) what was the nature of the information available to Her Majesty's Government before the week beginning 6 October about the British Broadcasting Corporation's intentions to make one or more programmes on the Zircon satellite.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Gentleman on 26 January, at column 18, or to the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, to the hon. Gentleman on 29 January, at column 335.

Engagements

Mr. Roger King asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 February.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 February.

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 5 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with the President of the Commission of the European Communities. In addition to my duties in this House I shall be having further meetings later today.

SCOTLAND

Caterpillar Tractor Company

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his Department has had with the Caterpillar Tractor Company about its future plans in the light of the redundancies announced at its Uddingston plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: At a meeting on 20 January my right hon. and learned Friend conveyed to senior representatives of the company the Government's concern at the announcement of its intention to close the Uddingston plant. This development was in strong contrast with the company's statement last September that the plant was a "Plant with a Future" and would be the subject of a £62·5 million investment programme. My right hon. and learned Friend formally asked that the closure decision should be reconsidered. A meeting with my officials took place on 2 February at which the company gave further details of the background to the closure decision. A telex from the company president reconfirming the closure decision was received on 3 February. My right Hon. and learned Friend has made clear his disappointment at this news but has also underlined his continuing readiness to consider any proposal to retain viable manufacturing and employment at the Uddingston facility.

Highlands and Islands Development Board

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of funding was given by the Scottish Office to the Highlands and Islands Development Board in 1985-86, and 1986-87; and what is the proposed level for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: the information is contained in table 3.16 of the "Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90" (Volume II, Cmnd. 56-II).

The HIDB's gross expenditure comprises not only the amounts shown above, but income generated from receipts. The expected level of receipts in 1987-88 will enable the gross expenditure to exceed that in 1986-87 in real terms.

NHS Hospitals

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many National Health Service hospitals have been opened in Scotland; and what is the bed gain as a result of these openings, for each year since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: Details of all hospital developments are not held centrally as minor capital projects are delegated to health boards. The information for major capital projects is as follows. The total planned bed complement is shown for each year, but it should be noted that many of the beds provided are replacements for outdated facilities elsewhere and are not additions to overall complement:

| Year | Number of hospitals | Number of beds |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 2 | 90 |
| 1980 | 10 | 372 |
| 1981 | 6 | 1,022 (+95 day places) |
| 1982 | 5 | 210 (+46 day places) |
| 1983 | 10 | 912 (+95 day places) |
| 1984 | 6 | 510 (+30 day places) |
| 1985 | 4 | 1,220 (+180 day places) |
| 1986 | 4 | 1,115 (+10 day places) |

Lord-Lieutenancies

Mr. Pollock asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to review the present boundaries of the lord-lieutenancies within Grampian region.

Mr. Rifkind: The areas in which lord-lieutenants in Scotland discharge their functions are determined by Order in Council. I do not propose to advise Her Majesty to adjust the boundaries within Grampian region as assigned under the Lord-Lieutenants Order 1975 (1975 No. 428).

Homelessness

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his latest estimate for the number of homeless people in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: For the number of homeless persons in Scotland, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on 23 January, at column 759.

The very difficult problems which can arise in dealing with homeless people call for the exercise of good housing management and close co-operation between all the agencies involved. The Government have offered practical guidance on meeting the housing needs of single people in part 7 of the "Scottish Housing Handbook" and provide funding to several voluntary organisations concerned with the homeless nationally. My right hon. and learned Friend believes that housing authorities are now adopting a more flexible approach to homeless persons in their allocation policies and in the use of their existing stock. The 12·5 per cent. increase in capital investment on the housing revenue account provisionally announced for 1987-88 will enable authorities which have this as a priority to do more for the homeless.

Crime Statistics

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of crimes of violence against the person in Scotland (a) in the 12 months ended April 1979 and (b) in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lang: For the purpose of this reply, the term "violence against the person" is taken to include all non-sexual crimes of violence (group 1 of the standard classification) apart from robbery, those crimes of indecency (group 2) which contain a violent element, and certain crimes involving malicious and reckless conduct.

Following the revision, with effect from 1980, of the classification of crimes and offences, recorded crime figures for earlier years are available on a calendar year basis only. For this reason, figures for the 12 months to April 1979 are not available. However, in 1978 there were 7,466 crimes of violence against the person recorded in Scotland. In the period December 1985 to November 1986, 13,091 crimes of violence against the person were recorded in Scotland.

The figure for 1985-86 is not precisely comparable with published figures for calendar years as the latter incorporate amendments that arise in the course of the year, including the deletion of incidents found on investigation not to be crimes.

Alcohol Addiction

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much money was spent in Scotland on research into cures for alcohol addiction in each of the past five years;

(2) how much money was spent in Scotland on research programmes on alcohol addiction in each of the past five years.

Mr. John MacKay: The information is not available in the form requested. The figures for research projects on alcohol addiction funded by the Scottish Home and Health Department are as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 42,064 |
| 1982-83 | 48,099 |
| 1983-84 | 41,952 |
| 1984-85 | 69,648 |
| 1985-86 | 81,160 |

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many deaths were recorded as due to diseases normally associated with alcohol addiction in Scotland in each of the last five years;

(2) how many deaths were recorded in Scotland in each of the past five years from diseases normally associated with alcohol addiction.

Mr. John MacKay: The figures are as follows for deaths from selected causes, in Scotland, in the years 1981-1985.

Deaths From Selected Causes—Scotland, 1981-1985

| | *International Classification of Diseases Codes | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Year | 291 | 303 | 305·0 | 425·5 | 571·0-3 | Total |
| 1981 | 2 | 130 | 23 | 8 | 167 | 330 |
| 1982 | 1 | 123 | 44 | 9 | 163 | 340 |
| 1983 | 6 | 112 | 35 | 9 | 177 | 339 |
| 1984 | 2 | 106 | 40 | 11 | 193 | 352 |
| 1985 | 2 | 124 | 44 | 14 | 193 | 377 |

*ICD 291 — Alcoholic psychosis.
ICD 303 — Alcoholic dependence syndrome.
ICD 305·0 — Non-dependent abuse of alcohol.
ICD 425·5 — Alcoholic cardiomyopathy.
ICD 571·0 — Alcoholic fatty liver.
·1 — Acute alcoholic hepatitis.
·2 — Alcoholic cirrhosis of liver.
·3 — Alcoholic liver damage unspecified.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much money was spent in Scotland in each of the past five years on curing people addicted to or misusing alcohol.

Mr. John MacKay: This information is not available.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many hospital beds in Scotland were taken up in each of the past five years by patients suffering from physical and psychiatric ailments normally associated with alcohol addiction or alcohol misuse.

Mr. John MacKay: The average daily number of beds in NHS hospitals in Scotland in the last five years for which information is available, occupied by patients for whom the principal diagnosis is alcoholic psychosis, alcohol dependence syndrome, non-dependent abuse of alcohol, alcoholic cirrhosis of the liver ad other chronic liver disease without mention of alcohol was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 693 |
| 1981 | 651 |
| 1982 | 624 |
| 1983 | 654 |
| 1984 | 640 |

Community Halls Advisory Service

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide grant-aid under the Further Education (Scotland) Regulations to the Scottish community halls advisory service following the representations made to him by that organisation.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall consider this proposal against competing applications for grant from other voluntary organisations. Those concerned will be advised of the outcome early in the new financial year.

Buses

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many notifications have been given of new services, alterations to services or withdrawal of services, respectively, by bus operators in each region and islands area since 26 January.

Mr. Ancram: Registrations of bus services in Scotland are the responsibility of the traffic commissioner for the Scottish traffic area. However, I understand that in Scotland there have been 57 new services registered to operate from 26 January 1987, 220 variations to existing services and 69 withdrawals of previously registered services. These figures are still provisional and are not available broken down by region and islands area.

Job Training

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what representation there is from his Department on the modular accreditation development programme for the job training scheme;

(2) what representation there is from his Department on the technical group of the job training scheme;

(3) what representation there is from his Department on the advisory group for the development of the job training scheme;

(4) what representation there is from his Department on each of the 14 Manpower Services Commission sector groups connected with the job training scheme.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Office is not directly represented on any of the groups established under the modular accreditation development programme, that is, the advisory group, the technical control group, or the 14 sector working groups. However, one of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools in Scotland, seconded from the Scottish Education Department to the Manpower Services Commission, is the chairman of the technical control group. Also, the Scottish Vocational Education Council is represented on all these groups as one of the four accreditation bodies.

Free School Transport

Mrs. McCurley asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of the number of pupils for whom education authorities in Scotland provide free school transport.

| | Pupils Attending Primary Schools | Pupils Attending Secondary Schools | Pupils Attending Special Schools or Classes | Total Pupils |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Free transport provided under section 50 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 | 37,915 | 99,061 | 9,456 | 146,432 |
| Free transport provided in spare seats under section 51(2) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 | 2,736 | 1,072 | — | 3,808 |
| Scotland Total | 40,651 | 100,133 | 9,456 | 150,240 |

I have arranged for a copy of the return from each authority to be placed in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Telephone Equipment

Mr. Neale asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has completed his review of the regulations affecting the installation, pre-connection, inspection and designation of maintenance contractors of single line call routeing apparatus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Not yet, but I expect that the Director General OFTEL will shortly give advice on these matters to the Secretary of State.

Merchant Shipping

Sir Edward du Cann asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will set out in the Official Report the tonnage of merchant ships ordered by United Kingdom companies for registration outside the United Kingdom in each year since 1983, together with the latest available figure for 1986.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Records do not allow us to identify the tonnage of merchant ships ordered by United Kingdom companies for registration outside this country, since such tonnage is accounted to the country of registration. We can, however, identify the gross tonnage under construction abroad which was intended for United Kingdom registration when first ordered, but was subsequently registered outside the United Kingdom. This information is as follows:

| | '000 gross tonnes |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 147 |
| 1984 | 306 |
| 1985 | 63 |
| January-September 1986 | 35 |

Motor Components Industry

Mr. Leighton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what efforts he is making to improve the performance of British motor components manufacturers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Government have created a climate in which industry, including motor components manufacturers, can prosper. It is for the components manufacturers, as for industry generally, to take advantage of this climate. Through their national quality campaign the Government have sought to encourage industry to raise the quality of products made in the United Kingdom. Industry, too, can play its part, as illustrated by Jaguar's "Pursuit of Excellence" awards, recognising the achievements of its best component suppliers, which the Government warmly welcome.

Brewers and Distillers (Assistance)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance was given to brewing and distilling companies under the various industry acts in England, Wales and Scotland, respectively, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Timeshare Developments

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will propose to timeshare developers the inclusion with their sales literature of his Department's recently published consumer leaflet, entitled "Your Place in the Sun, or is it, The Time Share Buyer's Check List"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have no plans at present to make such a proposal. But several timeshare developers have already requested and been sent supplies of the leaflet, which I understand they will be issuing to their customers.

Mr. Michael Cocks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investigation his Department has made of the practice of time share developers offering unsolicited gifts to potential customers apparently picked at random and approached directly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The offering of "gifts" in return for viewing a time share development or attending a presentation is a form of sales promotion and as such is controlled by means of the British code of sales promotion practice. The code is administered by the Advertising Standards Authority.

My Department has referred a number of such cases to the authority for investigation and the authority has secured changes in the wording of promotional literature of certain companies operating in this way.

Taxis

Mr. Bendall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the firm that was building the CR6 taxi will repay some of the moneys received for the development of the vehicle from the Government; and if he will make a statement on the latest position with regard to the company's proposal to introduce a new taxi capable of carrying wheelchair-bound passengers based on the FX4.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Following negotiations with my Department last year, Manganese Bronze Holdings plc agreed to repay a significant proportion of the grant for the CR6 taxi project made under the support for innovation scheme. The company is already providing to order a version of the FX4, the FX4W, which can carry wheelchair-bound passengers.

Eurofer Plan

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will instruct the British Steel Corporation to make public any proposals which it is submitting under the Eurofer plan to the EEC;

(2) if the British Steel Corporation's Eurofer proposals contain any further cuts in steel-making in Scotland.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Eurofer plan is a matter for the European steel producers, and potential contributions by BSC and other United Kingdom and European steel producers to remove excess steel capacity are necessarily confidential at this stage. BSC accepts that any contribution it makes must be consistent with the strategy announced in August 1985, and must not prejudice strategy decisions thereafter. This position was reaffirmed in the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Swansea (Mr. Williams), on 28 January 1987, at column 326.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mobile Support Units

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what training and instructions are given to Royal Ulster Constabulary headquarters mobile support units on how to shoot at targets.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c. 301]: The training and instructions to all member of the RUC on the use of firearms are in accordance with the "Manual of Guidance on Police use of Firearms" issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers joint standing committee on the police use of firearms. Officers allocated to duties with HMSU receive additional training commensurate with the duties they perform.

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what training is received by headquarters mobile support units in the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c 301]: Officers attached to headquarters mobile support units are regular members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary. They receive additional in-force training to enable them to carry out the duties assigned to the units.

Informers

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on his policy concerning the use of informers and their application by the Northern Ireland special branch;

(2) what instructions have been given to Royal Ulster Constabulary officers concerning the use of informers; and to whom the Home Office guidelines have been circulated in the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Tom King [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c. 301]: Instructions to RUC officers on the use of informers are in accordance with the Home Office guidelines on the subject which have been promulgated to the force, and which are also an integral part of detective training. It would not be in the public interest to make them publicly available.

TRANSPORT

Radioactive Material

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations govern the transport of nuclear fuel and fuel flasks; if he has any plans to review these regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: The regulations and conditions for the transport in this country of all radioactive materials (including nuclear fuel) are based on the internationally accepted standards of the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) safety series No. 6. A copy is held in the Library. For United Kingdom road consignments these are given effect by the following:

The Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) Great Britain Regulations 1974 (S.I. 1974 No. 1735) and Amendment Regulations 1985 (S.I. 1985 No. 1729).

The Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) Northern Ireland Regulations 1983 (S.R. 1983 No. 344) and Amendment Regulations 1986 (S.R. 1986 No. 61).

For rail consignments:

British Rail List of Dangerous Goods (LDG) and Conditions of acceptance by Freight train and Passenger Train or Similar Service (1977 Edition).

For Sea:

The Merchant Shipping (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1981 (S.I. 1981 No. 1747).

For Air:

The Air Navigation (Dangerous Goods) Regulations 1985 (S.I. 1985 No. 1939).

The above regulations are currently being revised to take account of the 1985 edition of IAEA regulations. In addition, the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 (S.I. 1985 No. 1333) apply to all modes of transport.

Fishing Industry (Safety)

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to amend the regulations relating to safety matters on the carrying of immersion suits on United Kingdom registered fishing vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The carriage of life-saving appliances on fishing vessels is currently under examination by the Department in consultation with the fishing industry as part of the review of the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the number of fishermen who were (a) drowned, (b) killed in accidents on board and (c) injured in accidents on board whilst working on United Kingdom registered fishing vessels in 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The numbers of deaths and of accidents to fishermen reported to the Department are published annually in the Department's booklet "Casualties to Vessels and Accidents to Men". The figures shown for 1986 will be published later this year.

Up to and including 1985, figures for non-fatal accidents on vessels under 24·4 m in length are not available; and those figures for vessels greater than 24·4 m include all accidents reported, however minor the injury.

From and including 1986, the published statistics will show separate figures for three sizes of vessel; but in line with those for other industries, only those non-fatal accidents which caused an incapacity lasting for more than three days after the day of the accident are now rquired to be reported.

Number of deaths and accidents

[1] Drownings include recorded as missing at sea

[2] One non crew member is excluded

n/a = not available

Note: The total number of deaths in 1984 (13) amends by one the deaths (12) shown in Hansard, Vol. 90, columns 611-612.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is reviewing the Fishing Vessel (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975 in consultation with the fishing industry.

London Road Assessment Studies

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will state the closing date for submissions on the first stage reports of the London road assessment studies;

(2) what public involvement there will be in drawing up the terms of reference for the next stage of the London road assessment studies.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have not set any deadline and will take account of comments and suggestions at any stage. We will be discussing the terms of reference for the next stage of the studies with the local authorities concerned.

Trams (London)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals have been made to his Department in the past year regarding the re-introduction of tram services in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: None.

Seat Belts

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the proportion of cars and car-derived vans on the road, manufactured after October 1981, which are not fitted with rear restraints.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We think that from 90 to 95 per cent. are not fitted with rear adult belts. Some of these vehicles will have one or more child restraints.

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish details of road casualties and casualty rates in 1985 for Great Britain by parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Road accident data are not coded to parliamentary constituencies. I regret that this information is not available.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: In December 1986 the numbers unemployed in Newport TTWA, Gwent and Wales were 12,558, 27,923 and 173,546 respectively. Precise comparisons with the position in 1979, however, cannot be made as methods of compilation and collection have altered, and there have been some boundary changes in the intervening period. On the basis of the definitions then in use, the figures for Newport TTWA, Gwent and Wales in December 1979 were 6,274, 14,734 and 85,177 respectively.

Council House Sales

Mr. Anderson asked the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average net receipt to public funds per unit of public sector housing sold; and what is the average cost of replacing that unit, both figures at the latest available date.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The average net selling price and the average cost of providing new local authority dwellings during 1985 were £8,800 and £26,800 respectively. Similar information relating to Housing Association dwellings is not collected centrally.

Welsh College of Music and Drama

Mr. Gwilym Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the date of the last inspection of the Welsh College of Music and Drama by Her Majesty's inspectors of education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Her Majesty's Inspectorate undertook a formal inspection of certain aspects of provision at the Welsh College of Music and Drama between 17 and 21 November 1986. The inspectorate's findings will be submitted to me as part of its report about initial teaching training provision in the public sector institutions in South Glamorgan.

One-Parent Families

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the number of households in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales which are one-parent families; and how many of them are (i) divorced mothers, (ii) separated mothers, (iii) unmarried mothers, (iv) divorced fathers and (v) widowed mothers.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Estimates based upon information from the 1984 and 1985 labour force surveys in which some 3,000 households in Wales were sampled each year, are as follows. The samples are too small to provide reliable estimates of numbers of lone fathers in Wales or of lone parents in Clwyd.

Estimated lone mothers[1] in Wales, 1984 and 1985

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Divorced mothers | 22,000 |
| Single mothers | 9,000 |
| Separated/Widowed mothers | 12,000 |

[1] Excludes households where cohabiting couples declared themselves to be "common-law married". Dependent children are defined as aged under 16 or never married and 16 to 18 and in full-time education.

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many one-parent families in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales in each year from 1981 to 1985, inclusive, included a head of the household who was unemployed.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information requested is not available. However, the 1981 census of population recorded 1,52[illegible] unemployed heads of lone adult households with children in Wales, of whom 195 lived in Clwyd.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in Wales for each year since 1979 expressed as totals and by specialties.

Mr. Mark Robinson: Information on numbers of available beds is given in the regular publication "Bed Use Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many National Health Service hospitals have been opened in Wales; and what is the bed gain as a result of these openings for each year since 1979.

Mr. Mark Robinson: The information is given in the following table:

| Hospital | Opening Date | Bed Gains |
|---|---|---|
| Ysbyty Glan Clwyd | May 1980 | Reduction of 67 |
| Mold Community Hospital | April 1984 | 19 |
| Ysbyty Gwynedd | July 1984 | 71 |
| Princess of Wales District General Hospital | October 1985 | 13 |
| Morriston District General Hospital | October 1985 | 66 |
| Ystradgynlais Community Hospital | March 1986 | Reduction of 19 |
| Wrexham Maelor District General Hospital | June 1986 | 29 |

NHS Staff

Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of staff employed by the National Health Service in Wales expressed as whole-time equivalents as well as actual full-time and part-time numbers.

Mr. Mark Robinson: At 30 September 1985, the latest date for which the required information is available, the National Health Service in Wales (including the Welsh Health Common Services Authority) employed the equivalent of 55,321 whole-time staff. This comprised 41,087 full-time staff and 23,832 part-time staff.

[1] Including the Welsh Health Common Services Authority.

Lumi-Low

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will expedite consideration of the application by Lumi-Low for selective financial assistance and regional aid; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will explain the delay in processing the application by Lumi-Low for regional aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: The company is aware that further consideration of its application for regional selective assistance depended on its providing essential supporting information, which it did not supply until 4 February 1987.

Spectrum Packaging

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to enable Spectrum Packaging to remain at Deeside industrial park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I am well aware of the background to this case. The Welsh Development Agency has worked hard to encourage Spectrum Packaging to continue production at Deeside industrial park. The decision on where to locate rests with the company.

Re-chem International, Torfaen

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the alleged pollution from polychlorinated biphenyls caused by Re-chem International in Torfaen, near Pontypool.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There is no evidence that the operations of the Re-chem International plant near Pontypool result in the presence of PCBs or other toxic substances in the local environment at levels significantly different from those in areas remote from chemical incineration or other industrial operations.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy on 15 January, Official Report, column 283, concerning reports received from the radioactive waste management advisory committee, what is the title of the relevant paper mentioned in his reply; and if he will place a copy of this paper in the Library.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is not the practice to make publicly available individual papers submitted to the radioactive waste management advisory committee.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco

Mr. Pendry asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much duty was collected on (a) domestically produced cigarettes and (b) imported cigarettes in 1985-86; what are his estimates for the current financial year; what representations he has received regarding the respective treatment as regards duty of imported and domestically produced cigarettes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: It is estimated that the tobacco products duty collected in 1985-86 on domestically produced and imported cigarettes was £3,660 million and £391 million respectively. Forecasts of receipts are not made at this level of detail.

Several representations about the duty on imported and domestically produced cigarettes have been received.

Registration Fees

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to ensure that registration fees to a self regulating organisation are an allowable deduction from the income arising out of such registration.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I take it that the question refers to self-regulating organisations for investment businesses under the Financial Services Act.

The tax deductibility of initial and periodic registration fees to these organisations will depend on the precise nature and purpose of the payments. It will not be possible to determine their tax treatment until the SROs have been established and their rules have been formulated.

EC Budget

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the proportion of the European Commission budget spent on (a) all fisheries support, (b) the social fund and (c) the regional fund.

Mr. Brooke: The figures in the 1986 budget as adopted, the latest available, are:

| | per cent. |
|---|---|
| (a) Fisheries support (title 4) | 0·5 |
| (b) Social fund (chapters 60 and 61) | 7·2 |
| (c) Regional fund (chapters 50 and 51) | 6·7 |

The Community has not yet adopted a budget for 1987.

Alcohol

Dr. Godman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was raised from taxes on alcohol in the last financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: It is estimated that the revenue raised from taxes on alcohol in the financial year 1985-86 is as follows:

£ million

| Excise duty | VAT[1] | Total |
|---|---|---|
| 4,197 | 2,060 | 6,257 |

[1] Estimate based on consumers' expenditure data.

Company Cars

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the percentage of total mileage of company cars spent on private motoring.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. Dormand asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer which social security benefits, including pensions, are subject to taxation; and which are not subject to taxation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The following social security benefits are taxable: retirement pension, widow's pensions, widowed mother's allowance, widow's allowance, industrial death benefit, invalid care allowance, unemployment benefit, and supplementary benefit paid to the unemployed and to strikers.

The remaining social security benefits (including any child additions to the benefits listed above) are not taxable.

Payments made by employers under the statutory sick pay scheme are taxable.

Customs and Excise

Mr. Forth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any changes are proposed in the cash limit and running costs limit for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Brooke: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XIX vote 2 will be increased by £1,971,000, from £393,768,000 to £395,739,000. This is primarily to cover the cost of increased legal charges falling on the department, and other additional costs associated with drugs investigation work; £161,000 is for work carried out for the Department of Transport whose running costs limit is being reduced by the same amount as announced by the Secretary of State for Transport on 2 February (Official Report, c. 531); £60,000 is for charges raised by the Scottish courts administration whose original estimate incorporated a reduction of that amount; and £1,750,000 will be charged to the reserve. The department's gross running costs limit will be increased by £1,971,000 from £384,123,000 to £386,094,000.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances there will be mutual inspection of passenger luggage by United Kingdom Customs and Excise officials at Frethun and by French customs officials at Ashford.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 539]: None. The treaty provides for the juxtaposition of frontier controls in respect of shuttle train services. Inward and outward inspection checks on luggage by United Kingdom and French customs officials will be undertaken on a consecutive basis at the Frethum and Cheriton terminals. It is proposed that there will be clearance arrangements at Ashford by United Kingdom customs for passengers joining or leaving through rail services at British Rail's proposed international station.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether French Customs and Excise officials will examine passenger luggage on trains using the Channel fixed link on the train; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 539]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his questions on 23 January, Official Report column 783-84.

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many meetings have taken place between the French and United Kingdom authorities responsible for Customs and Excise examination on future Channel tunnel traffic.

Mr. Brooke [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 539]: Customs officials take part in all meetings of the frontier control working groups, which have been held at approximately monthly intervals since last June.

EMPLOYMENT

Jobcentres

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many staff are currently employed by jobcentres, for each Manpower Services Commission region; and how many staff, by region, are planned for 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Statistics on the allocation of staff are maintained by programme other than location. In March 1987 there will be 9,835 people employed, nationally, mainly in jobcentres, on programmes which cover the principal jobcentre activities, including helping long-term unemployed people through job clubs and the restart programme. The comparable planning figure for 1988 and 1989 is 10,318 in each year.

Figures for the total number of staff allocated, by programme, to individual regions of Manpower Services Commission employment and enterprise group are available for 1987 and 1988 but will take some time to extract. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as I have the information and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Community Programme (Member's Correspondence)

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow on 17 November 1986, Official Report, column 68, when the hon. Member can expect to receive the promised letter about the Manpower Services Commission's inquiry into the funding of certain community programme projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I shall write to the hon. Member shortly about the outcome of the Manpower Services Commission inquiry.

Restart Scheme

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Paymaster General if he will make a statement on the progress to date of the job restart scheme; and if he will indicate the number and types of work mainly involved.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The restart programme has been making good progress. By 8 January 1987, 779,051 people had been interviewed. A worthwile offer that might lead to employment had been made to around nine out of 10 of those interviewed. The restart programme offers counselling interviews at which long term unemployed people are helped to identify and find possible ways of getting back to work. These include job interviews (including those where the jobstart allowance may be payable), opportunities for further training or for places on the community programme, the chance to join a jobclub, take up a place on a restart course or develop an idea about self employment with the help of the enterprise allowance scheme.

We have no means of knowing exactly how many people have found work after taking part in the programme. Some people have been placed in jobs as a direct result of their restart interview. Many others have found jobs because they are given information, advice and other help at the interview or in one or other of the opportunities offered at the interview. We do not follow up each individual and are unable to give details of the types of work which people enter.

Job Clubs (Lancashire)

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will give the figures for the latest date available for the Burnley job club of (a) total participants to date, (b) how many are currently in employment and (c) how many are employed through the community programme.

Mr. Lee: A total of 136 people joined Burnley job club between 27 May 1986 and 9 January 1987. Of the 103 who left, 66 (64 per cent.) went into jobs and 9 (9 per cent.) into the community programme. It is not known how many are currently in employment.

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General if he will list in the Official Report the job clubs in Lancashire and indicate the number of members at each club at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The number of members in each Lancashire job club, on 2 February, was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Accrington | 19 |
| Blackburn | 26 |
| Blackpool South (1) | 27 |
| Blackpool South (2) | 28 |
| Burnley | 32 |
| Chorley | 25 |
| Fleetwood | 20 |
| Lancaster | 17 |
| Nelson | 24 |
| Preston (1) | 32 |
| Preston (2) | 24 |
| Skelmersdale | 23 |

Apprenticeships

Mr. Pike asked the Paymaster General what was the total number of apprentices in the north-west region in 1978 and each subsequent year.

Mr. Lee: Estimates of the numbers of persons undertaking an apprenticeship in the north-west region are available from the labour force survey as follows:

| Year (Spring) | Number of apprentices (thousands) |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 39 |
| 1983 | 41 |
| 1984 | 37 |
| 1985 | 43 |

Separate information relating to apprenticeships included in the regular employees in employment estimates for manufacturing industries in the north-west region is available as follows:

| Year (March) | [1]Number of apprentices (thousands) |
|---|---|
| 1981 | 18·6 |
| 1982 | 15·4 |
| 1983 | 12·7 |
| 1984 | 11·2 |
| 1985 | 9·3 |
| 1986 | 7·7 |

[1] Many of those receiving apprenticeship training under YTS (since 1983), specifically those without a contract of employment, are not counted as employees and are therefore not included in these figures. With the move away from traditional apprentice training in many industries some long duration schemes of a type which previously could have involved apprenticeships may not now be so classified.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Hannam asked the Paymaster General what are the unemployment figures broken down by male, female and under 25 years, 25 to 50 years of age and over 50 years of age for each of the past four years, in the parliamentary division of Exeter.

Mr. Lee: The table gives the numbers of unemployed male and female claimants in the age groups requested for October of each year since 1983 in the Exeter parliamentary constituency. The comparison is affected by the change in the compilation of unemployment statistics in March 1986.

The information is available in the Library.

Unemployment by age analysis—Exeter parliamentary constituency

| | October 1983 | | October 1984 | | October 1985 | | October 1986 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Males | Females | Males | Females | Males | Females | Males | Females |
| Under 25 years | 1,160 | 695 | 1,292 | 833 | 1,213 | 888 | 1,104 | 772 |
| 25 — 49 years | 1,300 | 458 | 1,399 | 606 | 1,464 | 626 | 1,498 | 663 |
| Over 50 years | 549 | 162 | 619 | 204 | 592 | 214 | 634 | 203 |
| TOTAL UNEMPLOYED | 3,009 | 1,315 | 3,310 | 1,643 | 3,269 | 1,728 | 3,236 | 1,638 |

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what is the number of (a) men and (b) women who were registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth on 31 January.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available. The January 1987 unemployment count date was the 8 January and these figures will be released at 11.30 am on 12 February 1987.

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Paymaster General what has been the period of time broken down into categories of (a) three months, (b) six months, (c) nine months, (d) one year, (e) two years, (f) three years and over that period of time that (i) men and (ii) women registered as unemployed in the London borough of Wandsworth have been unemployed.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed male and female claimants who had been unemployed for the durations requested at 9 October 1986, the latest date for which such an analysis is available, in the London borough of Wandsworth.

Unemployed claimants in the London Borough of Wandsworth at 9 October 1986

| | Male | Female |
|---|---|---|
| Under 3 months | 2,714 | 1,707 |
| 3 to 6 months | 1,442 | 848 |
| 6 to 9 months | 1,163 | 564 |
| 9 months to 1 year | 739 | 347 |
| 1 to 2 years | 1,952 | 689 |
| 2 to 3 years | 1,082 | 333 |
| Over 3 years | 2,020 | 461 |
| Total unemployed | 11,112 | 4,949 |

Dr. Godman asked the Paymaster General how many people were employed in the brewing and distilling industry in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The Department's employment statistics are produced on a quarterly basis and cannot be expressed in precisely the manner requested.

In September 1986 (the latest date for which figures are available) there were 19,000 employees in employment in the spirit distilling and compounding industry in Great Britain. A further 52,000 were employed in brewing and malting and the production of wines, cider and perry.

Estimates for the brewing and malting industry are not separately available.

These estimates are subject to considerable potential estimation error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industry.

Figures for the United Kingdom are not available.

Training

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General (1) if he will publish in the Official Report details of the divergence between predicted and actual expenditure in 1986 on each Manpower Services Commission programme area within the vocational educational and training group and the employment and enterprise group;

(2) what plans he has to seek the views and advice of the area manpower boards on his proposed extension of the job training scheme;

(3) if the eligibility rules for the job training scheme will allow women who are unemployed, but not in receipt of benefit, to participate in the scheme and receive a training allowance.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General which industry-led bodies have been organised to set the standards of competence for the job training scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Acting on the recommendations of the White Paper "Working Together—Education and Training" (Cmnd. 9823), the Manpower Services Commission has set in hand a programme involving industry bodies, examining and validating bodies and officials from the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to accelerate work to provide accreditation based on standards of competence for training programmes. The programme will begin by identifying existing vocational qualifications suitable for JTS.

Many industry bodies are involved, including:

National Retail Training Consortium
Institute of Grocery Distribution
Administrative Business and Commercial Training Group
National Computing Centre
Computing Services Industry Training Council
Hairdressing Training Board
Hotel and Catering Training Board
Hotel and Catering Institutional Management Association
Agricultural Training Board
Knitting and Lace Training Board
Clothing and Allied Products Industry Training Board
Construction Industry Training Board
Road Transport Industry Training Board
Engineering Industry Training Board

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General in what proportion of the schemes in the job training scheme pilot areas managing agents have sought the support and involvement of trades unions prior to making job placements.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to review, monitor and evaluate the job training scheme in its 10 pilot areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: An interim evaluation is underway. The sub-group of the Manpower Services Commission which is overseeing the design, monitoring and evaluation of the new job training scheme will be considering longer term evaluation arrangements.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General if he will specify, for each of the job training scheme pilot areas (a) the number of trainees involved, (b) the number of hours of training received, (c) the location of the training and the occupational areas involved, (d) the range in the size of the firms providing job placements, (e) the qualifications being sought by trainees and (f) the drop-out rate of trainees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The job training scheme pilots involve a variety of individual training programmes tailored to the needs of the people concerned based on an individual assessment of the training needs of each trainee, and the qualifications which are to be sought. The programme provided is a combination of directed training and practical experience, organised to produce the most effective results. Information about the number of hours of training received, the location of training provided, the range in the size of firms providing practical experience placements and qualifications being sought by trainees will be evaluated regularly by independent researchers. A first report is expected in the spring.

| Pilot area | Cumulative number of starts | Number in-training |
|---|---|---|
| Dundee | 124 | 114 |
| Billingham | 86 | 67 |
| Huddersfield | 100 | 85 |

| Pilot area | Cumulative number of starts | Number in-training |
|---|---|---|
| Preston | 160 | 128 |
| Stoke | 141 | 128 |
| Leicester | 53 | 52 |
| Port Talbot | 160 | 130 |
| Plymouth | 218 | 172 |
| Crawley | 94 | 83 |
| Ealing | 57 | 49 |
| Total | 1,193 | 1,008 |

Ms. Clare Short asked the Paymaster General how many entrants and filled places there were to the new job training scheme in each of the nine pilot areas at 6 January and the most recently available date.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 4 February 1987]: I regret that my previous reply did not include the figures for Preston which is one of the nine original pilot areas. They are as follows:

Preston

| | | Number |
|---|---|---|
| 9 January | | |
| | Entrants | 104 |
| | On Scheme | 81 |
| 23 January | | |
| | Entrants | 138 |
| | On Scheme | 106 |

Dangerous Substances

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General, further to the answer of 16 December 1986, Official Report, column 528, about dangerous substances, whether all 118 sites notified to the Health and Safety Executive were included in the list of sites published by the Health and Safety Executive in its news bulletin 1986-972 on 28 March 1986.

Mr. Trippier: None of these sites were included in the list published on 28 March 1986. The extent to which such sites are capable of presenting a major accident hazard is still being investigated by the Health and Safety Executive.

Industrial Tribunals (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Paymaster General whether everyone who sits as a part-time chairman of industrial tribunals in Birmingham is legally qualified.

Mr. Lee: Yes. Chairmen of industrial tribunals must be barristers of solicitors of not less than seven years' standing.

Youth Training Schemes

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people are currently on youth training schemes in Leicester and in the east midlands.

Mr. Trippier: At 31 December 1986, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 2,379 young people in training on YTS in Leicester and 39,502 young people in training on YTS in the east midlands and eastern region of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General how many people have completed youth training schemes in Leicester and the east midlands to date; how many left before completing their full entitlement to training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General whether he has any information as to the number or percentage of young people who have found work following the successful completion of youth training schemes in Leicester and in the east midlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Manpower Services Commission conducts a regular follow-up survey of YTS leavers three months after young people leave the programme. The latest full year's results, covering leavers between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986, show that of those young people who completed their programmes in the Leicester local authority district, 78 per cent. were in employment three months after leaving YTS.

The corresponding figures for the Manpower Services Commission's east midlands and eastern region is 73 per cent.

These figures are very encouraging and reflect great credit on industry, commerce and all those providing training opportunities on YTS.

Employment Measures (Statistics)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the numbers of unemployed people who have benefited from the Government's employment measures since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 480]: It is not possible to give a precise number. Certain of the schemes benefit both the employed and the unemployed. However, since May 1979, almost 6·5 million people have benefited from the employment, training and enterprise measures run by my Department and the Manpower Services Commission.

ENVIRONMENT

Departmental Cash Limits

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any changes to announce to his Department's cash limits.

Mr. Ridley: Yes. I propose the following changes.

DOE Central

The non-voted net cash limit for new towns (DOE/NT 1) has been reduced by £3·94 million from minus £95·74 million to minus £99·68 million to take account of receipts from disposals of property, which were higher than forecast, to provide for a transfer of £0·5 million to DOE/LA1 and to provide for a transfer of £0·94 million to the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. This last provides for the purchase by Redditch YMCA housing association of 77 flats in Redditch formerly owned by the Commission for the New Towns.

The Housing Corportion's cash limit (DOE/HC 1) is correspondingly increased by £0·94 million from £586·49 million to £587·43 million.

The cash limit for Class X, Vote 2 has been reduced by £1·45 million from £181·09 million to £179·64 million. Of this, £1·15 million will be borne in the Development Commission's grant-in-aid subhead. This will not affect gross spending by the commission in 1986-87 as it expects to realise and retain an equivalent sum in extra receipts from its factory building programme. The remaining £0·3 million reflects a lower than anticipated payment to the Zoological Society of London in respect of its private sector capital matching grants regime.

The cash limit for Class X, Vote 4 has been reduced by £1 million, from £83·0 million to £82·0 million. This decrease reflcts an expected shortfall in the original Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission expenditure programme.

Finally, the non-voted cash limit for local authorities' capital expenditure (DOE/LA 1) has been increased by £1·5 million, from £2,366·62 million to £2,368·12 million in respect of additional spending on the homes insulation scheme. £1 million of this is being transferred from other Departments, and £0·5 million is being found from the reduction in the DOE/NT 1 cash limit.

The above net reductions totalling £4·95 million partially offset an increase in provision being sought in a Spring Supplementary Estimate for the non-cash limited Class IX.1 Vote which is to be presented to Parliament shortly.

Property Services Agency

The cash limit for Class XX, Vote 18 relating to Civil Accommodation Services has been increased by £0·8 million from £150·129 million to £150·929 million to meet increased expenditure as a result of the fire at Hampton Court.

ENVIRONMENT

Television Sets

Q.188 Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many television sets are provided in Government offices in London; and how many of these are available for the use of Ministers.

Mr. Chope: This information is not available centrally.

Council Housing

Mr. James Lamond asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of council houses sold in each of the metropolitan boroughs which comprise the former Greater Manchester council for each year from 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Tracey: Dwelling sales reported by each metropolitan borough in Greater Manchester for the financial years 1980-81 to 1985-86 appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics" which are available in the Library:

| Year | Issue Number |
|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 62 |
| 1981-82 | 63 |
| 1982-83 | 67 |
| 1983-84 | 75 |
| 1984-85 | 79 |
| 1985-86 | 79 |

Figures for the first half of 1986-87 have been provided by the boroughs, except Manchester and Salford, and are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Bolton | 43 |
| Bury | 43 |
| Oldham | 97 |
| Rochdale | 134 |
| Stockport | 135 |
| Tameside | 0 |
| Trafford | 110 |
| Wigan | 122 |

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the comparative figures for arrears in England and Wales of (a) council house rents and (b) local authority mortgage repayments, showing (i) the global sum, (ii) the number of cases and (iii) the relationship of these figures to the total numbers of lettings and mortgages, respectively.

Mr. Tracey: I shall answer this question shortly.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total rent roll for local authority dwellings in 1985-86 in each local authority in England;

(2) what arrears were owed to each of the local authorities in 1985-86 by (a) current tenants and (b) former tenants.

Mr. Tracey: Tables placed in the Library in response to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 10 December 1986, at column 188, set out the accumulated rent arrears owed by current and former tenants to local authorities in England at 1 April 1986 together with their annual rent rolls.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of the total rent roll in each local authority in England in 1985-86 was (a) owed in arrears, (b) written off and (c) collected.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the estimated annual costs to his Department of works in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Chope: The total estimated cost of works for the Ministry of Defence in the Falklands to date is £309 million for the Mount Pleasant airport complex and £132 million for the Army garrison, the port facility and other works. Now that the major building programme is virtually complete the Property Services Agency's involvement in the Falklands will be mainly concerned with maintenance. The costs will be in the order of £7 million to £8 million per annum, but will vary from year to year in accordance with needs and will all be borne on the Defence Accommodation Services Vote, Class I, Vote 4.

Toxic Waste Dumps

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he maintains a central register of toxic waste dumps; whether the drainage waters from such dumps are subjected to routine monitoring by his Department or any other agency; and to what extent the implications of drainage on the water table in the vicinity of each dump are taken into account.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department does not keep a central register of specifically toxic waste dumps, although such sites will be included in the Hazardous Waste Inspectorate's record of licensed disposal sites. The monitoring of drainage waters from such sites is carried out, where specified as a site licence condition, either by the relevant regional water authority or by the relevant waste disposal authority on their behalf; the implications of site drainage on the water table are taken into account when both planning and site licensing are determined. The waste disposal authority has a duty to refuse an application for a waste disposal licence for the purpose of preventing pollution of water.

Drains and Sewers

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many miles of drains and sewers in the north-west were built (a) in the 19th century and (b) before 1914 and as to how many are in need of repair and replacement; and what percentage of the total mileage this represents in each case.

Mr. John Patten: North-west water estimates the total length of sewers in the region to be approximately 30,000 km. The proportion of these built before 1900 or before 1914 is not known; the authority estimated in 1978 that some 5,000 km, or 17 per cent. of its sewers were built before 1880.

It should be stressed that the age of a particular sewer has been found, in most cases, to provide little guidance as to its condition or to the likelihood of its failure within any given period. Information on the condition of sewers is a matter for the authority and is not kept centrally.

The authority has provisionally identified some 570 km (about 2 per cent.) of sewers as requiring replacement, renovation or reinforcement within the next three years.

Design Services

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out in tabular form for 1 April 1985 and 1 April 1986 the total number of staff in post in the Directorate General of Design Services; and whether he will break those figures down into Civil Service grades, indicating also the number of persons trained in relevant professional disciplines.

Mr. Chope: The number of staff in post in the Directorate General of Design Services on 1 April 1985 and 1 April 1986 was as follows:

| | 1 April 1985 | 1 April 1986 |
|---|---|---|
| Grade 2 | 1 | 1 |
| Grade 3 | 1 | — |
| Grade 4 | 3 | 4 |
| Grade 5 | 6 | 6 |
| Grade 6 | 15 | 19 |
| Grade 7 | 69 | 79 |
| Professional and Technology Group | 299 | 308 |
| Science Group | 2 | 1 |

Property Services Agency

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the value of the work, identified separately as new construction and maintenance, carried out by the Property Services Agency in 1984, 1985 and 1986; and how much of it was outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chope: The value of work carried out by PSA in the three financial years from 1983 to 1986 was as follows:

| | New Construction | | Maintenance | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | United Kingdom £ million | Overseas £ million | United Kingdom £ million | Overseas £ million |
| 1983-84 | 648 | 145 | 566 | 127 |
| 1984-85 | 733 | 235 | 554 | 128 |
| 1985-86 | 796 | 255 | 584 | 138 |

These figures are on a cash basis and are net of fees paid to consultants and the resource costs of PSA staff engaged on the work.

Radiation

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 20 areas in England and Wales with the highest levels of naturally occurring radioactivity and the reasons why these levels occur in the areas concerned.

Mr. Waldegrave: The largest source of exposure to naturally occuring radioactivity in England and Wales is from the build-up of radon gas in houses. For the country as a whole, the mean annual dose is 1 milliSievert per year (mSv/y). Higher than average doses arise because of geological factors, particularly the natural uranium content of the ground, and the permeability of the rock and soil to radon. The National Radiological Protection Board has been carrying out national and regional studies to identify houses where radon gives rise to high annual doses of radioactivity. The results are not necessarily representative of the housing stock as a whole in the area, as they represented a deliberate attempt to identify houses with high radon concentrations. But the areas identified by the NRPB with the highest mean indoor exposure to radon products are:

| Location and County | Grid Square | Number of dwellings surveyed | Mean annual dose (mSv/y) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Eastern part of Sedgemoor, Somerset | ST 43 | 1 | 56 |
| North-eastern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 88 | 4 | 41 |
| Coast area of Mount's Bay, Cornwall | SW 52 | 2 | 40 |
| North-eastern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 78 | 11 | 38 |
| Coas area near Tintagel Head, Cornwall | SX 09 | 1 | 37 |
| West of St. Austell, Cornwall | SW 95 | 21 | 35 |
| Northern part of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 68 | 1 | 31 |
| Northern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 79 | 2 | 28 |
| West of Truro, Cornwall | SW 74 | 6 | 27 |
| South of Camborne, Cornwall | SW 63 | 13 | 27 |
| Eastern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 77 | 11 | 25 |

| Location and County | Grid Square | Number of dwellings surveyed | Mean annual dose (mSv/y) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Northen part of Bodmin Moor, Cornwall | SX 18 | 6 | 23 |
| Southern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 65 | 10 | 22 |
| Central part of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 67 | 6 | 22 |
| South-western edge of Dartmoor, Devon and Cornwall | SX 46 | 2 | 21 |
| Northern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 69 | 5 | 20 |
| Coast area north of St. Agnes Head, Devon | SW 75 | 14 | 19 |
| Eastern edge of Dartmoor, Devon and Cornwall | SX 47 | 6 | 18 |
| North of Penzance, Cornwall | SW 43 | 6 | 17 |
| South-eastern edge of Dartmoor, Devon | SX 76 | 10 | 16 |

The fewer the number of dwellings surveyed, the less reliance should be given to the result.

Radon gives rise to doses of alpha radiation. The presence in the ground of minerals with radioactive content can also give rise to naturally occurring gamma radiation, but the doses received are much lower: the highest in England and Wales being less than 1 mSv/y.

Resource Allocations

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what account is taken of the needs of women, ethnic minority groups and people with disabilities in the distribution of rate support grant, housing investment programme authorisation and urban programme and community refurbishment scheme funds.

Mr. John Patten: The distribution of these resources depends on a wide range of factors. Allocations are made in the light of consultations with the local authority associations, or in response to bids submitted by individual local authorities, or both.

In many cases it would be very difficult to specify that part of the resources which was being allocated solely for the benefit of the particular groups of people to which the hon. Member refers. However, substantial resources are directed through the urban programme to help local authorities meet the special needs of inner city residents. In 1986-87, for example, some £9 million will be directed to victim support schemes, over £35 million will support nearly 1,300 projects specifically for the benefit of ethnic minority communities. In addition, many of the 1,400 or so community and welfare projects supported through the urban programees will be of direct benefit to the elderly, disabled and other disadvantaged groups.

London Research Centre

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he intends to make to ensure the continuation of the London Research Centre together with the Acompline and Urbaline databases after 31 March 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Arrangements for the future of the London Research Centre, including the Acompline and Urbaline databases, are under discussion between the London Residuary body, and the London boroughs.

Opinion Polls

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what use his Department has made of commissioned opinion polls in the past five years.

Mr. Ridley: I shall answer this question shortly.

Housing Provision

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures are in operation within his Department to ensure that schemes funded through the urban housing renewal unit promote equality of opportunity in housing provision for ethnic minority groups, women and people with a disability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Applications for support by estate action (formerly the urban housing renewal unit) are formulated by local authorities taking account of local needs and circumstances. My Department considers all applications on their merits, but we insist that an objective of every scheme must be to secure better delivery of services to all the people who live on the estates.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment which sections in his Department have responsibility for the formulation, promotion and implementation of policies of equal opportunity; and how many staff are employed on such work.

Mr. Ridley: In 1986 my Department, jointly with the Department of Transport, set up a special unit with the specific responsibilities for formulating, promoting and implementing equal opportunities policies within the Departments. The unit has five staff.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the directives, circulars, regulations and any other publications which have been produced by his Department since 1979 to advise or direct local authorities on matters of equal opportunity.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has published the following documents since 1979 which relate specifically to equal opportunities as they affect local authorities:

Local Authorities and Racial Disadvantage: Report of a Joint Government Local Authority Association Working Group (1982).

Local Authorities and Racial Disadvantage: Report of a Conference held at Church House, Westminster (March 1983).

The Urban Programme: Tackling Racial Disadvantage (1983).

Ethnic Minorities and the Urban Programme: Report of a Research Project (1982).

In addition, various circulars, publications and so on will have dealt inter alia with equal opportunities issues. A full list of these could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a breakdown of the number of staff in his Department by section and grade who are (a) women and (b) from a minority ethnic group; and if he will express each as a percentage of total staff.

Mr. Ridley: This information about staff from ethnic minority groups is not currently available, although the voluntary monitoring surveys still in progress will provide some of the information in the future.

Information about women, in the detail and form requested, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what formal procedures exist in his Department for the purpose of measuring performance in respect of equal opportunities in recruitment, selection, training, promotion and career progression of staff.

Mr. Ridley: It is one of the aims of my Department's equal opportunities programme of action to monitor the effectiveness of its equal opportunities policies. My Department is now reviewing the best means to achieve this.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what specific initiatives are currently in operation in his Department which are aimed to be of benefit to women or ethnic minority groups.

Mr. Ridley: There has long been a policy of equal opportunities for women and ethnic minority staff in my Department. Specific recent initiatives include: provision of opportunities for part-time working and job-sharing; special leave arrangements for maternity, domestic and other personal reasons; measures to reduce the risk of discrimination in recruitment and promotion (for example through briefing for promotion boards); conduct of surveys of ethnic origin; some women-only training courses in management and special skills; establishment of an equal opportunities unit.

Councillors (Voting Rights)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why a Conservative party councillor in East Sussex county council who had declared an interest in respect of discretionary education awards was recently given a dispensation to vote at council meetings; and why it was not given in respect of that authority's party and resources committee.

Mr. Chope: This application for the Secretary of State's dispensation under section 97(1) of the Local Government Act 1972 was dealt with in accordance with the long-established policy contained in DOE circular 105/73. Where a member's declared interest is immediate, the prohibition on speaking and voting is generally strictly maintained. Where a declared interest is not immediate, dispensation to speak is readily given; and dispensation to vote is given (a) if at least half of the council or relevant committee would otherwise be disabled, or (b) elected party balance on the council or committee would otherwise be upset. In the case in question, the disabilities imposed by the member's declared interest, which was not an immediate one, would have affected party balance in the council but not in the policy and resources committee; dispensation was therefore granted to vote in the council but not in the committee.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of occasions by name of councillor, local authority and date when he exercised his powers under section 97(1) of the Local Government Act 1972 to remove a disability to vote.

Mr. Chope: The Secretary of State currently exercises his powers under section 97(1) of the Local Government Act 1972 to remove a disability to vote on approximately 1,000 occasions a year. Statistical monitoring of applications does not record information in the form requested by the hon. Member and the cost of meeting the request would therefore be disproportionate.

Football Supporters

Mr. Pendry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Today newspaper about its proposal for a 100 per cent. membership card scheme for football supporters; and when he expects to respond to the Football League's paper on hooliganism at football matches.

Mr. Tracey: None. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department and I will be meeting the Football League and the Football Association on 23 February, when we shall take forward our discussions about the league's paper.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of staff in his Department are registered disabled; and if his Department is exempt, or has applied for exemption, from the 3 per cent. provision of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944.

Mr. Ridley: My Department employs 1·1 per cent. registered disabled non-industrial staff (as at February 1987). Figures are not readily available for industrial staff.

The Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 is not binding on the Crown. Successive Governments have, however, undertaken to accept the same responsibilities as other employers, consistent with the principle of fair and open competition.

Birmingham (Convention Centre)

Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he expects to be able to make a decision on an application for £6 million urban development grant towards the cost of building a hotel as part of Birmingham's international convention centre by 28 February.

Mr. John Patten: A decision will be made as soon as possible on the application for £6 million grant to the proposed five-star hotel, but in view of the complexity of the application and the large amount of grant sought, I cannot say whether it will be before 28 February.

Rating Valuation

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish his White Paper on the revaluation of commercial and industrial premises in England; and when he expects the actual revaluation to take place.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend intends to lay shortly the orders necessary for a revaluation of non-domestic property in England and Wales to take effect from 1 April 1990. The principal order will require the approval of both Houses of Parliament.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the principles behind the continued rating valuation differences between flats and houses.

Dr. Boyson: There is no statutory distinction between houses and flats for rating purposes. Both are assessed on the basis of the annual rent which they would have commanded on the open market in 1973: the date of the last revaluation.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many vacancies currently exist on the board of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten: Three.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to make appointments to the board of the London Docklands Development Corporation.

Mr. John Patten: In addition to the three existing vacancies, several appointments are due to expire in July this year. Careful consideration is currently being given to appointments.

Land Register

Mr. Steen asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff are currently employed in his Department to manage the register of vacant and derelict public land; and what is the annual cost in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 28 January 1987, c. 244]: Maintenance of the registers of unused and underused land owned by public bodies involves the following tasks:

- (a) entering new sites on the registers and removing sites as they are brought into use or sold, including keeping the computerised database up to date;
- (b) discussing with owning bodies their own plans for using sites on the registers to establish whether directed disposals might be appropriate;
- (c) considering requests from members of the public for land to be entered on the registers and for the Secretary of State to use his power to direct disposal of land that is entered on the register;
- (d) issuing notices of proposed directions under section 99 of the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980; considering representations from land owners;
- (e) sending out directions to dispose of land under section 98 of the Act; monitoring progress towards disposal; taking legal proceedings to enforce compliance where necessary;
- (f) making the registers available for inspection by the public, including interrogation of the computerised database.

This work is combined with other duties by staff working in 11 locations around the country: the equivalent of 19 full-time staff are currently so employed. The basic staff cost for 1986-87 is estimated to be £297,000; for 1985-86 it was estimated to be £268,000. The staff costs attributable to this work in earlier years were not separately identified.

Defective Housing

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now consider giving the owners of houses of the defective categories designated in the Housing Act 1985, but which never formed part of public housing stock, rights comparable to those given to owners of such housing which did once form part of the public housing stock.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 2 February 1987, c. 493]: We have at present no plans to extend the housing defects legislation to cover privately developed houses.

Home Insulation

Mr. Rowlands asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to bring to an end the current grant arrangements for loft insulation; and when he intends to implement the amended regulations announced on 19 December Official Report, column 757.

Mr. Tracey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) on Thursday 29 January, at column 316.

Local Authority Finance

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of the total spending by London borough councils in each of the past five years on (a) police monitoring units, (b) women's support units, (c) ethnic minority policies and (d) gay and lesbian policy initiatives.

Mr. Chope: I shall answer this question shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Diplomatic Immunity

13. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedure by which the police seek to verify the legitimacy of claims for diplomatic immunity by persons being questioned about or charged with criminal offences; if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to how this procedure applied in the case of the husband of the United States diplomat in respect of whom diplomatic immunity was not waived; and what stage the police inquiries had reached in this case when immunity was claimed.

Mr. Mellor: The verification arrangements are set out in the consolidated circular to the police, a copy of which is in the Library. The Department received a report of the incident two days after the police interview with Mr. James Ingley on 18 December 1985. No claim to immunity was made at that time, but police inquiries had meanwhile established entitlement to immunity and Mr. Ingley was accordingly released on the same day.

We understand that Mr. Ingley no longer has immunity, and the alleged offence is extraditable under the United States-United Kingdom extradition treaty. The Crown Prosecution Service was asked to consider the evidence. However, the Director of Public Prosecutions has now decided that the evidence is insufficient for a prosecution, and therefore no basis for an extradition request exists.

Guildford and Woolwich Bombings

14. Mr. Flannery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received following his decision not to refer the cases of those convicted for the Guildford and Woolwich bombings and of the Maguire family to the Court of Appeal.

30. Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received since he announced his decision not to refer to the Court of Appeal the cases of those sentenced for the Guildford bombing and of the Maguire family.

Mr. Hurd: I have received 10 letters expressing regret at my decision in the Guildford and Woolwich pub bombings case; four letters expressing similar views in regard to the Maguire case; and 12 letters expressing similar views in regard to both cases.

Civil Defence

15. Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of county and district centres have been fitted with air conditioning systems and filters able to protect against chemical weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not kept centrally, but the Government have not asked that such measures be taken, and so far as we know none have.

17. Mr. McQuarrie asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research has been completed on probable civilian casualties within a radius of 20 km of military targets resulting from chemical attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the absence of a ban on chemical weapons, the Government judge it prudent to conduct a variety of studies into the effects of chemical weapons and protection against them. This work is not yet complete.

18. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what protective equipment his Department issues to the police and fire service and to the civil protection volunteers who may have to work in the open under chemical attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None; a decision will be taken when the work on protection against chemical attack is complete.

Mr. Robert Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct a series of regional civil defence exercises based on the scenario of an attack which will include chemical weapons on ports, airfields and military installations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government support and encourage regional civil defence exercises. These are intended primarily to test plans and procedures. Such a scenario would not be appropriate until the work on chemical protection is complete, and any relevant plans made.

26. Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to protect the public against the effects of chemical attacks.

61. Mr. Terlezki asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department plans to provide protection for the general public along the lines already adopted by Switzerland, Sweden and Norway against the effects of chemical weapons.

19. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department gives to local authorities to provide for the protection of the civilian population against the effects of chemical weapons in their emergency planning.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. These matters will be considered when the work on chemical protection is complete.

37. Mr. Lord asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what chemical detection monitoring equipment he proposes to issue to local authorities; and when they can expect to receive them.

48. Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange for tuition in chemical warfare protection to be given at police and fire service staff colleges.

51. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what equipment he proposes to issue to local authorities to detect the presence of chemical agents.

53. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will issue instructions on the signals to be used over the existing warning system to indicate a chemical attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Consideration will be given to these matters when the work on chemical protection is complete.

49. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what training the police and fire services and civil protection volunteers receive in protective measures against chemical warfare.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None at present, consideration will be given to this matter when the work on chemical protection is complete.

50. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil defence committee is doing any work on protective measures for the civilian population against chemical weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Civil Defence Committee exchanges information on a wide range of civil defence matters including protection against chemical weapons. It does not, as an organisation, initiate specific research studies.

60. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the revised version of the "Protect and Survive" pamphlet will be published.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The new civil protection public information material issued in December, is intended to replace "Protect and Survive" for peacetime purposes. In the event of an emergency, detailed practical advice on protective measures would be issued through the media.

Animals (Experiments)

16. Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department has conducted into the effect of a ban on the testing of cosmetics on animals.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have given very careful thought to the question of cosmetics testing but do not believe that an abitrary ban would be sensible or justifiable. The course which we have adopted is to impose rigorous controls over all experimentation involving living animals. This approach was endorsed by Parliament during the passage of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The main provisions of the new Act are now in force. They will ensure that all applications for experimental work involving animals receive detailed scrutiny and only work which can be justified will be allowed. Additionally, we have decided that all applications for projects involving cosmetics will be examined by the Animal Procedures Committee.

Armed Police Raids

20. Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement on the policy and management of armed police raids.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This was a subject which was closely examined by the Home Office working group on police use of firearms whose conclusions and recommendations my right hon. Friend announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 3 February at column 562-3.

Prison Officers

21. Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to improve both the working and the living conditions of prison officers working in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Prison officers stand to benefit from many aspects of the Government's policies for, and record levels of expenditure on the prison service. Particular examples are the prison building programme, which includes planned expenditure of some £20 million on staff facilities as well as other improvements in officers' working conditions; and the "Fresh Start" initiative which will substantially reduce officers' average working week while enhancing their basic pay and general working arrangements.

Chief Constables

22. Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the regulations governing the conduct of chief constables.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. We are, however, reviewing the arrangements for the investigation of allegations against senior police officers, including chief constables.

Police Authorities

23. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the law in respect of the responsibilities and powers of police authorities over local police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Immigration Control

25. Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve the operation of the system of immigration control.

Mr. Waddington: Recent changes have improved the operation of the control. The arrangements will continue to be kept under review in the light of changing patterns of travel and traffic.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

27. Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to move the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings to one prison to enable them to prepare their case in the Court of Appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: If their legal representatives believe that a meeting between the men would be beneficial then consideration would be given to such a request.

31. Mr. Benn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the persons interviewed during his inquiries in the 15 months that elapsed between the submission by the hon. Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) in October 1985 and his statement on 20 January to the House, in relation to the Birmingham pub bombings case.

Mr. Mellor: Officials had meetings with Mr. Christopher Mullin; Dr. Frank Skuse and his solicitor; and Mr. George Walker, formerly Director of the forensic science service laboratory at Chorley. Senior officers of the West Midlands police had a meeting with Mr. Mullin and interviewed Mr. Thomas Clarke, formerly a police constable in that force.

39. Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding his decision to refer the convictions of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings to the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Mellor: We have received 10 letters, five welcoming my right hon. Friend's decision, four expressing regret and one commenting on one aspect of the case.

Television (Advertising Time)

28. Mr. Ottaway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend section 9 of the Broadcasting Act 1981 in respect of the responsibilities of the Independent Broadcasting Authority for determining advertising time on independent television.

Mr. Mellor: No.

City of London (Business Activities)

29. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions arising from business activities in the City of London were begun in each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that the available information, which relates to fraud, is as follows:

Prosecutions in the City of London arising from investigations commenced by the Metropolitan and City Police Company Fraud Department 1983-86

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 20 |
| 1984 | 31 |
| 1985 | 37 |
| 1986 | 20 |

The steps we are taking, including the new powers in the Financial Services Act, the establishment of the serious fraud office and other measures in response to the report of the Fraud Trials Committee (chaired by Lord Roskill) are evidence of our determination to tackle business and financial crime energetically and effectively.

Merseyside Police Authority

32. Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Merseyside police authority concerning police expenditure and the Merseyside police authority for the precept for 1987-88.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The authority has written to my right hon. Friend about the adequacy of the maximum precept for 1987-88 which would be derived from the formula provided in the Local Government Finance Bill. A delegation from the authority is coming to discuss this matter with me on 10 February.

Police Authorities (East Midlands)

33. Mr. Leigh asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the level of funding to police authorities in the east midlands.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for police authorities in the east midlands, as in the rest of England and Wales, to determine the resources to be made available to their forces. Fifty-one per cent. of what each police authority spends in a particular year for police purposes is met by the Home Office through police grant. The remaining 49 per cent. is met by the police authority from its own resources, which consist of block grant from the Department of the Environment and rates.

Crack and Cocaine

34. Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of the trend in crack and cocaine addiction; and what new measures are being taken to interdict the trade and punish offenders.

Mr. Mellor: The number of new addicts notified to the Home Office for addiction to cocaine, either alone or with other drugs, was 345 (1983), 471 (1984) and 490 (1985). The smoking of cocaine in its base form, including crack, remains rare in the United Kingdom. Much of our overall strategy against drug misuse is relevant to cocaine, in particular the allocation of £1 million for reducing cocaine production and trafficking in South America; deployment by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise of additional investigation staff against cocaine smuggling; and the posting of United Kingdom drugs liaison officers to relevant parts of the world. The Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986, which came fully into force last month, constitutes a powerful new weapon in the fight against traffickers in cocaine and other drugs.

Coroners

35. Mr. John Hunt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Coroners (Amendment) Act 1926 to extend the jurisdiction of a coroner beyond low water mark in those cases where a drowning takes place several miles out to sea or where the body is not recovered.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no immediate plans to do so.

Independent Broadcasting Authority

36. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman, together with other members of the authority, on 7 January. A wide variety of matters concerning the independent television system was discussed.

Crime Prevention

38. Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total expenditure by Government Departments on crime prevention initiatives.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's policy is to encourage the use of crime prevention measures as an integral part of public and private planning. It is not therefore always possible to separate expenditure on crime prevention from other expenditure, although crime prevention measures increasingly feature in the Government's programmes. Among the main items of Government crime prevention expenditure in this financial year are: an estimated £3·2 billion spent on the police in England and Wales, much of whose work involves crime prevention; an estimated £28 million spent under the Department of the Environment's Urban Programme and Estates Action; and £2·5 million used for crime prevention publicity. The 7,000 places approved under the Manpower Services Commission's community programme crime prevention initiative represent an annual expenditure of about £33 million.

43. Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for developing the Home Office crime prevention publicity campaign.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The third phase of the "Magpies" publicity campaign is to be launched on 23 February 1987. The purpose of the campaign is to encourage householders to improve the physical security of their homes and the "Magpies" television commercials will be shown for the first time on the TV South, TV South West, Harlech TV and Anglia Television areas. There will be a reminder television campaign in the north of England. The television campaign will be reinforced in the new areas by the house-to-house distribution of 6·6 million leaflets. Further coverage will be achieved through advertising in national newspapers and magazines. The full campaign will cost £1·7 million.

The 1987-88 crime prevention publicity budget has been increased from £2·6 million to £4·8 million. The greater part of the additional funds will be spent on a new national advertising campaign which is now in development.

Citizenship

40. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning appeal rights for those claiming British citizenship by descent.

Mr. Waddington: We have received a number of letters from right hon. and hon. Members, from interested organisations and law practitioners and from members of the public.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

41. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much the criminal injuries compensation scheme cost in 1984-85 and 1985-86; and how much has been allocated for 1986-87.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Cost of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 39·5 |
| 1985-86 | 45·9 |
| 1986-87 (Supply Estimate) | 49·9 |

Victim Support Schemes

42. Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial provisions his Department will be making to assist the development of local victim support schemes; and what plans he has for assessing the performance of such schemes.

Mr. Mellor: We plan to provide up to £2 million in 1987-88 to local victims support schemes, as part of a new programme of funding totalling £9 million over three years with the primary purpose of enabling local schemes to employ full-time co-ordinators. We shall also continue to provide a grant to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes which advises local schemes and helps to co-ordinate their development. Arrangements for administering the new funding for local schemes are being discussed with the national association, and will include measures to assess the effectiveness of this form of support in relation to the service provided by local schemes.

Trials (Scientific Witnesses)

44. Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the cases involving scientific witnesses from the Home Office laboratory at Chorley which have been referred to the Court of Appeal since 1979.

Mr. Mellor: There have been five such cases apart from the Birmingham pub bombings case. The five cases were among 11 referred to the Court of Appeal in 1984, all of which involved evidence given by the former forensic scientist, Dr. Alan Clift. The five cases which related to Dr. Clift's work at the Chorley (or, formerly, Preston) laboratory were:

Geoffrey Mycock, convicted of murder, housebreaking and larceny on 7 February 1969 at Preston;
Dieter Otto Schnepel, convicted of murder on 20 October 1970 at Manchester;
Michael Szpytma and Alan John Sample, convicted of assault occasioning actual bodily harm on 22 November 1971 at Liverpool;
Melvin Harrison, convicted of murder on 27 July 1972 at Liverpool;
Norman Berry North, convicted of manslaughter on 9 May 1973 at Preston.

Mr. Schnepel abandoned his appeal, and Mr. Harrison's appeal was dismissed. The convictions of Mr. Mycock, Mr. Szpytma and Mr. Sample were quashed.

Prisons

45. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress and scale of the prison building programme.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) on 20 November 1986.

55. Mr. Forth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many additional prison places will be created by 1991 through the prison building and refurbishing programmes.

Mr. Mellor: By 1991 we shall have created about 9,900 additional places. Of this 5,100 will be in purpose-built new establishments (three of which have already been opened) and a further 4,800 places through redevelopment schemes at existing establishments.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

46. Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of neighbourhood watch schemes in the Thames Valley police authority area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 31 December 1986 there were 155 neighbourhood watch schemes in the Thames Valley police authority area, nearly double the number which had existed three months before.

Fraud Squad

47. Mr. Jessell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now seek to recruit additional professional staff to the fraud squad.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The recruitment and disposition of police officers within each force is a matter for chief officers of police. Arrangements exist for the police to secure professional advice in the investigation of fraud through the fraud investigation group, which is operated by the Director of Public Prosecutions. Proposals are currently under consideration in the Criminal Justice Bill to build on these arrangements in establishing a Serious Fraud Office which will work with the police in the investigation of serious or complex frauds and will provide specialist professional expertise.

Local Authorities (Election)

52. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to change the system by which local authorities are elected; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to change the simple majority system of voting at local authority elections in Great Britain. We are still considering a recommendation by the Widdicombe committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business that all councillors in England and Wales should be elected every four years by whole-council elections based on single-member electoral areas.

Police Duties

54. Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if his Department has carried out any research into the proportion of police time spent on duties other than the prevention or detection of crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are only a few police duties which are not connected in some way with the prevention or detection of crime, and the Department has not conducted a study of the proportion of police time spent on such duties. But many of the research projects carried out by the Home Office involve studying how police time is spent. A current study being conducted in conjunction with the West Midlands police, which aims to release officers from administrative tasks for operational duties, is due to be completed later this year. Two further projects are studying the tasks of uniformed patrol officers, and the results of this research will be published in due course.

Probation Service

56. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for increasing funding for the probation service over the next five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government's plan for expenditure on the probation service are set out in their 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 56-II), published in January. The White Paper covers the years up to and including 1989-90, beyond which there are as yet no plans.

Road Traffic Legislation

57. Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the resources available to police forces to enforce road traffic legislation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is a matter for individual chief officers of police to determine how best to deploy their resources in the light of local conditions. The total strength of the police service in England and Wales on 30 November 1986 was 121,732 (an increase of 10,239 since May 1979), of whom about 8 per cent. are deployed on specialist traffic duties. Uniformed officers performing general duties also take action to enforce road traffic legislation.

Crime Victims

58. Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new initiatives are being taken by his Department to assist the victims of crime.

Mr. Mellor: We propose in the Criminal Justice Bill to extend the range of cases in which compensation orders may be made, to empower the courts to order the proceeds of forfeiture orders to be paid in compensation to the victim, and to give injured victims a statutory right to compensation from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board. The Bill would also extend measures protecting the anonymity of rape victims back to the time when the offence is committed, and enable children under 14 to give evidence by video link in cases involving a sexual offence or violent attack.

We also plan to give increased financial assistance to local victims support schemes. In 1987-88, as well as continuing to provide a grant to the National Association of Victims Support Schemes, we shall make available up to £2 million to local schemes as part of a new programme of funding totalling £9 million over three years. This is intended primarily to enable schemes to employ full-time co-ordinators so that the best use can be made of volunteer resources.

Advice has been offered to the police on the treatment of women who are victims of violence. A copy of the Home Office circular 69/1986, issued in October 1986, is in the Library.

Sentencing Policy

59. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received regarding policy towards minimum and maximum sentences.

Mr. Mellor: We receive many letters about sentencing policy; some suggest the alteration of existing maxima; others propose the introduction of minimum sentences. As my hon. Friend knows, we consider the existing maxima to be generally satisfactory. In our view statutory minimum sentences would be an injustifiable interference with judicial discretion.

Prison Population

62. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the prison population at the latest date for which figures are available; and how this compares with 1979.

66. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Mellor: On 23 January 1987 the total prison population in England and Wales was 46,827 plus 58 Immigration Act detainees held on a temporary basis in Erlestoke.

On 31 January 1979, the nearest equivalent date for which figures are available, the total was 41,405.

Police Strengths

63. Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any immediate plans to review constabulary strengths throughout the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend stated on 20 May 1986 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) at columns 124-25, following a review by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary of the manpower needs of provincial forces, the aim is to approve total increases in their establishments of the order of 2,000 posts over the next few years. We shall shortly be considering applications from police authorities for increases in the financial year 1987-88.

Drug Offenders

64. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average number of offenders serving prison sentences for drug offences in England and Wales in 1979, 1983, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to persons serving an immediate custodial sentence on 30 June in Prison Department Establishments in England and Wales for drugs offences. This is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (Table 1.8 of the latest issue, for 1985, Cmnd 9903). Provisional information for 1986 shows about 2,800 persons serving sentences for these offences.

Prison Officers and Prisoners

65. Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been (a) the percentage increase in the number of prison officers and (b) the percentage increase in the average prison population since 1979; and if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations on reforming working practices in the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: The number of prison officers has increased by 21·52 per cent. since 1979, whilst the average daily prison population has increased by 10·77 per cent. Discussions with the Prison Officers' Association and the other Prison Service trade unions on reforming working practices are still under way, and we very much hope that they can be brought to a speedy and agreed conclusion.

Crime Costs

67. Mr. Haynes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department is conducting any current research into the economic cost of crime.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Tottenham (Mr. Atkinson) on 18 December 1986 at columns 1340-41.

Crime Statistics

68. Mr. Frank Cook asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of crimes in England and Wales (a) in the 12 months ended March 1979 and (b) in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Bassetlaw (Mr. Ashton) on 18 December 1986 at column 643. Statistics of notifiable offences recorded by the police are published each quarter in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin (issue number 39/86 on 12 December being the most recent).

Immigration

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the passengers from the Indian sub-continent who sought entry to the United Kingdom at Heathrow airport between 11 and 15 October 1986, were (a) admitted within that period, (b) refused entry within that period, (c) refused entry at a later date and (d) still await a decision.

Mr. Waddington: The information readily available refers to passengers who arrived at Heathrow airport, Terminal 3 only and is as follows:

(a) approximately 5,000
(b) 331
(c) 294
(d) 297

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers and immigration officers were involved in the operations on 12 December 1986 at (i) prison department headquarters at Cleland house and (ii) the Parole Board at Abel house; how many people and of what nationalities were (a) interviewed and (b) detained in the operation; for how long and where; what was the immigration status of those who were arrested and not charged; for how long they were under arrest; and with regard to what breaches of immigration controls these people were interviewed or charged.

Mr. Waddington: This was a single major joint operation, involving 16 police officers and 15 immigration officials, planned specifically to investigate suspected offences under the immigration laws.

A total of 26 people employed by a contract cleaning company were interviewed, 25 Ghanaians and one Nigerian. Of these 14 were arrested and taken to Rochester Row police station with the following results:

Five (including the one Nigerian) were charged with working in breach of conditions;
Three were judged to be illegal entrants;
Three were charged with overstaying;
Two were overstayers who were given notice of intention to deport them; and
One, whose status was in doubt, was bailed to re-appear the next day but failed to do so. He remains untraced.

Following initial custody at Rochester Row police station two of these people were transferred to Harmondsworth detention centre the following day, and two others to Latchmere House remand centre on 15 December, pending removal from the United Kingdom. The periods spend in detention in these cases were: 1½, 14, 19 and 33 days.

In the other cases in which people were arrested the periods spent in custody, all at Rochester Row police station, were:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 4 hours or less | 1 |
| Over 4 but under 6 hours | 3 |
| Over 6 but under 9 hours | 2 |
| Over 9 but under 24 hours | 4 |

Of the 12 people who were dealt with at their place of work:

Two were judged to be illegal entrants. They were released temporarily pending removal from the United Kingdom;
Two were found to have been refused leave to enter and to be on temporary admission pending further consideration of their cases;
One was an overstayer, time-barred from prosecution, whose case merited further consideration;
Four were found to have no restrictions on their taking of employment in the United Kingdom;
Three were asked to produce evidence of their status, which could not be determined at the time. Their cases are still under consideration.

This operation was conducted in accordance with the recommendations of Home Office Circular 131/1980, of which a copy was placed in the Library in December 1980.

Sir Trevor Skeet asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to make any changes to the list of ports of entry designated under the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. Hurd: An order will shortly be made to replace the Immigration (Ports of Entry) Order 1972 as amended. Ramsgate will be added to the list of seaports and hoverports now designated and Ramsgate Hoverport will be deleted from that list. Leeds/Bradford Airport will be added and Lydd (Ferryfield) deleted from the list of airports.

Edinburgh (Turnhouse) and Newcastle (Woolsington) Airports will be re-designated as Edinburgh and Newcastle respectively.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how often Her Majesty's inspectors of prisons inspect Harmondsworth detention centre.

Mr. Waddington: Since the new Inspectorate of Prisons was set up in January 1981 Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons has not yet inspected the immigration detention centre at Harmondsworth.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Metropolitan police receives towards the cost of each remand prisoner detained in a police station; and what was the total sum received by the Metropolitan police in 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Metropolitan Police recover from the Home Office Prison Department the full costs of holding prisoners in police stations. The costs between 1 January and 30 November 1985 (the latest period for which the information is available) are estimated to be about £4 million. These will have been paid by the end of the 1986-87 financial year.

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many remand prisoners have been detained in police stations in each Metropolitan police division in each month of 1986; and what were the minimum, average and maximum lengths of such detentions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that for operational reasons he would not wish the police stations in which remand prisoners are held to be identified. The other information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I understand, however, that during 1986 the average daily total of remand and convicted prisoners detained in police establishments in the Metropolitan police district was 101, with the highest number being 235. I also understand that the longest period for which a male prisoner has been detained in police cells is 31 nights and that the corresponding period for a woman prisoner is 44 nights.

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were allowed (a) terminal home leave and (b) short home leave in 1985; and how many of these failed to return to prison.

Mr. Mellor: (a) 1,046; (b) 971. The figures collected centrally do not distinguish between failures to return from terminal home leave, short home leave and pre-parole leave. The total numbers of home leaves in all three categories granted in 1985 was 4,440. 243 prisoners failed to return. These figures exclude young offenders.

Rape

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of rape offences reported to the police in 1984, 1985 and 1986 by police force area; and if he will also list the percentage clear-up rate for offences of rape.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is on the number of offences of rape recorded by each police force and is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (table S.3.1 in volume 3 of the issue for 1985). Figures for 1986 are not yet available. The clear-up rate for rape in England and Wales was 67 per cent. in 1983, 68 per cent. in 1984 and 64 per cent. in 1985. Part of the fall in 1985 is attributable to changes in police recording practice, resulting in an increasing proportion of the cases reported being recorded as offences. Clear-up rates for individual forces are based on small numbers and so are subject to wide variation and may be misleading.

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to provide for statutory minimum imprisonment sentences in cases of convictions for rape; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: Sentencing in individual cases is a matter for the courts. It is a fundamental principle of our criminal justice system that they should be able, in sentencing, to take account of the particular circumstances of each offence and offender. Even with a uniquely despicable offence like rape there can be many variable factors which make it impossible to prescribe by a minimum sentence which would be just in every case. I think it better to rely on the Court of Appeal's ability to lay down guidelines for the Crown Court to follow, and on the Government's proposals in clause 29 of the Criminal Justice Bill.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in each of the last 10 years, having served a sentence of imprisonment for rape, were subsequently convicted for a further offence of rape or sexual assault; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 16 December 1986 at columns 481-82.

EC (Tourism)

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given during the British presidency of the European Community to the implications for tourism of eliminating barriers, and particularly the hindrances to personal movement within the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The United Kingdom in common with other member states recognises the advantages to tourists in reducing frontier controls within the Community. In that connection discussion continued during the presidency of the draft frontier controls directive which would abolish routine customs and immigration checks at the Community internal land borders.

Television Licences

Mr. Clelland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many television licences were issued to (a) betting shops, (b) public houses and (c) hotels in Great Britain in 1986; and what proportion of the total income from television licences each category represented.

Mr. Mellor: Separate records are not kept of television licences issued to betting shops and public houses. As at 30 September 1986 1,574 special hotel licences were in force. The revenue raised by these licences represents 0·1 per cent. of total gross licence revenue. This is in addition to revenue from standard television licences issued to smaller hotels and guest houses, which are required to pay only the standard fee if television is installed in fewer than 16 bedrooms. The number of such licences is not recorded separately.

Postmen (Dog Attacks)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of the rising incidence of attacks on postmen by dogs, he has any plans to seek to increase the penalties available to the courts to deal with dog owners who fail to keep their dogs under proper control.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans to do so.

BBC

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he was consulted by the Metropolitan police before they sought warrants for the police raid on BBC Scotland's Glasgow office.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the nature of items removed from BBC Scotland offices in Glasgow which are now in their possession.

Mr. Hurd: I have nothing to add to what I said in the House during the debate on 3 February.

Police (Legal Actions)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil actions were brought against the Commisioner of Police of the Metropolis in 1986; and how many of these were settled out of court.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commisioner of Police of the Metropolis that in 1986 there were 188 cases in which a writ or summons was served on him in respect of alleged wrongful acts by police officers. Of these 188 cases, eight have so far been concluded by a settlement out of court.

Royal Residences (Security)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the standard of security at Sandringham house and other royal residences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: At about 3.45 pm on Thursday 22 January an intruder scaled the perimeter gates at Sandringham House and moved towards the residence. He was detected as he entered the property and was detained by the police before he reached the house. He was found to have a history of mental illness and was taken to hospital. I am studying a report on the incident from the chief constable of Norfolk.

Although the security arrangements were effective in detecting the intruder the police are, as a matter of course, reviewing them. Their conclusion will be considered by my Department in the Standing Committee which monitors royal security. Substantial improvements have been made to the security arrangements at all the royal residences in recent years and are kept under constant review.

Journalists (Identity Cards)

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what approaches he has made to chief constables suggesting the issuing of identity cards to journalists; how many such cards have been issued; on what criteria they are issued; what representations he has received urging that such cards should be issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am writing to the hon. Member.

Drink-Driving Offences

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 12 January, Official Report, c. 71-72, if he will take the necessary steps to obtain and publish in the Official Report details of the number of motorists stopped and positively breathalysed for drunken driving in the Metropolitan police area between Christmas and new year's day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commisioner of the Police of the Metropolis tells me that between 8 December 1986 and 4 January 1987 inclusive there were 1,802 positive roadside screening tests in the Metropolitan police force area. Information on the total number of tests carried out has not been collated and could presently be obtained only at disproportionate cost. But it will be included in the Home Office bulletin "Statistics on Breath Tests—England and Wales" to be published in the middle of this year.

Fresh Start Programme

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the fresh start programme in the prison service.

Mr. Mellor: Discussions on the fresh start proposals are continuing with all the prison service trade unions. A progressive series of development exercises, and a related training programme for the staff concerned, is planned to begin next month.

Fascist Conference

Mr. Winnick asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give instructions that French and Italian Fascists, due to attend a conference in London in the week beginning 9 February be refused entry into the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total sum paid by the Metropolitan police to the private contractors in respect of the penalties paid on wheel-clamped vehicles during December 1986.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of the Police of the Metropolis has informed me that a total of £86,747·59 was paid to the contractors for their work on clamping carried out between 1 December and 27 December 1986.

Police Cars (Accidents)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were killed by speeding police cars in 1986; what was the location in each case; and what was the coroner's inquest verdict in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not available centrally. Arrangements have been made for information to be collected from 1 January this year on the number of accidents involving police vehicles which cause death or serious injury in each police force area.

Ethnic Minorities

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the applications he has received for funding of posts under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 since he issued draft revised administrative guidelines for section 11 grants on 26 March 1986; and if he will state against each application, his reasons for not granting section 11 funding.

Mr. Waddington [pursuant to his reply, 26 January 1987, c. 27]: Information on fresh applications for new posts, or proportions of new posts, received since 26 March 1986 is set out in the following table. In a small number of other cases applications not made on the proper form have been returned to the local authority. Applications received after 26 March 1986 but before the new guidelines came into force on 1 October 1986 were considered under the guidelines set out in Home Office Circular No. 97/1982. During the same period we also considered plans from a number of local education authorities for the reorganisation of sometimes substantial numbers of teaching posts found to be ineligible for grant during a recent general administrative review of posts.

DEFENCE

Territorial Army

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has received the report on the release of employees for Territorial Army service from the national employer liaison committee; if he will make the report public; if he will list the membership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The national employer liaison committee has now issued an interim report, which makes a number of recommendations aimed at, inter alia, increasing employers' awareness of the role and importance of the Territorial Army, thereby encouraging a greater degree of co-operation from them. These recommendations are being considered. The membership of the committee, to whom I would like to express the Department's gratitude for their worthy efforts, is as follows:

NATIONAL EMPLOYER LIAISON COMMITTEE (NELC) — MEMBERSHIP

Chairman
Mr. R. T. S. Macpherson CBE, MC, TD, DL.
Representatives from Industry, Commerce and Trade Unions
Mr. A. J. Gooding.
Chairman
Gooding Group Ltd.

The Right Hon. Earl Jellicoe DSO, MC.
Chairman
Davy Corporation.

Mr. J. Leigh Pemberton.
Managing Director
Whatman Reeve Angel plc.

Mr. F. A. Baker.
Representing TUC.

Mr. J. Miller.
James Miller & Partners Ltd.

Sir Trevor Holdsworth.
GKN plc.

Mr. J. Lyles BSc., ATI, JP.
Chairman
S. Lyles plc.

Sir J. J. Salisse.

Representatives from MOD and Council of TAVRAs
DGTA & Org.—Maj. Gen. C. E. W. Jones CBE.
AUS(A).—Mr. M. J. Culham.
Chairman Council of TAVRAs — Lt. Gen. Sir Peter Hudson CB, CBE, DL.
Brig. TA—Brig. P. P. Orchard Lisle TD, ADC, DL.
Vice Chairman Council of TAVRAs—Col. G. S. P. Carden CBE, TD, DL.

May be in Attendance
DARC—Brig. W. K. L. Prosser CBE, MC.
Col. TA—Col. A. C. Ward OBE.
Secretary Council of TAVRAs—Maj. Gen. M. Matthews CB.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to make an announcement about the payment of Department of Health and Social Security benefits to members of the Territorial Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Members of the Territorial Army in receipt of supplementary benefit may earn an additional £4 per week from Territorial Army sources without effect on benefit, and are allowed to aggregate the total disregard of £32 per month. A procedure has also been introduced to reduce the delay in re-commencing both unemployment and supplementary payments on return from annual camp. The Government are now considering the position of members in receipt of unemployment benefit, and I hope to make an announcement on this shortly.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's review of vehicles and the use of ammunition by the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: Although reviews of vehicle holdings and the use of ammunition are being undertaken as part of the normal process of programme management, none of them relate specifically to the Territorial Army, although their needs will, of course, be taken into consideration.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report for each of the years from 1978 (i) the strength and (ii) the establishment of the Territorial Army.

Mr. Freeman: The respective figures for (i) strength and (ii) establishment of the Territorial Army at 1 April for each of the years from 1978 are:

| Year | Strength | Establishment |
|---|---|---|
| 1978 | 60,645 | n/a |
| 1979 | 59,387 | 72,635 |
| 1980 | 63,292 | 73,666 |
| 1981 | 69,524 | 73,666 |
| 1982 | 72,062 | 74,961 |
| 1983 | 72,825 | 73,765 |
| 1984 | 71,415 | 75,051 |
| 1985 | 73,675 | 77,659 |
| 1986 | 77,681 | 80,185 |

The corresponding figures for the home service force, which is an integral part of the Territorial Army, from 1984, following the formation of the new force are:

| Year | Strength | Establishment |
|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 317 | n/a |
| 1985 | 911 | 4,110 |
| 1986 | 3,005 | 4,200 |

Gun Battery, Belize

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the continuance of the gun battery in Belize.

Mr. Stanley: It is not our practice to comment on details of future force levels.

Commando Forces (Air Defence)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the provision of air defence for commando forces.

Mr. Stanley: Our commando forces are equipped with their own point air defence capability, and depending on the deployment option and other circumstances, could also call on air defence cover from the assets of the amphibious group or from Allied land-based aircraft.

Additionally, as I announced in the House on 1 July 1986, at column 916, financial provision has been made in our forward plans for a Rapier battery for the United Kingdom/Netherlands landing force, although this does not yet represent a firm commitment.

Defence Budget (Exchange Rates)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the sterling/deutschmark exchange rate on which his budget for British Army of the Rhine was prepared; if he plans to make any further provision for changes in the exchange rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The 1986-87 defence estimates were prepared in accordance with established practice on the basis of an end June 1985 spot rate of 3·90 deutschmarks to the pound. Changes in the rates of exchange are one of a number of factors taken into account during the financial year for monitoring and controlling defence expenditure within the cash limit.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the effect in sterling terms on the defence budget of a one pfennig change in the sterling/deutschmark exchange rate.

Mr. Stanley: The effect of a one pfennig change in the exchange rate in 1986-87 on the defence budget, excluding local drawings of salaries and allowances which are not sensitive to the full effect of exchange rate movements, is some £2 million to £2·5 million.

Operation Lean Look

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report on the current progress of operation Lean Look.

Mr. Stanley: The Lean Look programme of some 4,000 uniformed manpower savings in the support areas to permit enhancements to the front line is well on course. In particular, manpower cover will be made available in 1987-88 for the initial build up of personnel for the 12th in-theatre armoured regiment for BAOR, for Royal Engineers armoured and explosive ordnance disposal enhancements, and for additional Army Air Corps pilots.

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is being given to introducing a lower training liability for some members of the Territorial Army; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: A trial was launched in September 1986 at selected Territorial Army hospitals, aimed at testing the effectiveness of a lower training liability on the recruitment and retention of certain specialised medical personnel in Royal Army Medical Corps (volunteer) units. This trial is scheduled to run for two years.

A further proposal is under consideration to introduce a lower training liability for experienced Territorial Army members who, for special business or domestic reasons, would be unable to fulfil the prescribed training commitment for their unit. The precise details of this scheme are being worked out, with a view to its introduction in training year 1987-88.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence what recent consideration has been given within NATO to the status of the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Stanley: Britain's NATO partners have welcomed the contribution made by British nuclear forces to the overall credibility of the Alliance's deterrent capabilities and have expressed their continued support for the efforts of the United Kingdom to maintain the effectiveness of its nuclear deterrent forces. I refer the hon. Member to the communiqués issued following the March 1986 and October 1986 meetings of the NATO nuclear planning group, copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United Kingdom nuclear deterrent is covered by obligations under the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation treaty.

Mr. Stanley: The North Atlantic Treaty does not deal with the detail of national contributions to NATO's integrated military structure. However, those member countries who contribute to the integrated military structure have agreed that changes in their contribution to the Alliance are properly the subject of multilateral consideration within NATO.

RAF Vehicle (Accident)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the precise identities of the operators and authorities responsible for emergency arrangements in relation to the accident to a military convoy in Wiltshire on 10 January.

Mr. Stanley: A variety of Ministry of Defence servicemen and civilian staff, members of the police, fire and ambulance services, and an approved Ministry of Defence contractor, Scott-Greenham of Southampton, took part in the recovery operation dealing with the accident involving a military convoy in Wiltshire on 10 January.

Haslar Hospital

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many full and part-time workers are currently employed at Haslar hospital; and what is the comparable figure proposed by Gardner Merchant;

(2) how many people Gardner Merchant said it would employ for the catering contract for Haslar hospital.

| | Non-industrial | Industrial |
|---|---|---|
| Hospital (excluding Catering Department) | | |
| Full-time | 97 | 122 |
| Part-time | 15 | 52 |
| Catering Department | | |
| Full-time | 4 | 48 |
| Part-time | — | 24 |

The proposed labour levels are matters for the contractor's commercial judgment. Details of their tender are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the Gardner Merchant bid for the catering contract for Haslar hospital, Gosport, included provision for subsidised transport for its staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Pay and conditions of service, which would include items such as subsidised transport, are a matter for contractors. An examination of tenderers' proposals in this area is made as part of tender evaluation to ensure that wage rates on which the price is based are at a level at which the contractor could reasonably be expected to obtain good quality employees in the particular locality.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make available the tender conditions for all bids for the catering contract at Haslar hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No; these are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if subsidised transport will still be available to catering staff after 1 April at Haslar hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No MOD subsidised transport will be provided for the employees of the contractor. This is a matter for the contractor.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence who authorised the release of the current work roster to Gardner Merchant after it had secured the contract, concerning catering staff at Haslar hospital; and for what reason.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The medical officer in charge of the hospital authorised the release of the information, which is not confidential after the award of the contract. This was to assist the contractor in his planning.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Offical Report a financial comparison of the eight bids for the catering contract at Haslar hospital.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. Tenders by potential contractors are commercial in confidence.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the current cleaning contractor is fulfilling his contract obligations at Haslar hospital; and if there are any plans to review the current arrangements.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes, the contractor is fulfilling his obligations. There are no plans to review the current arrangements.

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many unfilled vacancies exist for cleaners in Haslar hospital, Gosport.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy on a nuclear-capable multi-launch rocket system;

(2) what is his policy on a nuclear-capable modular air-to-surface missile;

(3) what is his policy on the modernisation of the Lance missile;

(4) what is his policy on a nuclear-capable long range stand-off missile;

(5) what is his policy on a nuclear-capable Army tactical missile system.

Mr. Stanley: At their meeting in Montebello, Canada, in October 1983, Ministers of NATO's Nuclear Planning Group agreed to the reduction of 1,400 nuclear warheads from NATO's nuclear stockpile. This was in addition to the reduction of 1,000 warheads agreed in 1979 and was to take place over several years. At the same time it was agreed that steps should be taken to ensure the survivability, responsiveness and effectiveness of remaining delivery systems and warheads.

SACEUR subsequently presented his recommendations for implementing these decisions at the Luxembourg meeting of NPG Ministers in March 1985. These recommendations are being pursued by SACEUR with the nations concerned; and progress with implementation is being kept under review by the NPG.

No decisions have been made affecting the modernisation of weapon systems in service with British forces; as my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Defence said in the House on 26 November 1985 at column 742, if we have any announcements to make, they will be made in the House at the appropriate moment.

Artillery Shells

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the W-80 shell for 8 in artillery.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I know of no shell designated "W80".

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the W-79 shell for the 155 mm howitzer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The W-79 shell is not capable of being fired by the 155 mm howitzer.

Royal Ordnance Employees (Pensions)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet in a position to make a statement on the pension rights of Royal Ordnance employees once the proposed privatisation of the company has been completed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 26 January 1987 at column 131. The planned sale of Royal Ordnance plc will not affect the pension arrangements of employees.

Defence Schools of Music

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to make his decision with regard to the future of the defence schools of music.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 5 November 1986 at column 433.

Crown Proceedings Act

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate his Department has made of the number of service men and service women, in respect of whom claims arising from personal injury or death while on duty have not been proceeded with in each of the past 10 years because of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act.

Mr. Freeman: I regret this information is not readily available, and could not be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Trident

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure on the Trident programme in each year since 1979 up until 1 January at both current and constant prices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 22 January 1987, c. 728]: Expenditure each year since the beginning of the United Kingdom Trident programme is as follows:

| Financial year | Current (out-turn) prices | 1986-87 prices and at £1=$1·50 |
|---|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 3 | 5 |
| 1981-82 | 31 | 49 |
| 1982-83 | 71 | 97 |
| 1983-84 | 95 | 113 |
| 1984-85 | 165 | 171 |
| 1985-86 | 268 | 273 |
| 1986-87[1][2] | 412 | 412 |

[1] The figure for 1986-87[2] is, at this stage, a forecast.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Birth Statistics

Mr. Carter-Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents (a) in England and (b) in England and Wales and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to whether the mother had had (i) no, (ii) one, (iii) two, (iv) three and (v) four or more pregnancies resulting in a registrable birth;

(2) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents of each regional health authority and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to whether the mother had had (a) no, (b) one, (c) two, (d) three and (e) four or more pregnancies resulting in a registrable birth;

(3) if he will list the total births and live births in 1984 to residents in Wales and the number and rate per 1,000 of still births, perinatal deaths, neonatal deaths, postneonatal deaths and infant deaths; and if he will tabulate the data according to whether the mother had had (a) no, (b) one, (c) two, (d) three and (e) four or more pregnancies resulting in a registrable birth.

Mrs. Currie: Tables giving the available information have been placed in the Library.

AIDS

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is following to ensure that HIV infected women receive proper counselling about the risks to future children and advice about birth control or access to abortion if they wish it.

Mr. Newton: The provision of counselling is the responsibility of the clinician dealing with a person with HIV infection. The chief medical officer gave advice on counselling in the context of HIV infection in his letter CMO(86)18 sent to all doctors on 2 December 1986. The Government-funded training courses for counsellors include material on these matters to enable their students adequately to counsel women identified as being infected with HIV.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to educate young people about AIDS.

Mr. Newton: Part of the Government's public education campaign is specifically aimed at young people, including advertisements and features on radio, in the cinema and in teenage magazines. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science has also made it clear that schools, too, have a responsibility to inform pupils of the facts about AIDS.

The effectiveness of these initiatives is being closely monitored, and the results wil be taken into account in planning further phases of the compaign.

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons who committed suicide during 1986 were known or believed to be carriers of AIDS.

Mr. Newton: The data for 1986 on death by suicide will be processed later this year when complete but it will not be possible to identify all cases where the person was infected with the AIDS virus.

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest cumulative total, broken down by sex, of the number of (a) deaths from and (b) confirmed diagnosis of AIDS in Britain and also figures for victims not in high risk groups.

Mr. Newton: By the end of December 1986 the communicable disease surveillance centre of the Public Health Laboratory Service had received reports on 610 diagnosed cases of AIDS in the United Kingdom. In 293 of these cases the patient had died. These figures have been analysed by transmission characteristic and by sex of patient as follows:

| | Number of Cases | | | Number of Deaths |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Transmission Characteristic | Male | Female | Total | |
| Homosexual/bisexual | 538 | — | 538 | 244 |
| Intravenous drug abuser (IVDA) | 7 | 2 | 9 | 2 |
| Homosexual and IVDA | 6 | — | 6 | 4 |
| Haemophiliac | 25 | — | 25 | 19 |
| Recipient of blood: abroad | 3 | 3 | 6 | 5 |
| Recipient of blood: United Kingdom | 3 | 1 | 4 | 4 |
| Heterosexual: | | | | |
| Presumed infected abroad | 9 | 5 | 14 | 9 |
| Presumed infected in United Kingdom | 1 | 3 | 4 | 3 |
| Child of HIV antibody positive mother | 1 | 2 | 3 | 2 |
| Other | — | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| Totals | 593 | 17 | 610 | 293 |

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the AIDS leaflet distributed to households will be printed in languages other than English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The leaflet is currently available in Welsh. Consideration is being given to its production in a number of other languages.

Mr. Alexander asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra resources have been allocated to regional health authorities to help to deal with AIDS.

Mr. Fowler: In addition to the continued £20 million programme of public education already announced, of which £12 million is planned to fall in 1987-88, we are making available a further £7 million to health authorities for the treatment, care and counselling of victims and carriers of AIDS. Further allocations will be announced in due course for other AIDS-related services including those of the public health laboratory service and voluntary bodies working in this field.

Details of the £7 million allocation to health authorities are:

(1986-87 allocations)

| Treatment and counselling | £'000 | £'000 |
|---|---|---|
| N.W. Thames region | 2,500 | 1,000 |
| N.E. Thames region | 1,200 | 1,045 |
| S.E. Thames region | 700 | 500 |
| Haemophilia reference centres | 280 | 270 |
| Counselling training programme | 200 | 100 |
| Nurse training (English National Board) | 20 | 15 |
| Drug abuse counselling, etc | 1,300 | — |
| Other projects | 800 | 115 |

NHS (Staffing)

Mrs. Reneé Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will modify medical manpower structures in view of the need for increased medical and nursing staff of all grades, especially in infectious diseases and clinical immunology.

Mr. Newton: It is for health authorities to assess their need for medical and nursing staff in all specialties. Their assessment is conveyed to the Department through the strategic planning and accountability systems. Based on these plans, it is the Department's role to ensure an adequate supply of medical manpower to meet that need.

Existing medical manpower structures make it difficult to reconcile these objectives with the need to ensure adequate levels of intermediate-level medical staffing. The proposals contained in the consultative document, "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance" address this problem. they are intended both to make a career in hospital medicine more secure, and to relate the supply of doctors training in each specialty more closely to career opportunities. The proposals are designed to give health authorities greater flexibility to match hospital medical staffing to local needs and circumstances and to the unforeseen demands of emerging public health problems.

Kidney Donors

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he is giving to proposed legislation on an opting-out system for kidney donation.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans at present to amend the Human Tissue Act 1981 to introduce an opting-out system for kidney donation.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend eligibility for severe weather payments to people receiving mobility allowance.

Mr. Major: Single payments towards extra heating costs during a period of exceptionally cold weather are already available to supplementary benefit households containing anyone who is chronically sick or disabled, subject to the normal £500 capital rule. The definition of chronically sick or disabled includes people in receipt of a mobility allowance.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make arrangements to ensure that his Department publicises in the local press the occasions when the previous full week recorded average temperature in the relevant areas of – 1·5°C, so triggering exceptionally severe weather payments.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 15 January at columns 297-298 in which I gave details of the widespread advertising including publicity in the local press undertaken during the exceptionally cold spell last month. Arrangements exist to ensure that whenever the new trigger (a weekly average of 0°C) is reached in any local office area publicity will appear in local newspapers.

Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, for each of the relevant weather reporting stations, the number of times the average temperature has fallen to – 1·5°C or below for a seven-day period from a Monday to Sunday over the last five years.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 28 January at columns 284-287.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the names and locations of the weather stations in Scotland and the parliamentary constituencies for which each provide information for the award of severe weather payments.

Weather station and Parliamentary constituency

[1] Parliamentary constituency divided between two or more weather stations.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the weather stations situated in Strathclyde which recorded the severe weather payments trigger temperature of minus 1·5 deg C in the weeks 5 to 11 January and 12 to 18 January.

Mr. Major: None for the week 5 to 11 January. Prestwick for the week 12 to 18 January.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons received a severe weather payment in each week from 1 January to 31 March in 1985, 1986 and so far in 1987.

Mr. Major: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of exceptionally severe weather payments made for the 1985 and 1986 winter periods were as follows:

| Year | Payments |
|---|---|
| 1985 | 170,000 |
| 1986 | 456,026 |

Information for 1987 is not yet available but will be published in due course.

Diabetics

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received from the British Diabetics Association about the availability of disposable needles for diabetics.

Mrs. Currie: I have received a letter proposing that diabetics requiring insulin injections and who wish to use plastic disposable syringes could be given a voucher each year towards the cost.

Benefits

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients of supplementary benefit in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales were one-parent families in each of the years 1980 to 1985.

Mr. Lyell: Information on the number of lone-parent recipients in Clwyd is not available. The information in respect of Wales as a whole is as follows:

| Year | Number of lone-parent recipients (thousands) |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 19 |
| 1981 | 22 |
| 1982 | 24 |
| 1983 | 27 |
| 1984 | 28 |

Note: Latest available date.
Source: Annual statistical inquiries.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to reinstate entitlement to certificated housing benefit and other passported benefits retrospectively to all past and present trainees under the Dundee pilot scheme who were in training prior to 26 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: It is not possible in law to backdate entitlement to certificated housing benefit for a period when supplementary benefit was not payable in the way suggested. However, I refer the hon. Member to my replies to him on 20 November 1986 at columns 333-335 describing the safeguards made for ensuring that trainees at Dundee and elsewhere would be no worse off as a result of participating in the job training scheme.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales are in receipt of the State pension, giving the number of single and married pensioners in each case.

Mr. Lyell: At 31 March 1986 some 481,000 people in Wales were in receipt of a basic state retirement pension or a non-contributory over-80s retirement pension. I regret that information on the number of retirement pensioners in Clwyd is not available and that information showing the number of single people and couples who receive retirement pension is available only for Great Britain as a whole.

Reyes Syndrome

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what consideration has been given by the Committee on Safety of Medicines to the United States

"Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report" dated January 1985, which was sent to the then Minister for Health by Mr. C. S. Harrington, the chairman of the National Reyes Syndrome Foundation;

(2) how many young persons have been reported as suffering from Reyes syndrome since 1981; and what change there has been in the incidence of the syndrome following the official advice in June 1986 that aspirin should not be given to children;

(3) what has been the cost of the British Reyes syndrome surveillance scheme for each year that it has existed; what has been the additional cost of the risk factor study; who has paid for the surveillance scheme and the study; what contribution to their costs have come from public funds; how the surveillance scheme currently is being funded; and what steps are being taken to ensure that future funding is adequate.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what requests for funding into research related to Reyes syndrome have been made to his Department; and what was the response.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986 the Department received applications from the National Reye's Syndrome Foundation of the United Kingdom for the support of the following projects:

i. Study of metabolic and immunological abnormalities in Reye's syndrome in the United Kingdom.

ii. Neurological and psychological follow up study of children with Reye's syndrome.

Both were referred to the Medical Research Council, which receives grant in aid from the science vote of the Department of Education and Science.

Aspirin

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what discussions there have been with overseas drug regulatory agencies following his decision to recommend that aspirin should not be given to children;

(2) whether he has requested aspirin manufacturers to warn on their labels that aspirin should not normally be given to children; and whether any such request applies to aspirin intended for overseas sale;

(3) if the decision of the Committee on Safety of Medicines that aspirin should not normally be given to children has been communicated to other drug regulatory agencies together with the evidence that led the committee to reach this conclusion.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the right hon. Member have replies as soon as possible.

Social Security Appeals

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report the number of appeals heard by Social Security Appeals Tribunals in Scotland in the years 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and what the average length of time was for an appeal to be heard in each of these years;

(2) what is the average length of time now being taken to hear an appeal against an adjudication officer's decision in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lyell: National administrative statistics for social security appeals are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region. Information on the total number of social security appeals heard and the average length of time between lodgement and hearing in Scotland is available from April 1984.

| | Appeals heard and decided | Average time between lodgement and hearing (weeks) |
|---|---|---|
| April to December 1984 | 18,945 | 11·7 |
| April to December 1985 | 19,003 | 12·3 |
| January to March 1986 | 5,033 | 14·1 |

Alcohol Addiction

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much money was spent in each of the past five years on cures for alcohol addiction and alcohol misuse;

(2) how much money was spent in each of the past five years on curing people addicted to alcohol; and if he will give a breakdown of those figures.

Mrs. Currie: The precise costs of the treatment of people suffering the effects of alcohol misuse or alcohol addiction cannot be calculated on present information. Recent research into the cost of alcohol misuse to the National Health Service has produced an estimate of some £95 million per annum (1983 prices) for England and Wales.

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital beds were taken up in each of the past five years by patients suffering from physical and psychiatric ailments normally associated with alcohol addiction or alcohol misuse.

Mrs. Currie: The available information for the main alcohol-related diseases is given in the tables. Information about the numbers of beds occupied in mental illness hospitals and units by patients with alcohol-related diagnoses is not available, but about a quarter of the patients with these diagnoses discharged in 1985 had been in hospital for less than a week and about half for between one week and a month.

Dentistry (Peterborough)

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give the number of community dental health clinics which have been closed in the Peterborough health authority area within the last year and the number which are due to be closed in the coming year; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish the average earnings of dentists employed by Peterborough health authority in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: These are essentially local matters which the hon. Member might wish to refer to the district general manager of the Peterborough district health authority.

Riverside Health Authority (Hospitals)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional financial assistance will be made available to hospitals in the Riverside health district from the special fund set up to ease the impact of reallocation of resources away from London under the resource allocation working party arrangements.

Mr. Newton: It is for the North West Thames regional health authority to submit proposals, within Departmental guidelines, for spending its allocation of £2·6 million for 1987-88 from the special fund established to ease transitional problems in regions receiving less than national average growth.

Elderly People

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures exist to ensure that elderly people who are being cared for in the private sector are receiving public funds for their residential care after proper assessment of their needs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: As a matter of normal good practice, local authorities assess any elderly people placed and financed by them in independent homes. Supplementary benefit payments to people living in residential homes do not depend on a care assessment. However, in line with the recommendation of a joint central/local government working party, the Department is funding pilot studies in four areas under tha aegis of York university, so as to assess the feasibility of extending loca authorities' normal assessment procedures to supplementary benefit claimants. A report is expected by Easter.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to aid groups with special experience of illness in old age to disseminate their knowledge into non-specialised hospital departments, as suggested by the Health Advisory Service annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: It is the Department's policy that wherever possible acute geriatric units should be provided in main district general hospital (DGH) buildings. This policy was outlined in the document entitled "The Respective Roles of the General Acute and Geriatric Sectors in Care of the Elderly Hospital Patients" published by the Department in 1981. As the latest Health Advisory Service annual report recognises, having an acute geriatric unit in a DGH should facilitate a ready exchange of advice and mutual assistance between geriatric teams and colleagues in other specialties in which elderly people are treated.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to introduce management practices into hospitals for the specific encouragement of privacy, self determination and choice for old people; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance on these matters is contained in the Royal College of Nursing booklet "Improving the Care of the Elderly in Hospital", which forms part of the training material provided to health authorities by the National Health Service Training Authority. The booklet has recently been extensively revised by a joint working party of the Royal College of Nursing, the British Geriatrics Society, the Royal College of Psychiatrists and this Department. The new version is expected to be published in the spring of this year. These issues are also fully covered by the Health Advisory Service in its reports on services for elderly people in particular districts.

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to offer public funds to bolster domiciliary care for the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: It is for local authorities to decide in the light of the total level of resources available how much should be devoted to domiciliary care for elderly people. Since 1978-79 expenditure on personal social services by local authorities in England has increased by over 20 per cent. in real terms. From the very substantial increase in rates support grant provision for 1987-88 the indicative figure for personal social services expenditure allows for the first time an extra 1 per cent. (£27 million) to enable authorities to build up their community care services.

Joint finance money from health authorities can also be used to fund domiciliary care. The annual allocations to health authorities for joint finance have increased from £34·5 million in 1978-79 to £110·8 million in 1986-87, a real terms increase of 64·1 per cent. The main allocation to regional health authorities for joint finance will be 3·75 per cent. higher for 1987-88 than for the previous year.

In addition, we are making a total of more than £10 million available under the Helping the Community to Care programme announced in 1984. Elements of this programme are directly concerned with developing services and for those caring for elderly people in their own homes. We recognise that it will often be good practice to provide frail elderly people with domiciliary care to enable them to continue to lead an independent life. The overview of community care which Sir Roy Griffiths will be undertaking and which my right hon. Friend announced on 16 December 1986 will be considering what action might be taken to encourage such good practice.

Registered Homes Act 1984

Mr. Freud asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to improve the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) on 19 November 1986 at column 217. The inspectorate's report is expected shortly. Later this year the inspectorate will also be organising a programme of workshops for registration and inspection staff and their managers.

London Hospital, Whitechapel

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the London hospital in Whitechapel is one of the hospitals to be made available to the United States of America for wartime use under the United Kingdom lines of communications agreement.

Mrs. Currie: The Government are making contingency plans for the best use of all National Health Service resources in a war emergency and these will cover the treatment in United Kingdom hospitals of both British and other NATO military casualties. The United States is establishing its own contingency hospitals which would be activated in a crisis. They will be equipped, manned and financed by the United States Government and would reduce the burden on the NHS. No United Kingdom hospital is designated for exclusive use for American military casualties.

Private Blood Banks

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to regulate the operation of the private blood banks.

Mr. Newton: We are urgently considering the issues involved.

Cancer (Screening Programmes)

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now increase funding specifically on cervical and breast cancer screening programmes.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities have been required to give priority to improving their cervical cancer screening programmes within their existing resources. Total funding to HAs is to rise by 6 per cent. in April 1987 over the previous year.

The Government are urgently considering their response to Professor Sir Patrick Forrest's report on breast cancer screening and will make a announcement shortly.

Mrs. Manning (Correspondence)

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to answer the letter from the hon. Member for Crawley of 17 November 1986 concerning Mrs. Manning and her child of 1 Spring Cottages, Hophurst Lane, Crawley Down.

Mr. Lyell: I wrote to my hon. Friend on 3 February.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital beds there were in the Leeds area health authority in 1979; and how many there are in the Leeds eastern district health authority and the Leeds western district health authority in the latest available figures.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table. Between 1979 and 1985 the number of in-patient cases treated increased by 32·4 per cent. from 43,827 to 58,032 in Leeds western district health authority and by 15·3 per cent. from 51,012 to 58,802 in Leeds eastern district health authority.

Nurse Training

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to introduce (a) the YTS and (b) other Government-sponsored schemes into nurse training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: There are no plans to introduce the youth training scheme or any other Government-sponsored scheme into nurse training. We have, however, recently announced a feasibility study of the scope for greater use of YTS for:

(a) Training 16 to 18-year-olds as support workers to nurses; and

(b) Identifying the more able trainees and bringing them up to the required standard for entry to nurse training by the conclusion of their YTS training.

The study is purely exploratory; no decisions have yet been taken and discussions will take place with professional and staff interests both during and after the study before any changes are made. The study is jointly sponsored by this Department, the Manpower Services Commission, the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the NHS Training Authority.

Generics (UK) Ltd.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 26 January, Official Report, column 92, he will name the locations of the principal overseas manufacturing sites of Generics (UK) Ltd. that have been inspected as part of his Department's regular inspection programme; and if he will name the location of the site that is scheduled to be visited early in February.

Mr. Newton: Information about manufacturing sites, like other information contained in licence applications under the Medicines Act, is commercially confidential and is not disclosed by the licensing authority.

Harris Pharmaceuticals Ltd.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the manufacturing sites used by Harris Pharmaceuticals Ltd. for the production of generic medicines sold to the National Health Service were subject to inspection by the United Kingdom Medicines Inspectorate in each of the last three years; and when Harris Pharmaceuticals Ltd's manufacturing sites in South Africa were last inspected by the United Kingdom Medicines Inspectorate.

Mr. Newton: The manufacturing sites used by Harris Pharmaceuticals Ltd. for products for which it holds United Kingdom product licences are largely covered by multilateral agreements which provide for inspection reports to be supplied to the United Kingdom medicines inspectorate by the licensing authority of the country concerned. The remainder have been inspected by the United Kingdom medicines inspectorate or are scheduled for a visit within the next 12 months. All South African manufacturing sites named as possible sources of supply for Harris Pharmaceuticals Ltd. were inspected by United Kingdom medicines inspectors in the last 16 months. The frequency of inspection is a matter for the licensing authority and details of dates of individual inspections are not normally disclosed.

National Insurance Contributions

Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to counter the avoidance of national insurance contributions by earnings being paid through discretionary trusts.

Mr. Major: Since the abolition of the upper earnings limit for employers' national insurance contributions announced in the 1985 Budget, there has been an increase in the practice of earnings being paid through trust funds, thereby avoiding NIC liability. To allow this to continue would result in a growing loss of the revenue needed to finance pensions and other contributory benefits. I will therefore shortly ask the Social Security Advisory Committee to consider draft regulations to end the exemption from liability for NICs on earnings paid through trust funds. I propose that these should take effect from 6 October 1987. I recognise that some employers used trusts to pay part of earnings before 1985 for reasons unconnected with the Budget and to give these more time to adapt, I propose that the present exemption should continue until 5 April 1990 for trusts established before 6 April 1985.

Finance

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for 1985-86 and for each district and special health authority the total income under (a) section 58, (b) section 65, (c) section 66 of the National Health Services Act 1977 and (d) the bad debts written off in respect of private patients.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to the reply, 24 November 1986, c. 122]: Following are the figures recorded in the annual accounts of health authorities for 1985-86. Income under each heading is shown net of sums written off in the year (including those due from earlier years). Separate write-off figures for income due under section 58 (which arises mainly from services provided to private health care establishments) are not collected centrally.

WALES

Historic Buildings and Ancient Monuments

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the expenditure of his Department in relation to its responsibilities for historic buildings and ancient monuments in each year since 1979, differentiating between (a) administrative expenditure, (b) expenditure administered in relation to historic buildings and (c) expenditure associated with ancient monuments.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The administrative costs relating to historic buildings and ancient monuments for which we are responsible are not readily identifiable for the years prior to 1985-86. However, for 1985-86 and 1986-87 the Welsh Office Departmental running costs relating to Cadw are £2·061 million and £2·2 million respectively.

| | Historic buildings £000's | Ancient monuments £000's | RCAHM(W) £000's | Total £000's |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 546 | 861 | n/a | 1,407 |
| 1980-81 | 875 | 1,071 | n/a | 1,946 |
| 1981-82 | 1,224 | 1,090 | n/a | 2,314 |
| 1982-83 | 892 | 1,334 | n/a | 2,226 |
| 1983-84 | 824 | 1,546 | 462 | 2,832 |
| 1984-85 | 1,424 | 1,786 | 401 | 3,611 |
| 1985-86 | 2,087 | 1,507 | 550 | 4,144 |
| [1]1986-87 | 2,144 | 1,846 | 500 | 4,490 |

[1] Estimate.

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff were employed by his Department in relation to its responsibilities for historic buildings and ancient monuments in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Until 1982, work on historic buildings and ancient monuments fell to a number of divisions in the Department and the staff engaged on these functions cannot now be accurately determined. The work was brought together in one division in 1982 and since late 1984 has been the responsibility of Cadw. The number of staff in post as at 1 January each year from 1983 (the earliest date for which figures are available) was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 209 |
| 1984 | 194 |
| 1985 | 191 |
| 1986 | 198 |
| 1987 | 194 |

Industrial Assistance

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support to industry in Wales has been allocated through (a) his Department, (b) the Welsh Development Agency and (c) the Development Board for Rural Wales, during each financial year from 1976-77 to 1985-86.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Details of regional assistance funds allocated through the Welsh Office can be found in the annual Appropriation Accounts covering expenditure in Wales. Details of financial support to industry allocated through the Welsh Development Agency and Development Board for Rural Wales are given in their respective annual reports and accounts. Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

Regional Aid

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total sum of regional development grants paid to industry in Wales during each year since 1979.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Payments of regional development grant in Wales since 1979-80 (in £m) were as follows:—

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 50·7 |
| 1980-81 | 103·5 |
| 1981-82 | 122·2 |
| 1982-83 | 121·5 |
| 1983-84 | 72·1 |
| 1984-85 | 92·7 |
| 1985-86 | 84·4 |
| 1986-87 | 71·8 |

The 1986-87 figure is the latest available and provisional.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Cash Limits and Running Costs

Mrs. McCurley asked the Solicitor-General for Scotland, what changes he proposes to make to the 1986-87 cash limit and running costs limit for class XX, vote 20 Law Charges, Scotland.

The Solicitor-General for Scotland: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate, the cash limit for class XX, Vote 20 will be increased by £180,000 from £15,799,000 to £15,979,000 and the Crown Office's running costs limit by £402,000 from £14,757,000 to £15,159,000. The increase is required to take account of the running costs arising from certain staff regrading and restructuring exercises and increases in the remuneration of Advocate's Depute, net of some non-running costs savings. The cash limit increase will be a charge on the 1986-87 reserve.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry, Gloucester

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Attorney-General what representations he has received concerning delays at Her Majesty's Land Registry at Gloucester; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: In the course of the last 12 months, the Lord Chancellor has received four complaints from Members of Parliament on behalf of constituents relating to delays at the Gloucester district land registry. These delays result from substantial increases both in the number of pre-contract and pre-completion searches and the number of substantive applications for registrations. Staff have been diverted from final registration work to provide prompt replies on pre-completion matters and the new land registry office opened last month at Coventry will assist the Gloucester office in all areas of its work.

State Security

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General what assessment he made, in deciding to initiate police inquiries into possible breaches of the Official Secrets Act in connection with a secret defence project, of the extent to which the transcripts of the proposed British Broadcasting Corporation programmes might contain classified information not published in the New Statesman article by Mr. Duncan Campbell.

The Solicitor-General: Police inquiries are currently being conducted. It would therefore not be proper for me to comment on the nature of the evidence that the Attorney-General considered, save to say that he was satisfied upon that evidence that there were reasonable grounds for inviting the Director of Public Prosecutions to request a police investigation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the distributors in the United Kingdom of the Irish Independent newspaper for breaches of the Official Secrets Act in relation to material contained in articles in the issues dated 20 and 21 January, entitled "MI5 in Ireland"; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: If the hon. Member produces evidence of a possible breach of the Official Secrets Act I will consider the matter.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 2 February, if he will specify the precise steps he took and the precise grounds he used to satisfy himself that he should invite the Director of Public Prosecutions to request an investigation by the police into possible breaches of the Official Secrets Act in relation to project Zircon; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General took into account evidence indicating that breaches of the Official Secrets Act may have occurred. It would not be proper for me to disclose what that evidence was.

Cash Limits

Sir Fergus Montgomery asked the Attorney-General what changes he proposes to make to the 1986-87 cash limit for class XX, 24 law changes, England and Wales (Treasury Solicitors Department) and to the Treasury solicitors running costs limit.

The Solicitor-General: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate the cash limit for the Treasury Solicitor's Department will be increased by £495,000 from £8,947,000 to £9,442,000. The increase is mainly due to increased accommodation costs but also reflects the exceptional volume of work partially offset by a higher level of receipts and is being charged to the Reserve. There has been a related increase in the gross running costs limit of £861,000 from £9,937,000 to £10,798,000.

Bail Applications

Mr. Bell asked the Attorney-General what was the number of bail applications which have been refused for those charged with scheduled offences during the years 1983, 1984 and 1985; how many bail applications for scheduled offences have been granted for the same years; and how many of those granted bail do not comply with its conditions during the same years.

The Solicitor-General [pursuant to the reply, 19 January 1987, c. 401]: The numbers of bail applications which were refused and granted for those charged with scheduled offences in Northern Ireland during the years 1983, 1984 and 1985 are:

| Year | Refused | Granted |
|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 676 | 721 |
| 1984 | 599 | 781 |
| 1985 | 476 | 801 |

In each year a number of persons had their bail revoked for failure to comply with its conditions. Details are set out below.

| Year | Revocations |
|---|---|
| 1983 | 6 |
| 1984 | 15 |
| 1985 | 15 |

EMPLOYMENT

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mrs. Peacock asked the Paymaster General which authorities in England have not taken up money available for technical and vocational education initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: There are seven local education authorities in England which are either not participating already or have not put in proposals to participate from 1987 in the technical and vocational education initiative. All seven have the opportunity to bid to participate from 1988. It is known that some intend to do so; others are still considering their intentions. Only Kirklees metropolitan council has said that it will not be submitting a proposal to participate.

Wages

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will estimate the proportion of young peoples' average wages to adult average wages in 1979 at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The information available is shown below:

| | April 1979 | April 1986 |
|---|---|---|
| Males aged under 18 as a percentage of adult males[1] | 39·7 | 34·5 |
| Females aged under 18 as a percentage of adult females[2] | 58·1 | 52·9 |

[1] Aged 21 and over.

[2] Aged 18 and over.

Source: New Earning Survey.

Wages Councils

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General how many people were covered by wages councils in 1979 and in 1986, or the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: Statistical returns of the numbers of workers in Great Britain employed in establishments within scope of wages councils are not collected, but in 1979 an analysis of the administrative records of inspections kept by the wages inspectorate indicated that the total number of workers covered was about 2¾ million.

A similar exercise in 1982—the last year in which one was undertaken—revealed a similar number. Work is in hand to estimate the numbers currently covered.

Labour Statistics

34. Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will provide for (a) each English region, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales, his estimate of the numbers employed in June 1979 and in June 1986 in the following industries or sectors, and if he will estimate the percentage fall or rise since June 1979 in (a) shipbuilding and ship repair, (b) steel, (c) coal, (d) textiles, (e) electrical, instrument and electronic engineering (f) construction, (g) vehicles and (h) information technology, telecommunications and data processing.

Mr. Lee: With the exception of the construction industry, estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the industries specified in the English regions, Scotland and Wales are available only from censuses of employment. For other dates the survey sample is not large enough to provide reliable estimates other than for Great Britain.

Table 1 gives, for the areas specified, estimates of the numbers of employees in employment in the construction industry at June 1979 and June 1986, and the net percentage changes between the two dates.

Table 2 gives, for the same areas, the numbers of employees in employment in the other industries specified at September 1984 (the most recent date for which a census of employment was held) and September 1981 (the date of the previous census of employment, and the earliest date for which comparable figures are available).

It also gives the net percentage changes between the two dates. The estimates are subject to considerable potential error due to the relatively small number of employees in the industries in each region, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Paymaster General if he will publish a table showing the most recent rates of unemployment in (a) all travel-to-work areas receiving regional development grants, (b) all travel-to-work areas receiving only regional selective no assistance, (c) travel-to-work areas which receive no assistance but have rates higher than any in (a) and (b), and (d) travel-to-work areas which receive no assistance but have rates within 2 per cent. of any in (a) and (b).

Mr. Lee [pursuant to his reply, 15 January 1987, c. 245-48]: I regret that in my previous reply there were four areas omitted from the tables requested.

Unemployed claimants in travel-to-work areas having development area status—11 December 1986

| | Number | Rate |
|---|---|---|
| Irvine | 11,819 | 24·9 |
| Greenock | 9,955 | 20·5 |
| Kilmarnock | 5,579 | 17·6 |
| Glasgow | 113,135 | 17·2 |

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Paymaster General what plans he has to seek the views and advice of area manpower boards on his proposed extension of the job training scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1987]: In accordance with the arrangements proposed by the Manpower Services Commission, area manpower boards will receive full information on the scheme as it develops in their areas so that they can monitor, assess and evaluate progress, and advise on likely demand. Boards will be consulted on the development of approved training organisation (adult) status, and will, in due course, be asked to advise on whether managing agents should be given such status.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Westminster Hall

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will raise with the Services Committee the possible use of Westminster Hall in the summer for public concerts, exhibitions and other arts-related events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Biffen: The control of Westminster Hall is vested jointly in the Lord Great Chamberlain and in the two Speakers on behalf of the two Houses.

The principles governing the exercise of their discretion to grant the use of the Hall for non-parliamentary functions are that such events should be either a royal occasion, a ceremony in honour of a Head of State or one having clear historical connections with Parliament or the Hall itself. I believe that these principles are in accordance with the wishes of the House.

PRIME MINISTER

Marine Environment

Mr. Cohen asked the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 30 January, Official Report, c. 403, if she will give a precise breakdown of the responsibilities of each of the Departments listed in relation to various specific aspects of the marine environment.

The Prime Minister: Responsibility for controlling or dealing with the marine environment is shared between a number of Government Departments. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food is responsible for safeguarding fisheries and for controlling disposal at sea in England and Wales; the Department of Transport is responsible for the control and prevention of pollution at sea from ships, particularly in relation to oil and noxious liquid substances, and for any necessary remedial action at sea; the Department of Energy is responsible for the control of offshore oil and gas development operations, including the control of pollution from such operations. The Warren Spring laboratory, Department of Trade and Industry, undertakes research sponsored by the marine pollution control unit, Department of Transport, and offers technical advice on beach cleaning and oil and chemical spills at sea, dispersants and spraying. The Department of the Environment is responsible for controls over discharges of trade and sewage effluents to the aquatic environment, including coastal waters, and is also responsible for co-ordinating central Government policy on the control of pollution generally. In Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, the Scottish Office, Welsh Office and Northern Ireland Office have similar responsibilities in respect of environmental protection.

Regional Aid

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Prime Minister what was the Government's expenditure in each year between 1979-80 and 1982-83 on regional aid to industry in each of the English regions, Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland; and through which agencies this expenditure was incurred.

Expenditure[1] at current prices

| Region | 1979-80 | 1980-81 | 1981-82 | 1982-83 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Northern | 147·8 | 146·3 | 176·3 | 159·3 |
| North West | 86·7 | 131·3 | 157·9 | 122·4 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 32·1 | 52·2 | 61·8 | 52·9 |
| East Midlands[2] | 4·2 | 4·5 | 8·6 | 13·6 |
| South West | 10·7 | 11·5 | 14·8 | 16·2 |
| Scotland | 117·9 | 182·8 | 220·1 | 370·9 |
| Wales | 104·3 | 170·8 | 198·2 | 181·7 |
| Great Britain[3] | 519·0 | 705·9 | 853·6 | 917·0 |
| Northern Ireland | 103·5 | 138·2 | 110·8 | 146·1 |
| United Kingdom | 622·5 | 844·1 | 964·4 | 1,063·1 |

[1] All figures are gross and include payments to nationalised industries.

[2] Includes West Midlands.

[3] The Great Britain total does not always equal the sum of the component parts due to rounding.

The items included in the expenditure are regional development grants and regional selective assistance, expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies, the Development Board for Rural Wales, and the Highlands and Islands Development Board. Northern Ireland has a different range of financial incentives available and the items included in the expenditure have been restricted to aids similar to the main forms of regional preferential assistance in Great Britain.

The agencies through which this expenditure was incurred are as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| English Regions: | The Department of Trade and Industry and the English Industrial Estates Corporation. |
| Scotland: | The Scottish Office (Industry Department for Scotland), The Scottish Development Agency, the Highlands and Islands Development Board and the Department of Trade and Industry. |
| Wales: | The Welsh Office (Industry Department), The Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales and the Department of Trade and Industry. |
| Northern Ireland: | The Northern Ireland Department of Economic Development and the Industrial Development Board (formerly the Northern Ireland Development Agency). |

ENERGY

Homes Insulation

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Fulham on 1 December 1986, Official Report, column 456, whether Her Majesty's Government will introduce measures in the next nine months to reduce the number of inadequately-insulated homes and so reduce the potential problems facing lower income householders in a cold weather spell next winter.

Mr. David Hunt: As well as promoting the cost-effective energy efficiency measures which all householders should take, my right hon. Friend will continue to support the expansion of the community insulation projects, which are expected to have insulated some 450,000 low-income households by the end of this year. In addition my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has announced his intention to extend the 90 per cent. grant under the homes insulation scheme to all low-income householders.

Severn Barrage

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends, in the course of the studies by his Department into the proposed Severn barrage, to examine whether there exists within the United Kingdom the capability to tender successfully for all major aspects of the contract, especially the construction of lock gates for ships up to 150,000 dwt.

Mr. David Hunt: The size of lock gates for the proposed Severn barrage is a matter for further study and consultation with the relevant bodies.

The commercial aspects of the supply of all items of a Severn barrage will be closely examined in the course of the forthcoming studies.

NCB Homes

Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will instigate a public inquiry into the selling of National Coal Board houses since 1979.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rover Group

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans Rover group has for its South African operation.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand that Rover Group is announcing today that a proposal has been received from a number of executives from its wholly-owned subsidiary, Leyland South Africa, to acquire the share capital and activities of that company. This proposal has come forward in the course of a commercial review of the business.

Discussions to explore the feasibility of the proposal are being held between Rover Group, and its advisers and local managers in South Africa.

Timeshare Properties

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he intends to make his consumer advice leaflet about timeshare properties available to Britons travelling abroad.

Mr. Howard: The leaflet is freely available to anyone who requests it. My Department is operating a 24-hour telephone service for such requests on 01-215 3344. Copies are also available at Citizens Advice Bureaux, some airport information centres, through many travel agents and at selected consular offices abroad.

Licensed Security Trading

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has taken to terminate trading by the licensed security dealer, the name of which was privately communicated to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State responsible for consumer affairs, the hon. and learned Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard).

Mr. Howard: I am not, for the moment, in a position to add to what I said in the House on 28 January in response to the hon. Member.

Bankruptcies (Wales)

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total number of bankruptcies in Wales from 1979 to 1986.

Mr. Howard: The provisional estimate of the number of bankruptcies in Wales from 1979 to 1986 inclusive is 2,943.

Textile Workers

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning the establishment of a severance pay scheme for redundant textile workers; what information he has on schemes operated by other European Economic Community countries for redundant textile workers and how such schemes are funded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The national secretary of the textile group of TGWU wrote to my right hon. Friend recently concerning proposals for a special severance pay scheme for redundant textile and clothing workers and he has subsequently received further representations on the subject from the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw). So far as I am aware no other EC member state operates any special redundancy scheme for textile and clothing workers and this Government have no plans for introducing such a scheme.

Regional Aid

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his latest best estimate of the number of jobs created or sustained as a result of regional development grants or regional selective assistance in (a) 1960 to 1979 and (b) since 1979; and what is his estimate of the cost per job.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Estimates of the number of net jobs created or sustained as a result of regional development grants or regional selective assistance have not been made for the periods requested. However, it has been estimated that over the period 1960 to 1981, development controls, regional grants and subsidies, regional selective assistance and regional employment premium created some 600,000 additional manufacturing jobs in the main assisted areas, of which 450,000 jobs were estimated to be surviving in 1981.

The average Exchequer cost per job created by these policies between 1960 and 1981 has been estimated to be £40,000 in 1981 prices.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate how many jobs have been created or sustained by regional policy, regional development grants and regional selective assistance grants since November 1984; and at what cost per job.

Mr. Giles Shaw: It is too early for a proper economic evaluation to be made of the net effect on employment of regional incentives paid since November 1984. The following statistics on assistance paid or offered in Great Britain from December 1984 to December 1986 inclusive are available:

| | £ million | Employment | Cost per job (£000) |
|---|---|---|---|
| Payments of old RDGs | 789·3 | [1] | [1] |
| Payment of new RDGs | 107·4 | [3]36,973 | 2·9 |
| Offers of RSA[2] | 457·4 | [4]139,336 | 3·3 |

[1] Payments of old RDGs are not linked to employment.

[2] Industrial and training grants only.

[3] Jobs created.

[4] Jobs estimated to be created or safeguarded.

Note: The employment and cost per job figures take no account of displacement or multiplier effects; the fact that some jobs would have been created without assistance; or the extent to which jobs created or safeguarded may subsequently have been lost.

Industrial Moves

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what information he has as to the number of factory moves into the United Kingdom from abroad for each year since 1978 and as to the region in which they re-located;

(2) what information he has as to the number of industrial moves out of London, Birmingham and Manchester for each year between 1979 and 1986 and as to the region of their re-location;

(3) what information he has about the total number of factory moves within the United Kingdom for each year since 1978, and the annual number of moves which entailed re-location into Wales, Northern Ireland, Scotland and the North of England.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Financial Aid

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial assistance has been provided by his Department directly to industry in Wales since 1979; and if he will outline the categories of support provided.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Brewing and Distilling

Dr. Godman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much financial assistance was given to brewing and distilling companies under the various industry Acts in England, Wales and Scotland, respectively, in each of the past five years.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1987]: The only readily available figures relate to selective assistance for the five years to April 1986 and to regional development grants since the scheme was revised in November 1984. For projects under SIC headings 4240 and 4270 payments are as follows:

| Selective assistance | England | Scotland | Wales |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 47,370 | 424,083 | 84,450 |
| 1982-83 | 134,039 | 355,187 | 424,083 |
| 1983-84 | 121,200 | 86,250 | 16,500 |
| 1984-85 | 312,057 | 39,000 | 16,500 |
| [1]1985-86 | 214,220 | 12,136 | 6,000 |

[1] 1985-86 includes payments under the new RDG scheme. It is not possible to break down RDG payments by SIC headings for previous years, and these are not included.

THE ARTS

Cash Limit

Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Minister for the Arts whether he is proposing any change in the cash limit for the Arts Vote (class XIII, vote 10).

Mr. Luce: Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary Supplementary Estimate, the cash limit for class XIII, Vote 10 will be increased by £2,565,000 from £171,312,000 to £173,877,000. £1,400,000 of the increase is for expenditure towards the completion of the Merseyside museum main contract, and is covered by a cash limit transfer from the Department of the Environment. The sum of £1,165,000 is a provision to enable additional items to be accepted in lieu of tax, and will be charged upon the Contingency Reserve. There will be no addition to the planning total of public expenditure.

EC Budget

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report, in relation to the operation of the financial guidelines for European Economic Community budgetary discipline, the ceilings for 1986 and 1987, the figures used in arriving at these ceilings, the estimated outturn for 1986 and the forecast for 1987.

Mr. Brooke: The Council's conclusions of 4 December 1984 on budgetary discipline, which were deposited in the Library of the House on 10 December 1984, provide that net expenditure on agricultural market support should increase by not more than the rate of growth of the own resources base. The method of calculation of the financial guideline on agricultural expenditure is set out in articles 2 to 4 of the conclusions. The base period for the comparison is the average of 1984 and 1985.

Calculation of financial guideline

| | 1986 mecu | 1987 mecu |
|---|---|---|
| (a) Average expenditure in 1984-85[1] | 17,306·7 | 17,215·4 |
| (b) Rate of growth in OR base (per cent.) | 8·5 | 13·4 |
| (c) (a) × (1 + (b)) | 18,778·0 | 19,526·0 |
| (d) Expenditure excluded from guideline formula in respect of sugar and food aid[2] | 1,841·0 | 2,123·0 |
| (e) Financial guideline (EC 10) | 20,619·0 | 21,649·0 |
| (f) Plus expenditure on Spain[3] and Portugal | 567·0 | 1,312·0 |
| (g) Financial guideline (EC 12) | 21,186·0 | 22,961·0 |

[2] This expenditure is excluded from calculations of the formula but added back for calculating expenditure consistent with the guideline in the appropriate year.

[3] Following the accession of Spain and Portugal, the Council agreed to these additions.

The Ecofin Council on 7 July 1986 agreed that agricultural expenditure in 1986 could exceed the financial guideline by the > "amounts which can be justified mainly by the exceptional circumstances of the abnormally large depreciation of the dollar."

The budget as finally adopted for 1986 increased expenditure from 21,012 mecu to 22,122 mecu. Final outturn figures for 1986 are not yet available.

A budget for 1987 has not yet been adopted.

Land and Buildings Sales

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer of 27 January, Official Report, column 230, listing sales of land and buildings 1979-80 to 1989-90, he will give a breakdown of the major categories of sales in respect of the following Departments for 1985-86 (a) Department of the Environment — other environmental services, (b) Home Office, (c) Education, (d) Department of Health and Social Services—Health and Personal Social Services, (e) Scotland, (f) Wales and (g) Northern Ireland.

Mr. MacGregor: A breakdown of the major categories of sales of land and buildings for 1985-86 by function, as recorded centrally, is given below for the Departments requested:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| (a) DOE—Other environmental services | |
| Town and country planning | 259 |
| New towns | 128 |
| Other | 120 |
| Total | 506 |
| (b) Home Office (including Lord Chancellor's Department) | |
| Police | 57 |
| Other | 2 |
| Total | 59 |
| (c) Education | |
| Schools | 78 |
| Other | 20 |
| Total | 98 |
| (d) DHSS—Health and personal social services | |
| Hospital and community services | 78 |
| Other | 26 |
| Total | 104 |
| (e) Scotland | |
| Housing | 148 |
| Local environmental services | 40 |
| Other | 27 |
| Total | 215 |
| (f) Wales | |
| Housing | 53 |
| Other environmental services | 21 |
| Other | 11 |
| Total | 84 |
| (g) Northern Ireland | |
| Housing | 37 |
| Other | 4 |
| Total | 40 |

More detailed information is not held centrally.

VAT

Mrs. Peacock asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses in Batley and Spen have (a) registered for value added tax purposes and (b) deregistered for value added tax purposes in each of the last five years.

Mr. Brooke: For reasons of cost, separate statistics are not maintained for individual constituencies, but nearly all of my hon. Friend's constituency is covered by the value added tax office at Halifax. The number of VAT registrations and deregistrations dealt with by that office in each of the calendar years 1982-1986 was:

| | Registrations | Deregistrations |
|---|---|---|
| 1982 | 2,011 | 1,762 |
| 1983 | 2,143 | 1,739 |
| 1984 | 2,003 | 1,787 |
| 1985 | 2,228 | 2,257 |
| 1986 | 2,254 | 2,329 |

Customs and Excise estimates that about 25 per cent. of these businesses are located in the Batley and Spen constituency area.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will set out in tabular form (i) the estimated cost to public funds and (ii) the estimated number of properties exempted if stamp duty on house purchase were to become payable only on houses costing (a) £35,000, (b) £40,000, (c) £50,000 and (d) up to £100,000 in steps of £10,000 at a time after £50,000.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Tax Cuts

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of the report on the incentive of tax cuts commissioned by his Department from Professor C. V. Brown.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current total of unclaimed prize money from premium bond draws; and if he will give a breakdown by prize category.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are currently 67,054 outstanding premium bond prizes total value £3,973,375. The breakdown is:—

| | | £ |
|---|---|---|
| 7 | × | 5,000 |
| 158 | × | 1,000 |
| 533 | × | 500 |
| 16 | × | 250 |
| 10,248 | × | 100 |
| 43,311 | × | 50 |
| 12,781 | × | 25 |
| 67,054 | | |

Television Sets

Mr. Winnick asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his holding reply of 26 January, Official Report, column 86, when he expects to give a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Walsall, North on the number of television sets at his official residence; and who is responsible for paying the licence fee.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 4 February 1987 at column 671.

United Nations International Years

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list Her Majesty's Government's contributions to United Kingdom organisations set up in each of the past eight years in respect of designated United Nations international years.

Mr. MacGregor [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1987, c. 92]: The Treasury has made no such contributions and does not keep records in a form that readily identifies such payments by other Departments. The following list (which may not therefore be complete) shows the payments, including those for the current year, identified by our enquiries.

| United Nations designated year | United Kingdom organisation | Government Department | Contribution (£) |
|---|---|---|---|
| International Year of the Child—1979 | "Whose Child" publication | Department of Health and Social Security | 3,900 |
| | Northern Ireland Regional Committee for International Year of the Child | Northern Ireland Office | 2,890 |
| International Year of Disabled Persons—1981 | Voluntary Organisations Committee and other organisations | Department of Health and Social Security | 280,000 |
| | Third World Group of the English Committee of the International Year | Overseas Development Administration | 8,000 |
| International Youth Year (IYY)—1985 | Northern Ireland Co-ordinating Committee for IYY | Northern Ireland Office | 160,000 |
| | IYY National Co-ordinating Committee for England | Department of Education and Science | 248,850 |
| International Year of Shelter for the Homeless (IYSH) 1987 | United Kingdom Trust for IYSH | Overseas Development Administration | 64,000 |
| | | Department of the Environment | 40,000 |

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pollution

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to advise farmers on methods of preventing urban pollution; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has a long-established poicy of encouraging the farming industry to adopt practices which minimise the risk of all forms of pollution. This is achieved through farm visits, on-farm events, appropriate publicity and a wide range of literature which is continuously updated in the light of new knowledge and experience. My officials will continue to offer assistance and free advice to farmers so as to enable them to aim for high standards of environmental protection.

Mr. Onslow asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total numbers of serious farm pollution incidents reported in each of the years 1985 and 1986; and how many of these were caused by silage, cows, pigs and other causes respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information is not collected by my Department on all forms of pollution. The most recent details available of water pollution incidents are set out in the report on water pollution from farm waste 1985 issued jointly by my Department and the Water Authorities Association in July 1986. That report showed that of 3,510 farm pollution incidents in 1985, 572 were classified as serious. These figures need to be considered in the context of the grand total of over 18,000 water pollution incidents from all sources recorded for the financial year 1984/85.

A breakdown of these 572 incidents is given at table 8 of the report, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Milk Powder Exports

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will raise at the next meeting of the Agriculture Council the approval by the authorities in Bavaria to export to the Third world 5,000 tons of milk powder with radioactivity levels 10 times as high as permitted for consumption with the European Economic Community; and if, in particular, he will seek to clarify whether export rebates funded from European Economic Community finances will be repayable in respect of this export.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Wine

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the surplus of wine produced by the EEC in the most recent year for which figures are available; what were the comparable totals for each of the previous six years; and what is the current level of wine stocks held in private and public stores.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1985-86 production of wine in member states of the Community (excluding Spain and Portugal) exceeded Community utilisation by 17·2 million hectolitres.

The comparable figures for the previous six years were:

| | Million hectolitres |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 14·4 |
| 1983-84 | 39·2 |
| 1982-83 | 37·6 |
| 1981-82 | 4·1 |
| 1980-81 | 22·0 |
| 1979-80 | 38·0 |

At 31 August 1986, stocks of wine held in private storage with the benefit of Community aid stood at 14·6 mhl. There are no publicly held stocks of wine as such. Community surpluses are distilled and stored as alcohol.

Libya

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of export rebate paid by the EEC in respect of exports of food to the Republic of Libya in the year 1985.

Mr. Gummer: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Food and Wine Expenditure

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount expended by the EEC per week, expressed in terms of pounds sterling, on the storage, export and disposal, respectively, of food and wine during the most recent annual period for which figures are available; and what estimate has been made of the comparable expenditure per week in the current year.

Mr. Gummer: Community expenditure on public storage, export refunds and internal disposal of food and wine averaged £156 million per week in 1985 (the latest year for which final figures are available). The provision in the 1987 draft budget for this expenditure is £203 million per week (£187 million at the 1985 exchange rate).

Agriculture and Surplus Management

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the percentage of EEC funding devoted to agriculture and surplus management, respectively, on the same basis as the table set out in the Official Report, column 259, 21 June 1985; and if he will include in the table the estimate for 1987.

Mr. Jopling: The information requested is set out in the following table:

| Year | CAP expenditure as percentage of total EC expenditure | Food storage and disposal costs[1] as percentage of total EC expenditure |
|---|---|---|
| 1973 | 82·4 | 57·7 |
| 1974 | 75·4 | 40·4 |
| 1975 | 78·1 | 40·0 |
| 1976 | 76·6 | 49·9 |
| 1977 | 74·3 | 48·1 |
| 1978 | 79·2 | 55·3 |
| 1979 | 75·7 | 56·9 |
| 1980 | 73·3 | 55·8 |
| 1981 | 65·1 | 48·5 |
| 1982 | 64·0 | 45·8 |
| 1983 | 68·4 | 47·4 |
| 1984 | 69·4 | 50·5 |

Horses (Botulism)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what reports he has received of horses contracting botulism in Devon and Cornwall; how many horses have contracted the disease; when and how many have been destroyed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what investigations and inquiries are taking place into an outbreak of botulism amongst horses in Devon and Cornwall; what steps he is taking to identify the causes and prevent the spread of the disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry is aware of a case of suspected botulism in two horses stabled in a single premises near Bovey Tracy in south Devon. One horse has died and the other has been destroyed. Specimens from the horses have been sent to the Ministry's veterinary investigation centre at Starcross for diagnosis as have samples of fodder, which can be the source of this disease in livestock. Botulism, which is not notifiable, is not contagious and this case presents no risk to animal or public health.

Food Aid

Mr. Janner asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what factors he considered in deciding which charities to ask to co-operate in the distribution of EEC food aid.

Mr. Jopling: The main factors were the extent of which an organisation already dealt with the most needy in its day-to-day work; the breadth of its geographical coverage; and its likely capacity to deal with the organisational arrangements in co-operation with my Department.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Museums (Entrance Charges)

Mr. Raynsford asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the proposed implementation of entrance charges to the natural history museum, the geological museum and the zoological museum at Tring.

Mr. Walden: My right hon. Friend has received 14 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and a further 12 letters from members of the public.

Higher Education Expenditure

Mr. Evans asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the publication of his Department's projections of student demand 1986 to 2000, he will reconsider and increase his higher education expenditure plan in the years 1987-88 and beyond.

Mr. Walden: The plans for spending on higher education included in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1987-88 to 1989-90" (Cmnd. 56), published last month, represent significant increases on previous provision. We are continuing to consider the implications of the new projections of student demand for higher education and have sought the comments of interested bodies.

O-Level Passes

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the percentage of school leavers who secured three or more O-level passes in each of the education authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Data on leavers from maintained schools in England are given below. figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Percentage of leavers from Maintained Schools with three or more GCE O level passes at Grades A, B or C

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of school leavers in England and Wales secured three or more O-level passes in the most recent year.

Mr. Dunn: In 1984-85, 31·4 per cent. of school leavers in England had gained three or more higher grade GCE O level passes. Information for Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the estimated average annual cost to his Department of an assisted places secondary school place for the academic year 1986-87; how this compares with the annual capitation for a maintained sector secondary school place; and what are the equivalent figures for each year since the inception of the assisted places scheme.

| | Average cost of an assisted place (school year) £ | Average cost of a maintained secondary school place (financial year) £ |
|---|---|---|

Mature Students

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that mature students who wish to take advantage of further education at a college of adult education are not prevented from doing so by lack of qualifications on grounds of non-employment over the previous three years or their earnings being less than £12,000 in the previous three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Walden: The conditions referred to by the hon. Member are those determining the eligibility of mandatory award holders for the older students' allowance. They are being reviewed as part of the annual review of the grant regulations. Mature students at long term residential colleges of adult education are eligible for bursaries which are calculated on the same basis as mandatory awards and any change in the conditions for allowance for mandatory award-holders will apply equally to students at these colleges of adult education.

Sacred Heart School, Battersea

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the reply given to the hon. Member for Battersea on 15 January, Official Report, column 261, when he now plans to reply to the letter of 8 December concerning Sacred Heart school, Trott street, Battersea, London.

Mr. Dunn: I replied to the hon. Member on 4 February.

SCOTLAND

Children (Statistics)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has from the 1987 census as to the number and percentage of children in Scotland living in a household where the head of the household was unemployed.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission proposes to make any changes in the nature of the conditions attached to the granting of felling licences and plans of operation for private woodland owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission does not envisage making any such changes at present. The operation and effectiveness of the Government's broadleaves policy will, however, be reviewed towards the end of 1988, which might lead to changes being made to the conditions of the broadleaved woodland grant scheme and the Forestry Commission's other grant schemes.

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will ensure that both oak and beech trees are included in the Forestry Commission's main forest health survey for 1987.

Mr. John MacKay: The Forestry Commission intends to expand the 1987 forest health survey to include oak. Beech has already been included in the surveys and will continue to be covered.

Food Aid

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the arrangements for distributing food from European Economic Community stores to needy people in East Lothian, including the type and quantity of food, its value, the organisations involved in distribution, provisions for handling and transport, the categories and numbers of people eligible to receive the food and arrangements for advising people of their entitlement.

Mr. John MacKay: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my right hon. and learned Friend on 30 January to the Member for Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) and would add that the food is to be given to needy people whose resources have been further stretched by the recent extremely cold weather; lists of such people, and publicity about the distribution, are being organised by the charitable organisations throughout Scotland at local level.

Rates

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the difference, in both percentage and cash terms, between the rate poundage multiplied by the rateable value of domestic property in Scotland after allowing for relevant relief from rates, and the actual amount of domestic rates collected by local authorities; and if he will give a comparable estimate of the efficiency of the proposed system of community charges.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested about the actual amount collected as domestic rates is not available. Estimates of the effect of the proposed community charge have used the working assumption that the yield of the community charge will be broadly equivalent to the yield of the domestic rate.

Health Service

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of staff employed by the National Health Service in Scotland expressed as whole-time equivalents as well as actual full-time and part-time numbers.

NHS Staff and Practitioners—Scotland
All Staff March 1986

|---|---|
| Whole-time | 97,185 |
| Part-time | 53,588 |
| Whole-time equivalent | 128,786 |

Notes:

1. The table includes the number of general practitioners (see also note 3) and excludes agency nurses.
2. Figures quoted for 31 March 1986 include medical and dental staff and general practitioners as at September 1985.
3. Hospital Medical and Dental Staff: the grades limited specialist, hospital practitioners, para 94 appointment and para 107 appointment are included. Many staff in these grades hold general practice contracts and are therefore double counted (see note 1). The table excludes locums in hospital or general practice.
4. Data include all honorary medical and dental appointments. These are given a standard weighting. Honorary consultants and community grades have a national commitment of 7 sessions or 7/11 WTE. Junior grades are included as 6/10 WTE.
5. Maximum part-time contracts (ie 10 sessions) are counted as 1·0 WTE.

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers of available beds in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland for each year since 1979, expressed as totals and by speciality.

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many National Health Service hospitals have been closed in Scotland; and what is the total bed loss as a result of these closures for each year since 1979.

Mr. John MacKay: The information for complete hospital closures is set out below. It excludes partial hospital closures and hospitals where there has been a change of use, records for which are not held centrally.

Safety Glass

Mr. Moate asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress is being made with regard to the inclusion in building regulations of the increased use of safety glass in doors and windows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: Requirements for safety glass in doors and low level glazing were included in proposals which were the subject of public consultation last year. They received a general welcome and are being developed in more detail for further consultation this spring as part of the reformed Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 29 January, Official Report, column 351, if he will account for the difference between his estimates of the number employed in Scotland by the Forestry Commission on private estates and in forestry management companies, with those provided by the Forestry Commission in its publication, "Forestry Facts and Figures 1985-86".

Mr. John MacKay: The estimated figures quoted in "Forestry Facts and Figures 1985-86" have been substantially revised, following a major survey of employment in forestry and the wood-processing industries undertaken by the Forestry Commission in conjunction with the private sector. This is the first comprehensive survey of this nature to be carried out for a number of years.

Dinoseb

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the National Farmers' Union of Scotland concerning the ban on the use of Dinoseb, and the implications for the Scottish raspberry crop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John MacKay: The National Farmers' Union of Scotland has made strong representations to my right hon. and learned Friend about the potentially serious commercial consequences for Scottish raspberry production of the suspension of approval for the use of Dinoseb.

The matter will be considered by the advisory committee on pesticides at its meeting on 12 February 1987.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Roy Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the South African Government concerning detained trades unionists in the Media Workers Association of South Africa and the Paper, Wood and Allied Workers Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have made representations about all detentions without charge under the state of emergency. This was done most recently on 19 December 1986 when, on behalf of the Twelve, Her Majesty's ambassador expressed our grave concern at growing evidence of serious abuses of human rights in South Africa including detentions.

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 30 January, on how many occasions in each of the last five years Her Majesty's Government have acceded to a request that a person outside the normal categories should be regarded as having diplomatic status; if he will list the persons and countries involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 30 January, if he will now provide a breakdown by country of the 77 traffic offences by drivers of cars with diplomatic registration; in how many of these cases casualties were involved; what is Her Majesty's Government's policy toward making it a condition of the continued stay in the United Kingdom of diplomats who commit drinking and driving offences, that they should undertake to refrain from driving for the remainder of their period of accreditation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Injury was involved in nine of the cases referred to in the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 27 January.

We require the removal of any diplomat who commits a second alleged drunken driving offence, or after the first if it is aggravated by violence or injury to a third party.

If a diplomat is allowed to remain in this country after a reported first offence we do not require him to undertake to refrain from driving. Any such undertaking could not be enforced.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Contracts (Conditions)

Mr. Dover asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce legislation to prevent local authorities from imposing political conditions on contracts with businesses.

Dr. Boyson: As soon as possible this Session.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless people were housed by local authorities under the provisions of the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 in each of the past three years.

Mr. Tracey: The following table gives the totals of secure and non-secure tenancies in local authority dwellings, lettings under the national mobility scheme, and nominations to housing association and new town tenancies for homeless households in the priority need categories:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 52,200 |
| 1984-85 | 56,800 |
| 1985-86 | 66,200 |

The remaining households accepted by local authorities as homeless in these years were of course, also found some kind of accommodation.

Docklands

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate for the total yearly spending of public money in (a) London docklands and (b) Liverpool docklands.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of total spending until 1990, by each financial year, on urban development corporations; and how much of that money is attributable to reductions in rate support grant settlement.

Homes (Radon Levels)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the highest known level of radon in any dwelling in the Truro constituency; what is the calculated annual effective dose equivalent associated with such a level; what number of dwellings in the Truro constituency have been found to have radon levels above the 20 millisievert action level; what funds are available for remedial building work on such dwellings; and if he will make a statement;

(2) further to his statement on 27 January, Official Report, columns 189-90, concerning radon levels in houses, what estimates are available to his Department of the likely total costs of remedial building relating to the 20 millisievert action level for (a) owner-occupiers in Cornwall and (b) local authorities in Cornwall; and if he will make a statement;

(3) further to his statement on 27 January, Official Report, columns 189-90, concerning radon levels in houses, what are the terms under which the Government intend to offer financial assistance to owner-occupiers; what are the proposed limits of such financial assistance; when such assistance will first be available; and if he will make a statement;

(4) further to his statement on 27 January, Official Report, columns 189-90, concerning radon levels in houses, if he has any plans to offer further guidance on the advisability of a pregnant woman residing in a house where the annual dose from radon exceeds the 20 millisievert action level; what is the level of risk to a foetus or unborn child associated with such a level of exposure; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what information is available to his Department concerning any dwellings in Cornwall where advice has been given that a dwelling is unsafe for a pregnant woman due to naturally occurring radioactivity, either from radon gas or from other sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall answer these questions shortly.

Gypsies

Sir Hugh Rossi asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce his conclusions on the review of gipsy sites policy carried out at the request of the Select Committee on the Environment.

Mr. Ridley: The review has now been completed. A consultation process has been carried out and I have been assisted in analysing the responses by Professor Gerald Wibberley CBE, to whom I am most grateful, and whose report will be published. The Government have decided that there should be no amendment of the legislation at this stage, although we shall continue to keep the position under review. We have noted the wide acceptance that the duty on local authorities to provide caravan sites for gypsies should continue. No practical alternative solution to the problem has been proposed, although there is some scope for private sector provision, which will be encouraged. In all cases it is essential to do everything possible to allay local anxieties. Well-run gypsy sites, once established, seldom give cause for serious complaints.

The total number of local authority sites had reached 236 at the beginning of 1986, affording a total of some 3,850 pitches. Further local authority sites have recently opened or are expected to open. In addition to these, the available information suggests that privately owned sites are capable of accommodating 2,000 or more gypsy caravans. This shows that much progress in site provision has already been made, nationally. But there remain perhaps as many as 3,000 gypsy families for whom authorised sites are not available: so more sites are still needed. A total of £5 million has been reserved in the current financial year to provide grants to authorities developing sites.

There has been criticism of the controls available in designated areas. The Government see the powers stemming from designation as an essential adjunct to the duty to provide sites but recognise their serious consequences for gypsies. It is important that the criteria for designation should be strictly applied. In particular, I require convincing reasons for designation where an authority has made less than adequate provision. The machinery for considering applications for designation is being updated to ensure that representations are fully taken into account.

Authorities with early aspirations to designation are also asked to recognise the desirability of keeping more frequent records of gypsy numbers and movements than the national returns can provide.

Proper identification of the number of gypsies who reside in or resort to an area is vital. I am arranging for the gypsy sites policy branch in the Department to be strenghthened. An early priority will be to examine how information on gypsy numbers could be improved to provide better targets for site provision and better measures of progress in meeting them. The Department will continue to help undesignated authorities to clarify the number of sites needed and within what time scale.

Interpretation of the statutory definition of gypsies is also crucial. The local authorities have generally been able to decide who meets the statutory definition but there is increasing concern that it may extend to members of other groups. Each case has to be looked at separately on its merits. In order to qualify it must be shown that there is a nomadic habit of life, that a pattern of residing in or resorting to a particular area has been established, and that the requirement is for a pitch for a caravan. A sensible approach would be to look for evidence of regular and repeated patterns of gypsy movements, bearing in mind also their characteristic types of occupation and their need to travel to carry on their work. We shall examine the scope for further clarification of this issue in advice to local authorities.

The scope for improvements in the grant regime is limited since it already meets 100 per cent. of the cost of site provision. It has been suggested that grant should be freed from capital expenditure control but the Government cannot agree to this since it weakens control over spending priorities. I accept, however, that the Department's cost guidelines should be published and I will arrange for this to be done. They will continue to be revised annually.

It has proved difficult to find satisfactory solutions to the problem of long-distance and regional travellers. Progress continues to depend on the willingness of local authorities to find suitable locations for stopping places which can be designed to simpler standards than the settled sites needed by more locally based gypsies.

There are possibilities for accommodating gypsies in conventional housing. Information from a departmental study of the opportunities for housing suggests that, allowing for the numbers who return to a travelling life style, there are some gypsies (perhaps 75 families a year) who adapt successfully to conventional housing. The Government believe that conventional housing, on a selective and voluntary basis, can contribute usefully to meeting the needs of gypsy families and I am arranging for the departmental research to be published as a guide to local authorities.

Private sites for gypsies already make a substantial contribution: probably more than 2,000 caravans are on private sites at present. The need for gypsy sites will continue to be a material consideration when local authorities or the Secretary of State are considering planning applications or appeals. I urge gypsies to recognise the importance of getting planning permission before purchasing land and to co-operate with district councils to identify sites which might be suitable. In turn I hope that district councils will recognise, as some have already done, that their development control policies need to take account of the serious need for gypsy sites. It is not intended to widen the Exchequer grant scheme to include private sites, but there are already experiments on sale or leasing of Exchequer grant-aided sites to private ownership or management. Such initiatives will be encouraged.

Much progress has been made, but the main task remains the provision of properly serviced sites as quickly as possible. The Government believe that this is the most important contribution that can be made to resolving the difficulties that can arise between gypsies and other sections of the population.

London Boroughs (Expenditure)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of the total spending by London borough councils in each of the past five years on (a) police monitoring units (b) women's support units, (c) ethnic minority policies and (d) gay and lesbian policy initiatives.

Mr. Chope [pursuant to his reply, 5 February 1987]: I regret that published local authority accounts are not kept in such a way that precise totals under these headings can be identified.

Forests (Damage)

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will require the Forestry Commission to expend its annual forest health survey as a result of the adoption, on 17 November 1986, of EEC regulation 3528/86, in order to provide a periodic inventory of damage caused to forests by atmospheric pollution.

Mr. John MacKay: I have been asked to reply.

The aim of the Community scheme introduced by EEC regulation 3528/86 is to establish, on the basis of common methods, a periodic inventory of damage caused to forests, in particular by atmospheric pollution.

The EEC forest protection committee set up under this regulation will shortly discuss the gathering, thenature and the comparability of the inventory data. Any changes to the Foresty Commission's forest health surveys will await the outcome of these Community-level discussions.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Road Traffic Duties)

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for reports from chief constables into what proportion of police effort in terms of hours worked was devoted to road traffic duties in the last 12 months;

(2) if he will call for reports from chief constables as to what proportion of police establishment was devoted to road traffic duties in the last 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I gave the information that is available about the proportion of police resources devoted to road traffic duties in the reply which I gave to the hon.

Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 5 February. Information on the hours worked on road traffic duties is not available.

Racial Attacks

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why statistics on racial attacks are not published or made available to hon. Members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These statistics are not collated centrally. I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 4 of the Government reply to the third report from the Home Affairs Committee, Session 1985-86 (Cm. 45).

Police (Manchester)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Chief Constable of Greater Manchester; and what was discussed.

Mr. Hurd: On Thursday 29 January, with other senior officers of the Association of Chief Police Officers. Matters of mutual concern to the Home Department and the police service were discussed.

Pre-Trial Detention

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time spent on remand or custody awaiting trial during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The available information is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 2*(a)* of the latest issue, for 1985, Cmnd. 9903). Corresponding figures for 1986 are not yet available.

Anti-smoking Protest (Seizure)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the seizure of a briefcase and bag containing personal articles, food, correspondence and his bed from Stuart Holmes outside the Mirror Group offices in Holborn at about 8 pm on Wednesday 28 January, during the course of his anti-smoking protest.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that Mr. Holmes' possessions were not seized. Mr. Holmes refused to take them with him and so they were taken to Snow Hill police station for safe keeping where they are now awaiting his collection.

Teenage Gambling

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate an investigation into the extent of teenage gambling in amusement arcades and its implications.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We keep the law on amusement arcades under review. We are considering at present whether, as part of this process of review, we should initiate a study of the extent to which young people use amusement arcades and the implications of this for the young people concerned.

Life Sentences

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving life sentences in Her Majesty's prisons for a conviction of two or more murders.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 29 January 1987, c. 342]: Information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. According to the records held centrally on 31 December 1985, the latest date for which figures are available, about 120 persons serving sentences for murder in prison department establishments in England and Wales were convicted for the murder, or were recorded as suspected of the homocide, of two or more persons.

Rape

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number and location of rape crisis centres assisted from central funds in England and Wales;

(2) whether he will list the amount and type of support his Department gives to rape crisis centres; and what change there has been in support for these centres since 1985.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

The Government recognise the need of rape victims for support and counseilling. At local level various centres are funded by local authorities, as my predecessor explained in his replies to the hon. Member on 13 February 1986 at column 518 and 5 March 1986 at column 156, and nationally we continue to fund the London rape counselling and research project. Our support to the London centre is in recognition of the national promotional and publicity work it carries out in this field and the provision of advice and support to others setting up similar services elsewhere in the country. We do not hold centrally details of the other centres that exist, nor do we know the extent to which they receive financial support from public funds. Further information on centres in England and Wales can be obtained from the London centre at PO Box 69, London WC1X 9NJ.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Testing

Mr. Wainwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in the volume of testing of heavy goods vehicles by the vehicle inspectorate between the current fiscal year and 1985-86.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The volumes for the current fiscal year to date and 1985-86 are as follows:

| | 1986-87 (April-December 1986) | 1985-86 (Fiscal Year) |
|---|---|---|
| Motor vehicles | | |
| 1st and Annual Tests | 405,720 | 536,619 |
| Re-tests | 105,607 | 134,367 |
| Trailers | | |
| 1st and Annual Tests | 161,808 | 214,815 |

| | 1986-87 (April-December 1986) | 1985-86 (Fiscal Year) |
|---|---|---|
| Re-tests | 29,696 | 38,236 |
| Total | 702,831 | 924,037 |

Compared to the same period in 1985-86 there has been a slight overall reduction of 0·3 per cent. in the volumes of HGV tests conducted.

M1 (Lighting)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Transport if, in view of the completion of Stockbridge by-pass, he will now have lighting installed at junctions 36 and 37 on the M1.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Stockbridge to M1 route is not due for completion until spring 1988. Junction 37 on the M1 near Dodworth is already lit. Junction 36 is not lit but the matter will be kept under regular review to take account of any change in conditions. The roundabout serving the new junction between junctions 35 and 36 will be lit.

St. Christopher Motorists' Security Association Ltd.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the St. Christopher Motorists' Security Association Ltd; and what assessment he has made of the implication of the activities of this company for the aims of his Department's campaigns to persuade people not to drink and drive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of hon. Members and others have expressed concern about insurance schemes which provide alternative transport for those disqualified from driving following conviction for road traffic offences. I view such schemes with distaste. I do not believe that their existence undermines the law or our efforts to persuade people not to drink and drive. However readily an offender may have access to alternative transport, nothing can adequately compensate for the loss of ability to drive.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Spray)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that equipment fitted to heavy goods vehicles to reduce spray meets the current British Standard Institute's standard and that these standards are monitored.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Regulations require spray suppression equipment to meet the British Standard BS AU200. Starting later this year spray equipment will be examined as part of the annual inspection of heavy goods vehicles.

A34 (Underpasses)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the most recent estimate of the cost of providing underpasses or a combination of underpasses and overhead structures to separate local from through traffic on the A34 at Newbury.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The estimate of £30 million for a continuous underpass given in reply to my hon. Friend on 22 January 1987 was prepared in 1979. The cost of a combination of an underpass and overhead structures was estimated at about £18 million in 1982. For the purpose of comparison with the proposed western bypass some £8 million at 1982 prices would have to be added to both estimates for the improvement of the A34 south of Newbury.

No more recent estimates are available. Current costs are likely to be substantially higher.

Newbury (Western Bypass)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport on what basis compensation for those whose properties will be affected by the western bypass around Newbury will be settled.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Compensation for property acquired under compulsory powers would be assessed in accordance with the statutory compensation code. Compensation would be broadly on the basis of open market value at the date of entry disregarding any depreciation caused as a result of the new road. Part 1 of the Land Compensation Act 1973 provides for compensation for depreciation in value of property where no land is taken.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest estimates for building a western bypass round Newbury; and how long he expects such a construction to take.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The current estimate of the cost of the western bypass is about £29 million. Timing of construction would depend on the satisfactory completion of the statutory procedures. It is unlikely to start before 1990 at the earliest. The work would take about two years to complete.

Road Construction Costs

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of constructing a length of single carriageway 1 mile long.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information in the form requested was last published in March 1985 when the average cost of constructing a length of single carriageway road 1 mile long was calculated to be about £1 million.

Construction costs of roads vary substantially depending on factors such as location and the need for structures. In view of this, the Department no longer prepares information in the form of average construction cost per mile.

Nuclear Fuel Flasks

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the specific types of accident in relation to which the regulations governing fuel flasks in transit outside nuclear sites provide for emergency plans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: In accordance with the guidance in the IAEA Advisory Material for the Application of the IAEA Transport Regulations (Safety Series 37), (a copy is held in the Library) emergency plans are designed to cover a broad range of accidents, rather than specific scenarios.

Since irradiated fuel transport flasks are designed to withstand severe accidents, the risks arising from such accidents are likely to be low.

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Secretary of State for Transport what records are made of any accidents, incidents or untoward occurrences involving a flask containing spent nuclear fuel outside nuclear sites; what arrangements are in force for Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate to be notified of any such accidents; what are the reporting criteria for such notifications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Accidents and incidents occurring outside nuclear sites are not matters for Her Majesty's nuclear installations inspectorate. The Department keeps records of accidents and incidents that are statutorily reportable under the criteria laid down in the following regulations.

Road—The Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) (Great Britain) Regulations 1974 and Amendment Regulations 1985 (SI 1974 No. 1735 and 1985 No. 1729).

The Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) (Northern Ireland) 1983 and Amendment Regulations 1986 (SR 1983 No. 344 and 1986 No. 61).

Rail — Notice of Accidents Order 1986 (SI 1986 No. 2187) and Reporting of Injuries Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (SI 1985 No. 2223).

Sea—Merchant Shipping (Safety Officials and Reporting of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences) Regulations 1982 (SI 1982 No. 876).

Kingston Bagpuize Bypass

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the draft line orders and side route orders in respect of the bypass at Kingston Bagpuize in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I hope that it will be possible to publish the draft orders this summer.

M6 (Drainage)

Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department is considering any improvements to the drainage system of the M6 elevated section at Birmingham.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The drainage system is cleaned and repaired as a matter of routine maintenance.

M3-M27 Link

Mr. Ward asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the state of progress of the motorway link between the M3 and M27.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friends are considering the inspector's report following the 1985 inquiry and representations received subsequently. I hope that it will be possible to make an announcement in the spring.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drugs

Mr. MacKenzie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent on research programmes on drug-taking in the last calendar year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: During 1985, £234,000 was spent in England and Wales on centrally-funded research into the health and social services aspects of drug misuse. This includes £141,000 spent on researching and evaluating a national campaign of education and information.

I understand that the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, is also funding research on addictions.

NHS (Hospitals)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service hospitals have been opened in England; and what has been the bed gain as a result of these openings, for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally relates to specific building schemes rather than to whole hospitals. The beds provided in schemes costing over £1 million completed in each year since 1979 are as follows:

| Year | Schemes | Beds |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 3 | 1,521 |
| 1980 | 8 | 2,198 |
| 1981 | 10 | 2,146 |
| 1982 | 16 | 2,553 |
| 1983 | 47 | 4,334 |
| 1984 | 45 | 2,712 |
| 1985 | 49 | 1,696 |
| 1986 | 39 | 3,310 |

The numbers of beds replaced by these new facilities is not readily available, but insomuch as they provide a better care environment for patients and more productive and effective working conditions for staff there is a net gain to the National Health Service.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 12 January, Official Report, column 105 when he plans to make his announcement on the appointment of members of the proposed Health Education Authority.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly.

Diabetics

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is able to announce his conclusions into the review of present policy on the availability of free disposable needles and syringes in the National Health Service to diabetics.

Mrs. Currie: This is still under review.

Perinatal Mortality

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the perinatal mortality rate for each Thames region and for East Anglia for each year from 1983 to the latest available figure.

Number of perinatal deaths (stillbirths and deaths in first week of life) and rate per 1,000 total live and stillbirths for East Anglian and Thames Regional Health Authorities (RHA), 1983 to 1985

| | 1983 | | 1984 | | 1985 | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Area of usual residence | Number | Rate | Number | Rate | Number | Rate |
| East Anglian RHA | 215 | 9·3 | 213 | 8·9 | 241 | 9·8 |
| North West Thames RHA | 395 | 8·6 | 420 | 9·0 | 435 | 9·1 |
| North East Thames RHA | 496 | 9·9 | 499 | 9·7 | 488 | 9·3 |
| South East Thames RHA | 451 | 10·2 | 473 | 10·5 | 450 | 9·5 |
| South West Thames RHA | 327 | 9·4 | 302 | 8·6 | 340 | 9·3 |

Neonatal Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services which regional health authorities have instituted share-care to provide intensive care for neonates; and how many schemes exist in each region.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not held centrally showing which regions have instituted "share-care" to provide intensive care for neonates.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to provide financial incentives for nurses willing to train and to acquire the skills needed to care for the distressed new unborn.

Mr. Newton: I have asked regional health authorities what steps they are taking to overcome the problem of staff shortages in the specialty of neonatal care.

Obstetric Care

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) which regions are unable to provide full emergency obstetric cover outside hospital; and which districts are unable to provide such cover;

(2) which regions are able to provide for all commitments to delivery suites in their hospitals when an obstetrician is required;

(3) which regions can provide in all their districts emergency anaesthetic and paediatric care;

(4) which regions have now set up neonatal intensive care units in line with the recommendations of the Social Services Committee in 1980 and 1984.

Mrs. Currie: The following information was provided by Regional Health Authorities in reply to a questionnaire issued by the Department in October 1985.

(a) Regions and districts which were unable to provide full emergency obstetric care outside hospital—

| Region | District |
|---|---|
| Yorkshire | Scarborough |
| East Anglian | Peterborough |
| North East Thames | City and HackneyNorth East SussexBasildon and Thurrock |
| South West Thames | North West Surrey |
| South Western | North DevonSomersetTorbay |
| West Midlands | Bromsgrove and Redditch |
| Mersey | Southport and Formby |

(b) Regions able to provide for all commitments to delivery suites in their hospitals when an obstetrician was requested—

Trent

(c) Regions able to provide in all their districts emergency anaesthetic and paediatric care—

Trent, East Anglian, Oxford and Mersey

(d) Regions which have set up neonatal intensive care units in line with the recommendations of the Select Committee in 1980 and 1984—

This information is not readily available. Regional Health Authorities are currently developing strategies for the provision of neonatal intensive care in line with the principles enunciated by the Maternity Service Advisory Committee.

Progress in implementing the recommendations of the Maternity Services Advisory Committee will continue to be monitored.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many neonatal nurses have left the National Health Service for work in the private sector since 1979.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information of this nature is not collected centrally.

Perinatal Pathology Departments

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in which regions perinatal pathology departments have been set up, distinct from paediatric pathology.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that perinatal pathology departments have been set up in the North West Thames, West Midlands and North Western regions.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the proportion of unemployment benefit to average male wages in 1979 and in 1986 or the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Member to Table 5.3 in the "Abstract of Statistics for Index of Retail Prices, Average Earnings, Social Security Benefits and Contributions" a copy of which is in the Library.

Heart Disease

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the latest figures for the total costs of coronary heart disease to the community broken down into medical, social and economic categories.

Mrs. Currie: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the voluntary organisations to which he makes an annual contribution.

Mr. Lyell: The voluntary organisations listed received grant aid from the Department in 1985-86. Grants to meet the central administrative costs of national voluntary organisations are normally awarded for a period of up to three years and are only renewed following a careful re-appraisal of the organisations' objectives. Grants towards project work are made for a fixed term and are not normally renewable.

Severe Weather Payments

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for cold weather payments have been received by each local office of his Department in respect of the week commencing 19 January.

Mr. Major: Statistics on the number of exceptionally cold weather claims processed are being maintained but these have not yet been collated. Details will be provided in due course.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people were receiving supplementary benefit in each of the categories eligible, subject to the £500 capital limit, for cold weather payments (a) in Great Britain and (b) from each of the Derby social security offices, at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. Major: It is estimated that in Great Britain there are about 1 million pensioners, 200,000 claimants with sick and disabled members of the family and 175,000 families with a child under 2 in the groups eligible to claim exceptionally cold weather payments. Information in respect of individual offices is not available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the cancer units for treatment of (i) in-patients and (ii) out-patients that have closed since 1979, giving the number of beds involved in each case and the date of closure; and if he will list those cancer units whose closure is now being sought or has been approved but not yet implemented.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 12 January 1987, c. 123]: The planning of cancer treatment services is a matter for district and regional health authorities.

The records we keep centrally indicate facilities, by predominant specialty only, where closure (or change of use) has been approved; where closure (or change of use) is presently subject to public consultation; or where public consultation has been completed but no decision has yet been reached. They do not indicate dates on which closures are implemented. Since 1979 our records indicate that two facilities providing cancer treatment services have been approved for closure: (i) an out-patient clinic in Liverpool, Mersey region (January 1980), where the service was relocated with the radiotherapy and nuclear medicine department at the Royal Liverpool hospital; (ii) 20 oncology beds at St. Stephen's hospital in the then Victoria health authority, North West Thames region (September 1984), reprovided at the Westminster hospital as part of a new integrated radiotherapy and oncology unit.

The closures of two further facilities are currently under consideration: 28 beds at St. Williams hospital, Medway health authority, and 24 beds at Pembury hospital, Tunbridge Wells health authority—both in South East Thames region. The region proposes a new replacement in-patient and hostel unit at Maidstone hospital with no loss of service, whilst retaining all out-patient services at both Medway and Tunbridge Wells.

National Health Service (Health Hazards)

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to ensure the adequate organisation and funding of an occupational health and safety service for the National Health Service which complies with the International Labour Organisation Convention 161.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 February 1987, c. 549]: The Government are awaiting the advice of the Health and Safety Commission on whether to ratify the Convention. Meanwhile I am advised that current guidance to health authorities is broadly in line with Recommendation 171 which supplements International Labour Organisation Convention 161.

Irradiated Food

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the current level of research into the effects of the irradiation of food; if he has any plans to enhance the level of public awareness on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 2 February 1987, c. 551]: The Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods considered comments receive on its report at a December meeting. The Committee is now preparing its advice which will be put to Health and Agriculture Ministers. Ministers will then be in a position to give full consideration to the report. The important matters raised by the hon. Member will be looked at in greater detail at that time.

DEFENCE

United States

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what consultations Her Majesty's Government have had with the United States Government about President Reagan's new doctrine called competitive strategies, as announced to the United States Congress by Mr. Caspar Weinberger on 9 January;

(2) if he has made an assessment of the impact upon Her Majesty's Government's defence policy of President Reagan's competitive strategy announced by the United States Secretary of State for Defence on 9 January.

Mr. Stanley: The references to competitive strategies contained in the United States Defence Secretary's report to Congress for FY88/FY89 are not new. Her Majesty's Government maintain close contact with the United States Government in many areas of defence policy, but there have been no specific consultation on or assessments of the doctrine of competitive strategies.

Hydrographic Surveys

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to update hydrographic surveys of estuaries in the United Kingdom and in particular the Severn estuary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The requirements for hydrographic surveys around the United Kingdom are discussed each year between my Department and the Department of Transport, and a programme of surveys is prepared. In 1987 it is planned to carry out coastal and inshore surveys in the following estuarine areas:

Outer Moray Firth.
Approaches to Yarmouth and Lowestoft.
Outer Thames Estuary (in the approaches to Harwich, Felixstowe and the Port of London to seaward of Port of London Authority's limits).
Solent and Spithead (to seaward of Southampton's port limits).
Approaches to Plymouth Sound and River Yealm.
Outer Bristol Channel between Ilfracombe and the Gower Peninsula (the approaches to Porthcawl and Port Talbot and covering the outer approaches to Avonmouth and other South Wales ports).
Liverpool Bay (between Rhyl, Anglesey and the Isle of Man—the outer approaches to the Ribble, Mersey and Dee).

So far as the Severn estuary in particular is concerned, surveys of the main channel between Avonmouth and Steep Holm, off Weston-super-Mare, are carried out by the Port of Bristol Authority. The estuary between Avonmouth and Sharpness lies within the limits of the Gloucester harbour trustees.

RAF North Luffenham

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the future of Royal Air Force North Luffenham.

Mr. Freeman: The study into the future of RAF North Luffenham has been completed and is currently being considered within the Ministry of Defence. The recent announcement of the move of the RAF AMTC from North Luffenham to RAF Mount Batten is unrelated to and has no bearing on the consideration being given to this study. I will advise the hon. Member of the outcome as soon as a decision has been taken.

Officers (Pensions)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that officers, who carry out identical duties for identical periods but who retire at different periods, do not receive substantially different levels of pension and gratuity.

Mr. Freeman: Officers' pensions and gratuities are governed by the provisions of the armed forces pension scheme which are or were current at the time of their retirement, and by principles applied to public service occupational schemes generally. The provisions of the armed forces scheme have been improved on a number of occasions and such improvements are not, as a matter of principle, applied retrospectively to those who have already retired. Overall the costs of doing so would be prohibitive.

Pensions awarded are maintained, normally from age 55, at their original purchasing power by index-linking to reflect changes in the retail price index. However, changes in rates of pay (from which pensions are calculated) can in any period be greater or less than movements in the retail price index. Consequently pensions already in issue can, after indexation, differ in level from new awards made subsequently.

There are no plans to change the application of the basic principle on either non-retrospection or index-linking.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has that anomalies in the calculation of pensions and retirement gratuities are deterring officers from remaining in the services.

Mr. Freeman: There is no available evidence to suggest that this is so.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Officers Pension Society about anomalies in the calculations of pensions and retirement gratuities; and what response he has made.

Mr. Freeman: The Officers Pension Society has been campaigning on the issue of differing entitlements over many years. Our response has been to point out that pension differences result substantially from changes in entitlement and the principle, normal to the operation of public service occupational pension schemes, which rules out retrospective application of improvements to those who have already retired. However a particular point of concern to the Officers Pension Society in recent years has been the effect on pensions when recommended pay awards are staged or deferred. The Government's position on this point was made clear by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her written answer on 13 April 1984 at column 383.

COMPEX Study

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the results of the COMPEX study on the royal dockyards and private shipyards.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. As I said in this week's Navy debate at column 778, it will be at least another year before final results are analysed, but some comparison of the frigate refits should be available shortly.

Project Definition

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to how he interprets project definition for the purpose of the arrangements that exist between the Public Accounts Committee and his Department for the notification of defence projects likely to incur substantial expenditure.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the Answer of 2 February, if he will define the term full development or production in relation to the stage at which projects are notified to the Committee of Public Accounts.

Mr. Younger: Project definition, which immediately precedes full development, is the stage at which the technical uncertainties involved in meeting a staff requirement are clarified, and costs and time scales for possible development and production are established. Full development is the programme of design engineering leading to the acceptance of an equipment into service. Production is the manufacturing of new equipment in the required numbers.

Projects are deemed to enter project definition, full development or production stages when formal approval has been given to the proposed expenditure for that stage.

HMS Saxon and HMS Sceptre

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what damage repairs to HMS Saxon and HMS Sceptre have been carried out in the last 18 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There is no HMS Saxon. HMS Sceptre has been undergoing a major refit at Devonport dockyard since 29 July 1985. No damage repairs have been carried out on her.

Submarine Service

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers and men have sought early retirement from the submarine service and from the Royal Navy as a whole for each of the last five years expressed also as a percentage of the total number of serving men.

Mr. Freeman: The number applying for early retirement in the last five years are as follows:

Submariners

| | Officers | | Ratings | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Number | Percentage | Number | Percentage |
| 1982 | 8 | 1·3 | 143 | 2·2 |
| 1983 | 13 | 2·0 | 163 | 2·5 |
| 1984 | 20 | 2·9 | 280 | 4·3 |
| 1985 | 30 | 4·5 | 290 | 4·4 |
| 1986 | 22 | 3·3 | 303 | 4·6 |

Total Royal Navy

| | Officers | | Ratings | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Number | Percentage | Number | Percentage |
| 1982 | 183 | 2·1 | 1,669 | 3·5 |
| 1983 | 181 | 2·1 | 2,340 | 4·9 |
| 1984 | 206 | 2·5 | 2,955 | 6·3 |
| 1985 | 212 | 2·5 | 2,982 | 6·5 |
| 1986 | 227 | 2·7 | 2,566 | 5·9 |

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence what change there has been in the number of officers and men requesting transfer from the submarine service to other naval duties in the last five years.

Mr. Freeman: Requests by officers to transfer to non-submarine duties are rare and figures are not recorded. The numbers of ratings who requested transfer to non-submarine duties are as follows:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| [1]1981 | 97 |
| 1983 | 117 |
| 1984 | 104 |
| 1985 | 88 |
| 1986 | 186 |

MV Syneta

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if any Royal Naval vessel was close to the MV Syneta when it sank near Iceland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Sir Frank Cooper

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates in 1986 of all his communications with Sir Frank Cooper.

Mr. Younger: I met Sir Frank Cooper socially on a number of occasions during 1986 but I did not communicate with him formally at any time.

Sir Ronald Mason

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the dates in 1986 of all his communications with Sir Ronald Mason.

Mr. Younger: I met Sir Ronald Mason socially on a number of occasions during 1986 but I did not communicate with him formally at any time.

Vessel Damage (Unauthorised Information)

Mr. Hancock asked the Secretary of State for Defence if disciplinary action is currently being considered against any Royal Navy personnel or Ministry of Defence employees over the unauthorised release of information regarding recent naval operations involving damage sustained by one of Her Majesty's ships in Icelandic territorial waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: I will answer shortly.

Hoo Marshes

Dame Peggy Fenner asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the substance being carried in large quantities on ships from Rotterdam and being deposited on his Department's land at Hoo Marshes.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence land at Hoo Marshes is no longer used by my Department but is leased to Medway (Chatham) Docks Ltd for a term of 999 years.

Projects (National Security)

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there is any category of project which Her Majesty's Government regard as so sensitive in terms of national security that it declines to divulge information about it to the Chairman of the Committee of Public Accounts even if it otherwise qualifies in terms of the expenditure limits set out in the agreement with the Committee; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 2 February, if he will give the date of the most recent occasion on which his Department notified the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee about expenditure in excess of £10 million up to the end of project definition on any project which could not be notified to the full Committee on grounds of national security.

Mr. Younger: The memorandum appended to the Ninth Report of the PAC (session 1981-82) drew attention to circumstances that might arise where in the national interest information should not be reported to Parliament or even disclosed to the PAC. The arrangements which apply in these circumstances were set out in my hon. Friend's reply on 2 February. My understanding is that where, in the interests of national security, large projects are excluded from the annual confidential defence project statement, the Comptroller and Auditor General would expect to consult the Chairman of the PAC in any circumstances which would normally justify his reporting to Parliament.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES

VOLUME 109

SESSION 1986-87

26th January—6th February 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
